MADRAS UNIVERSITY.—The list of successful candidates for the different degrees has appeared. Out of one hundred and thirty candidates who appeared for the degree of B.A., sixty-five passed, thirty-three in the second class, and thirty-two in the third. Nine presented themselves for the degree of B.L., six of whom were successful. Three are placed in the second class, and three in the third. There was only one candidate for the degree of M.A., and he sailed from Bombay. He passed the examination. The Presidency College takes the lead with twenty-three successful candidates, and Combarum Provincial College comes next with fourteen. Doveton College sent two candidates, and both were successful. The list is a very fair one upon the whole.—Madras Mail.

THE AGITATOR AT TRICHINOPOLY.—The following is from the local Guardian:—We learn that a Mussulman named Syed Hamed arrived at Trichinopoly about three months ago, having previously made a tour through Arcot, Vellore, Arnes, Gingee, Cuddalore, Pondicherry, Chellumbrum, Nagore and other places where Wahabees are known to reside. He appeared here in the guise of a native doctor or hakeem, and gave out that he was thoroughly versed in the art of alchemy and could teach people how to make gold. He occupied a large upstairs house in the Fort, belonging to a resident at Nagore, and very soon began to hold secret meetings of the townspeople, and he also busily ingratiated himself with some of the Mussulman native officers and sepoy of the 38th Regiment, who were incautious enough to allow themselves to become on friendly terms with him, and also to attend feasts given by Syed Hamed in his house on more than one occasion. The District Magistrate, Mr. Whiteside, and the Superintendent of Police, Captain Hodges, hearing of this man's conduct, observed his actions narrowly and quietly for some little time, and gradually obtained information of such a character as to show that decided steps were called for; they accordingly, about midday on Monday, the 4th instant, without previous notice, drove together to Syed Hamed's house and suddenly entered and searched it. A desk containing manuscript papers of considerable importance was there discovered in Syed Hamed's room, and Syed Hamed did not deny that they had been written under his instructions. The contents of these papers allowed no doubt as to the daring and mischievous intentions of Syed Hamed, who was at once arrested, and has since been deported from the district to a secure place of confinement under the special law providing for the disposal of such cases. This prompt action of the magistrate and the police authorities is very satisfactory indeed, inasmuch as there is good reason to believe that, had it not been for the summary arrest of Syed Hamed, opportunity would have been taken by the more turbulent portion of this town to get up a disturbance of some kind during the closing days of the Mohurram feast now in progress. As matters, however, stand now, we are happy to believe that no breach of the peace need be expected, every precaution having been taken by the authorities to ensure the maintenance of order.

THE MOHURRUM AT MYSORE. — Our Mysore correspondent informs us that the Mohurrum passed off very quietly in that city. The Head Inspector of Police, Mr. Vardan, and his deputy, Gholain Dustagheer Sahib, patrolled the different Mohalahs at all hours of the day and night, and were unceasingly on the watch, to keep disturbances from breaking out. On the night of March 9, however, a collision between the Mussulmans and Hindus was anticipated, and Colonel Renton, the town magistrate, accordingly took the precaution of securing the assistance of a squadron of the Mysore Silladars, fifty strong, who were directed to act with the police in the preservation of order. Everything went off smoothly. Our correspondent says that Colonel Renton wisely prohibited Hindus from disguising themselves as tigers, and even Mohamedans were not allowed to do so, without previously obtaining passes from the police. This wonderfully simplified matters, and made it comparatively easy to prevent disturbances."—Bangalore Herald.

AFFAIRS IN SINDH.—We understand that the Commissioner in Sindh has summoned the Las Belya chiefs, Noor Deen and Ali Khan, to the Jacobabad meeting. The first is brother-in-law of the imprisoned Jam, the latter having married a sister of the former and Ali Khan is the head of the Jamote tribe. We believe Sir W. Merewether's intention is to adopt such conciliatory measures as will tend to ensure the future peace of the country. The interview, if it takes place, will, we hope, lead to the release of the unfortunate Jam, but there are many who say that the two chiefs will refuse to obey the Commissioner's summons, on the ground that the Jam himself has been imprisoned whilst a guest of the British. This idea is very prevalent, and is not confined to the Jam's subjects. It is a great pity that such mystery has been observed in the Jam's affair. If he was detected intriguing whilst under our protection, a voluntary act on his part, the circumstances which led to his imprisonment should have at once been made public by proclamation. It has not been done, and there appears to be some truth in the general opinion that we have broken faith with a man who gave himself up, certainly not under the idea that he would be confined and sent to a distant fortress. We cannot but somewhat believe in the Jam's guilt, but what is it, and why this mystery?—Our Paper.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS. NEW CIVIL LEAVE CODE.

Calcutta, March 14.—In supersession of existing rules regarding leave of absence from duty to public servants in the civil department, the Governor general in Council is pleased to direct the publication of the Civil Leave Code.

As regards covenanted civil servants, no change is made, except that it is expressly laid down that no officer can have "ordinary" furlough if he have rendered less than three years' service; a restriction which, in the Rules of 1868, was only implied.

As regards uncovenanted servants, the Code includes the recent orders of the Secretary of State, published in the Gazette of India of Feb. 17 last, but the following changes have been made in the original form of the rules:—

Change.

IV. The qualification is three years' service, and not three years' "active" service.

VIII. (b.) The restriction in the last sentence is omitted.

IX. Special leave without allowances is not reckoned as leave taken, in calculating the amount of furlough due.

An officer is entitled to allowances during his second special leave for any period by which his first may have fallen short of six months.

XXI. The additional week at the end of furlough is not admitted.

XXII. Leave on medical certificate without allowances is not reckoned as furlough taken.

One or two of the subsidiary rules are slightly altered, e.g., 24, 9; and a few rules regarding procedure, which were not in the first Code, have been inserted, and a proviso has been added in section 6 (b).

The new rules for the Uncovenanted Service shall be deemed to have come into effect on the 3rd Jan., 1871, being the day on which the despatch of the Secretary of State, No. 451, dated 6th Dec., 1871, was received.

Officers who have taken leave since the 3rd Jan., 1871, may apply for any additional allowances to which, by the rules now published under the orders of the Secretary of State, they may be entitled. But no reductions are to be made in the allowances of officers now on leave, in consequence of the leave allowances being calculated on "average salary," instead of on pay.

THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF'S PRIZE.

Calcutta, March 14.—The Commander-in-Chief has much pleasure in publishing to the Army the result of the competition in shooting for 1871-72 in connection with his Excellency's prizes.

There were in all 3,100 competitors. Of these, 238 belonged to the cavalry and royal horse artillery, and 2,862 to the royal artillery and British infantry.

Lord Napier of Magdala is highly satisfied with the result, as evincing by the larger number of competitors and better shooting, increasing interest amongst the British troops in rifle shooting.

His Excellency has also been gratified to perceive that the shooting of the Army up to the month of January shows an improvement over last year of 14 points.

His Excellency congratulates the 105th Madras L.I. on having won the Commander-in-Chief's Prize Cup; Lance Corporal Kidd, 109th regiment, on being the best shot of all who competed, and winning the first money prize of Rs. 200; Private Devison, 11th Prince Albert's own hussars, on being the best shot on horseback and on foot, of the royal horse artillery and cavalry, and the winner of the Commander-in-Chief's prize sword; and Lance Corporal McMath, who made the highest score of the twenty selected men of the 105th L.I., on being the winner of the Commander-in-Chief's gold watch.

GENERAL BOURCHIER'S FAREWELL TO HIS FORCE.

The following Field Force Order has been issued by Brigadier general Bouchier, C.B., commanding Cachar Column, Loshai Expeditionary Force, dated Cachar, March 11, 1872:—

1. On the breaking up of the Cachar Column Loshai Expeditionary Force, the brigadier general commanding feels much pride in the reflection that he has received the congratulations of the late Viceroy, of the Governments of India and Bengal, and of H.E. the C. in C., on its services.

2. The brigadier general does not presume to offer an opinion as to whether the success of the column has equalled the expectation of Government; but he has unfeigned pleasure in recording his belief that its discipline, energy, and devotion to the service could not have been surpassed.

3. From the beginning of November, when the troops were first put in motion, to the present time, every man has been employed on hard work, cheerfully performed often under the most trying circumstances of heat and frost, always bivouacking on the mountain-side in rude huts of grass or leaves, officers and men sharing the same accommodation, marching day by day over precipitous mountains, rising at one time to 6,600 feet, having made a road fit for elephants from Lakkipore to Chipowee, a distance of 103 miles. The spirit of the troops never flagged, and when they met the enemy, they drove them from their stockades and strongholds, until they were glad to sue for mercy.

4. The history of the expedition has been from first to last sheer hard work.

5. On the advanced wings of the 22nd regiment P.N.I. under Col. Stafford, of the 42nd regiment A.L.I. under Col. Battray, C.S.I., and of the 44th regiment N.I. under Lieut. col. Nathall, the hardest work has fallen. Each has shared in the actual fighting, the 44th more than either of the other corps; but to the officers in the rear most important duties were assigned in protecting a line of communication extending over 110 miles from Tipai Mukh to Vonole's stronghold of Champoi, and watching through spies the attitude of the inhabitants of the neighbouring villages, conveying provisions and the post, and keeping the road constantly patrolled. The frontier police did equally good service with the troops in this way. Each field officer in the rear had assigned to him a certain number of posts, for which he was responsible; and to their vigilance may be attributed the fact that our communications have not for a day been interrupted.

6. Young officers may especially feel glad at having had such an opportunity of gaining experience in mountain warfare.

7. Before taking leave of the column, the Brigadier-general would tender his heartfelt thanks to the officers, civil and military, non-commissioned officers, and soldiers who for so many weeks have co-operated with him, and to whom, he feels, he is entirely indebted for any success which may have attended the operations. He will have much pleasure in bringing their conduct and that of the officers of the several departments, civil and military, with the column, to the notice of H.E. the C. in C. for submission to the Government of India.

By order, H. THOMPSON, Captain, Brigade-major.

SUBORDINATE EXECUTIVE SERVICE.

RESOLUTION.

March 18.—In making recent appointments to the Subordinate Executive Service of officers who have passed the tests now prescribed, the Lieut. governor has warned them that he will expect them to maintain active habits, and to keep up the habit of riding, so as to be capable of moving about rapidly in the execution of their duty.

2. The Lieut. governor now directs that after communication with the district magistrates, each divisional Commissioner shall submit to Government a roll of the officers of the Uncovenanted Subordinate Executive Service at present employed in his division, showing which of them are of active habits, can ride or walk long distances about the country, and are fit for active executive work; and which can only travel by palkee, or are otherwise unfit for active work. It should be impressed upon all officers of the Subordinate Executive Service, especially the younger officers, that their promotion, and their employment in important posts, will much depend on their qualifications for active duty. Officers now acting as Deputy Magistrates and Deputy Collectors, or as Extra Assistant Commissioners, must be given to understand that they will not be confirmed in their appointments unless they are found to possess the qualifications prescribed for those now entering the service. These officers, as well as all others of the Subordinate Executive Service who are capable of learning, should be encouraged to learn to ride and to survey, and to pass an examination in those subjects.

Ordered, that a copy of the Resolution be forwarded to all Commissioners of Divisions, and Magistrates and Deputy Commissioners of Districts.

Ordered, also, that this Resolution be published in the Calcutta Gazette for the information of all concerned.

DEPARTMENTAL EXAMINATIONS IN THE BENGAL CIVIL SERVICE.

March 19.—The Lieut. governor has been pleased to pass the following orders connected with the departmental examinations of junior members of the Covenanted Civil Service, the Subordinate Executive Service, the Non-Regulation Commission, Police, &c. :—

1. Natives of Hindustan serving in Behar and Hazareebaugh shall not be required to pass in Bengali, but it will be optional with them to do so, and those who do pass will be eligible for service and promotion in Bengal as well as in Behar.

2. Officers other than natives of Hindustan will not be required to pass in Hindustani, but may do so, and will then be eligible for service and promotion in Behar and Hazareebaugh (except Palamow), as well as in Bengal.

3. These exemptions are not applicable to officers in the police, who must pass in both Bengali and Hindustani as now, unless specially exempted.

4. As to Covenanted Civil Servants the present rule remains in force, that is, that they must pass in both the languages, and, unless they so pass, will have no claims to the full powers of a magistrate, and to the full pay of Rs. 500, although the higher powers may be conferred on them if the public service requires it.

5. These relaxations of the existing rules are experimentally introduced, and it may be found necessary to revert to the present requirements that all officers should qualify in both the vernacular languages.

6. It should be understood that officers of all departments who have hitherto been required to pass the examinations are still required to pass them as modified by these rules.

7. The next examination will be held about the end of May, and the exact date will be notified hereafter.

The following rules, which have been laid down for the next examination, are published for general information :—

LANGUAGE EXAMINATION.

(1.) For Covenanted and other officers alike one paper shall be prepared in each of the test languages, the first half of which shall be in an easier style than the rest. Of the total number of marks assigned to the whole paper, 50 shall be allotted to the first portion, and 50 to the second. To pass for the Lower Standard, 25 marks at least in the first part must be obtained, and to pass for the Higher Standard, 50 on the whole, of which 25 must be obtained in the second part.

(2.) Covenanted Civil Servants will be required to pass by the Lower Standard in languages only.

EXAMINATION IN LAW.

(3.) All other officers will be required to pass for the Lower Standard—

I. In a paper confined to Criminal Codes, which shall be prepared specially for this standard, and for which the use of books will be allowed;

II. In part of the general paper of Local Laws, &c., as described below, which is to be answered without books.

(4.) All examinees will be required to pass for the Higher Standard in two papers containing questions on Local Laws, Regulations, and Rules (Revenue and Criminal).

One of these papers, which is to be answered without the use of books, will be so arranged as to serve as a test for officers by both standards; it will contain a certain number of questions, to the first half of which 100 marks will be assigned, and to the last half 120; 50 marks obtained in the first half of the questions will pass officers for the Lower Standard, and a total of 120 will pass for the Higher Standard, provided that at least 60 of those 120 be obtained in the latter half of the questions.

The other paper, for which the use of books will be allowed, will be confined to the examination for the Higher Standard.

Local Laws, Regulations, and Rules, in which the Examination will be without the Aid of Books.

Regulations I., VIII., and XLVIII. of 1793, and XII. of 1817.

In which the Examination will be with the Aid of Books.

All the Acts of Parliament‡ relating to India, Acts of the Government of India, Bengal Regulations, and Bengal Acts; Circulars of Bengal Government, the High Court, and the Board of Revenue, of the Inspectors general of Police, Jails, and Registration.

* As to the laws which are marked thus (*) a knowledge of the principles and general scheme of the law will be sufficient. Acquaintance with the executive details and other particulars will not be required.

† As the existing Municipal Acts are about to be reconsidered, no questions will be set on Municipal Acts at the next examination.

‡ As it is doubtful whether the Acts of Parliament are now readily accessible to officers in the Mofussil, no questions will be set on them before the second examination of 1872, by which time officers can provide themselves with a collection of those Acts.

NURSERY RHYMES FOR THE FINANCE COMMITTEE.

HEY DIDDLE DIDDLE!

Here is a riddle,
Guess it if you can;
The truth, I suppose,
Is plain as the nose
On the face of any man.

If in old times they marched and fought
For England, home, and beauty,
Why, ENGLAND now
EXPECTS a man
To do only GENERAL DUTY!

Hey diddle diddle!
You've heard the riddle,
The answer does run so;
The Staff Corps plan
Is an empty sham,
And men have no work to do.

CHARTERED BANK OF INDIA, AUSTRALIA, AND CHINA.

The eighteenth ordinary general meeting of the shareholders was held on Wednesday, at the London Tavern; the chair was occupied by Mr. Andrew Cassels. The report of the directors was taken as read.

The Chairman, in moving the adoption of the report and accounts, said he heartily wished that on this, the first occasion of his having the honour to address them as chairman, it had been his good fortune to be able to lay before them a more satisfactory statement of the result of the bank's working to the 31st December last. It must be confessed that, during the past half-year, business had gone crossly with the bank. The sudden rise in exchanges and discount that took place in the autumn told unfavourably upon the bank's interests; for, in consequence of it, all the forward purchases of bills which the agents in India had made (and unfortunately they were upon a somewhat larger scale than usual) resulted in loss. He did not wish to be understood as throwing anything like blame upon the managers in India in saying that, for the disturbance in the money market was not foreseen in this country any more than it was in the East, and did not arise out of business complications, but through the action of a military Government after the conclusion of the recent war on the Continent. Again, the action of the Bank of England in maintaining the Bank rate at 5 per cent. for six weeks told unfavourably; for during those six weeks the directors had to hold, at the call of the acceptors, a large amount of bills secured upon shipping documents, which were taken up at a much higher rate than was anticipated. Accordingly, the year closed with a deficit of £28,775.7s. 9d.; but if the result of the year working was somewhat unsatisfactory, he ventured to remind the shareholders that one of the difficulties which the bank had had to contend with a year ago, and which was now greatly removed, was the low price of the shares on the Stock Exchange, which, of course, tended to some extent to impair the credit of the bank, so that it had had to compete on somewhat unequal terms with other similar institutions. The directors had received by telegram the approximate result of the working of the different branches up to the 31st of March, and he was happy to say that the profits for the first three months of the present year amounted to a sum which, deducted from the £28,775, left only a little more than £5,000 unprovided for. He had also the satisfaction of stating that the directors expected, in the course of the coming month, to be paid a sum of £5,000 which had been written off a year ago as a bad debt. (Cheers.) It was, therefore, scarcely saying too much to state that the actual deficiency of £59,000 which stared them in the face when they last met had been virtually recovered, or nearly so. (Cheers.) He might also state that there was no impending loss, and no open account which caused the directors any anxiety whatever, and there was no reason whatever why the bank should not prosper. The credit of the bank was everywhere improving, and the business satisfactorily increasing. He then referred to the deep regret which the board had experienced at the death of Mr. James Frazer, who had always given the closest attention to the affairs of the bank.

The resolution for the adoption of the report, &c., was seconded by Mr. John Jones; and carried unanimously.

The election of Mr. Ludwig Wiese to a seat at the board was confirmed.

Mr. Thomas Lancaster, one of the retiring directors, was also re-elected.

The resolution for the election of Mr. Morrison was lost, and a poll was demanded on the part of Mr. Morrison, which will take place next Thursday, at the London Tavern.

STATE FUNERAL OF LORD MAYO.

DUBLIN, April 18.—The intention of the Government to honour the remains of Lord Mayo with a public funeral is now publicly announced, and arrangements are in progress for giving it effect. No pains will be spared to invest the funeral pageant with imposing splendour and national significance. The Enchantress, conveying the remains of the distinguished Viceroy from India, is expected to arrive at the North Wall, Dublin, about the 24th inst. It is the first point in the United Kingdom at which she will touch, and there is a desire, springing from the highest motives, that the event should be regarded not merely as the return of a deceased nobleman to his native country in which he was personally esteemed, but as the return of a distinguished representative of the Crown to the nation which sent him forth, and in whose service, zealously fulfilling his duty, he met a calamitous fate. Taking this more elevated view of the circumstances, Lord Spencer and the Government deem it due to the memory of a faithful and honourable Minister, to whom his Sovereign had committed the highest trust at her disposal, that the utmost respect should be paid to his remains, and that the first opportunity which offered should be taken to express in a solemn form the sympathy of the nation. Hence the ceremonial will be magnificent and unique. The Lord Lieutenant will appear as chief mourner in the funeral procession, although the son of the deceased, the young Earl of Mayo, and other relatives, will be present. This will be a generous and expressive tribute on the part of Lord Spencer. It may, perhaps, appear strange in the eyes of the multitude, but it is strictly in accordance with the public character of the ceremonial. It is the Empire which mourns, and the Lord Lieutenant is the impersonation of its grief. In the procession the symbols of national power and dignity will be displayed. All the troops in the garrison will be assembled to give effect to the solemn pageant. The body will be borne on a gun-carriage covered with the Union Jack. Heraldic ensigns united with the elements of military pomp will give it greater brilliancy. Among the banners which will be borne in the cortege the most conspicuous and expressive will be those of the Orders of the Star of India and of St. Patrick. Lord Mayo was Grand Master of the former by virtue of his office, and was a Knight of the latter. These will be accompanied by Knights of the respective Orders. The streets will be lined with troops along the whole line of procession through the city, from the North Wall, across Carlisle-bridge, through Westmoreland-street, Parliament-street, along the quays to the King's-bridge. The cavalry regiments will march in the cortege with all the bands in garrison massed, the King's Dragoon Guards heading it and the Carabineers bringing up the rear. All the military arrangements will be on a most extensive scale, under the special directions of the General Commanding-in-Chief, who will appear in the procession with all his staff. Minute guns will be fired from the Wellington Monument in the Phoenix Park, to the number of fifty, the exact age of the deceased, and the flags of the vessels in the harbour will be hoisted half-mast high. The cavalry will carry their sabres sloped, and the infantry their arms reversed. The Lord Mayor, in his state carriage, will head the line of carriages of the noblemen, officers of state, and citizens which will form the cortege. It is intended that these vehicles shall be drawn up in Sackville-street and be ready to fall into their places when the military cross Carlisle-bridge. The procession will accompany the remains to the King's-bridge, whence they will be conveyed under an escort of cavalry and a body of tenantry by road to Palmerstown, the late earl's seat in the county Kildare, whence they will be deposited in their final resting place in the family vault.—Times Correspondent.

DUBLIN, April 20.—The preparations for the funeral of the late Earl of Mayo are rapidly approaching completion, and are made upon an elaborate scale. The following, it is officially notified, is to be the order of proceeding:—

His Excellency Richard Southwell, sixth Earl of Mayo, Viscount Mayo, and Lord Baron of Nais, in the county of Kildare, in the Peerage of Ireland, Viceroy and Governor-General of India, Knight of the Most Illustrious Order of St. Patrick, and Grand Master of the Most Exalted Order of the Star of India; born February 21, 1822; departed this mortal life the 8th of February, 1872. His remains, brought over from India to Dublin, will be received on the 24th of April by his Excellency the Lord Lieutenant, in State, and be conducted with funeral honours in the form hereafter mentioned on their way to the Nais-road, whence they will be conveyed with an escort of cavalry to Palmerstown, the Earl's seat in the county of Kildare.

The procession will move from the place of reception in the following order:—

The procession, having been marshalled, will begin to move at 12 o'clock, and the firing of minute guns from the Wellington Testimonial in the park will also commence. The funeral march will be played by the massed bands with solemn effect as the cortege proceeds along the route.

THE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN FINANCE.

On Friday, Mr. R. H. Elliot, Indian coffee planter, author of a work entitled "The Coffee Planter in Mysore," was examined on the state of agriculture in that province, the capabilities of the soil, the condition of public works, and the means of irrigation and cultivation of the soil. The information elicited was to the effect that the soil of Mysore is too poor to grow any sort of cereals except those it is accustomed to, such as the indigenous grains. Irrigation works are too costly for so poor a land to support; although Mysore, as a semi-regulation province, must ultimately improve as a producing country with the introduction of European modes of agriculture. Mysore would derive great advantage from the assistance of the Forestry Department, who might extend its operations to the planting of trees, the cultivation of the tea plant; also in the production of fuel and artificial manure. The witness's political panacea for developing the resources of India was to establish regular communication between the native people and the Government of India by means of those "Consultative Councils" which had been before recommended. Mr. Elliot held before the committee extreme opinions regarding our modern Indian policy much resembling those of a previous witness (Mr. Geddes), but to the interrogations of Sir Stafford Northcote (who occupied the chair during Mr. Ayrton's absence), the witness said he would not be bound by any opinions he had published or expressed. His opinions were now bearing the test of a studious investigation of the Indian Financial system. His views would be explained in a new edition of his book, and in an essay he was preparing for Fraser's Magazine. He sustained the honesty of his convictions that our British policy was wrong in India by mentioning that he had sold out Indian stock of which he was the trustee, on the ground that he did not consider the security lastingly safe.

The witness had observed in India that the natives had been gradually losing faith and confidence in British rule, and were withdrawing from money obligations with us, as they anticipated one day that a "smash" would come, and therefore they would rather hoard than confide their means to the India funds. He considered that the large revenue from the opium trade solely saved our Exchequer from a bankruptcy. As regarded the material condition of Mysore as a province, Mr. Elliot stated that he had not succeeded in cultivating with a profit anything there except coffee. The great deficiency in the supply of water, and the cost of its application to the soil, also the scarcity of proper sorts of manure, natural and artificial, greatly interfered with profitable cultivation. The Public Works Department had endeavoured to improve matters by erecting water works, which had, however, been allowed to fall into ruin. There were some ancient tanks, &c., which remained also in ruins. In Mysore the cultivators preferred their primitive modes of cultivation. It was premature to adopt agricultural improvements in Mysore at present. Ploughing and drilling in the European fashion the natives could not comprehend, and ludicrous applications of the drill and plough had been made in their dark ignorance by the natives. The witness was next questioned on his experience of the succession of famines in India, but he did not speak from personal observation so much as literary inquiry in respect to the famines and their depopulating and decimating effects.

Mr. Elliot suggested that the very fact of having opened up communication by railways, &c., with certain agricultural parts of Bengal had perhaps assisted in producing the calamity of famines. The peasantry were induced to grow new crops for European merchandise, while they neglected their indigenous and largely-producing grains, such as rice, &c. Hence, when they returned to their usual cultivation the crops failed from want of time to restore the strength of the soil. While waiting for the hoped-for crop climatic influences were against them, and famines were the consequence. He had a plan of forming extensive Government granaries against famine, but in answer to numerous questions the witness admitted that the knowledge that such stores were ready to be supplied in alleviation of distress might lead to trading speculations in connection with the stores, and probably the peasantry also, knowing there was help at hand in the case of failure of crops, would cease to cultivate with that attention which necessity compelled. There was, moreover, the difficulty to get over of the enormous expense of supplying granaries from the European markets, and then sending the grain up the country. In answer to other questions relating to the Public Works Department, his (Mr. Elliot's) plan was to abandon centralisation, and allow all necessary works to be executed on the recommendation of local municipalities, or on the representations of native and other collectors and the European civil engineers who had surveyed the country. He approved of the "consultative councils" principle of Sir Donald Macleod and Sir Bartle Frere. It was, probably, capable of leading to the development of the agricultural, as well as social, resources of India. There was another reform he would practically carry out, in view to the more economical collection of the revenue of the Madras Presidency for instance, viz., to abolish the Board of Revenue at Madras, and let the duties devolve on one manager, with a staff of collectors. This would save some large salaries paid to the members of the present Board of Revenue.

On Tuesday the committee examined Mr. E. F. Harrison, Controller-general of Accounts, Calcutta, and his head assistant, Mr. Gay, on the expenditure on the collection of the revenues of Bengal. The numerous items of expenditure that made up the sum of about three millions sterling, and the annual expense of collecting the revenue were gone over seriatim with the witnesses, the latter constantly referring to accounts, Blue-books, &c., as an assistance to their answers. The inquiry into the whole question was elaborately gone into; but the intricate character of details prevents anything more than a mere summary of the evidence. It was elicited that the rights of the hereditary native collectors of land revenue to be paid a percentage on collection had been commuted for salaries, which salaries, however, had been on a very low scale as compared with the pay of the European covenanted revenue collectors. Mr. Fawcett obtained the admission from the witnesses that the native collectors had been dealt with unjustly by the Government in respect to their present mode of remuneration. There was another apparent abuse connected with the European Civil Service; and that was the employment of so many military officers on civil duties connected with the revenue, who obtained extra pay in this manner without performing the official work that the regular civil servants did. Explanations were given as to the relative status of military and civil servants in connection with the revenue duties. The military officers were taken on in the Civil Service, although already there existed a plethora of junior civil servants ready to do the work at a much cheaper rate than the military officials were paid. A system so redolent of abuses had the effect of rendering the expense of collecting the revenue much more costly than it needed to be. A numerous signed petition to Parliament had emanated from the Civil Service of India, objecting to the military incubus pressing on the Civil Service. In some parts of India the European civil servants were too numerous, in others not numerous enough; but at any rate it was an injustice to prevent the junior civilians from getting promotion through military men irregularly stopping the way. The witness stated that the instituting of native scholarships in England and also in India had not much improved the status of natives as civilians, but there had been some additions of native civil servants through the success of native gentlemen in obtaining the scholarships. It was elicited that military officers in acting civil employments in Oudh were actively employed, and deserved the civil pay they received in lieu of military pay. It had been the case that Oudh had been, at the time of the annexation, denuded of civilians for the service, because in the regulation of the province economy was necessary, and few could be found to accept the low salaries offered for the collection of the revenue. In Oudh there had been some unfairness in the apportionment of appointments to the covenanted servants, but the junior civil servants had been the sufferers. Witness thought that the efficiency of military officers was impaired for the army by their taking acting employ and allowances from the Civil Service. Native collectors of revenue are paid an annual sum in commutation of their agency percentage, which was their heritage. After some inquiries into the cost of the collection of the opium revenue and the revenue derived from forest conservancy, the committee adjourned.

On Friday the examination of the witnesses, Messrs. E. F. Harrison, Comptroller-General of Accounts, Calcutta, and Mr. Gay, was resumed, the subjects inquired into being the charges on the collection of Customs, salt, and opium. It being ascertained that the cost of Customs collection in the Bombay Presidency was heavier than either of the other Presidencies, Sir S. Northcote inquired why this was the case in a minor Presidency, while the collection of the general taxes was not so unusually costly; and the reply, as we understood, was that the Customs-house at Bombay is a very large establishment. The gross taxation of Bombay Presidency was through Customs dues. The whole question of the administration of the salt revenue was under the consideration of the Government of India. As it stands, the salt duty might be assimilated to a sort of poll-tax all over India, as regards the consumers. The charges on collection might be much reduced. The re-establishment of the local manufacture of salt in Oudh had been recently sanctioned experimentally, and the same measure would be extended to the North-Western Provinces within the Customs line. The salt duties now range from one and a-half rupees to three and a quarter rupees per maund. The next subject inquired into was the opium monopoly, and the same ground was gone over as was taken last year. The last subject taken was the coinage of India, and it appeared that two out of the three mints established at the Presidency had been abandoned, as one was all that was necessary.

He was formerly in the Rifle Brigade, and has the honour to wear the Victoria Cross for personal bravery at Lucknow, and in addition was appointed Judge-Advocate-General of the Forces during the Chinese War of 1860-61.

BILLS ON INDIA.—Tenders for £600,000 in bills on India were received on Wednesday, the 17th inst., at the Bank of England. The amounts allotted were—to Calcutta, £392,400; to Bombay, £200,000; and to Madras, £7,600. The minimum price was fixed as before at 1s. 11d. on all the Presidencies. Tenders on Calcutta and Madras, at 1s. 11½d. will receive 76 per cent.; and on Bombay at that price 50 per cent. Those above in full.

From Southampton, per Ceylon, 18th April, 1872: To Bombay, gold, £20,000. Price of Silver: Bar, 5s. 0½d. to 5s. 0¾d. per oz. standard; dollars: old, 5s. 2½d. per oz.; new, 5s. 0½d.; five francs, 4s. 11d. per oz.

LADY MAYO.—The members of the late Government, by whom Lord Mayo was appointed Governor-General of India, have signed a note addressed to Lady Mayo, expressive of their condolence with her Ladyship and admiration of the character of her late husband. This note has been signed by every member of Mr. Disraeli's Cabinet. Her Majesty the Queen has on two occasions, before and since her arrival in England, communicated to Lady Mayo expressions of sympathy under her bereavement. In Friday night's Gazette it is announced that the Queen has been pleased to appoint Blanche Julia, Countess of Mayo, to be Honorary Lady of the Bed-chamber to her Majesty.

OUTPOST DUTIES.—A committee, consisting of Major-Gen. D. Lysons, C.B. (president), Col. Herbert, C.B., Assistant Adjutant-General Head-quarters; Col. Sir A. Alison, C.B., Assistant Adjutant-General, Aldershot; Col. Weare, C.B., 50th Regiment; and Col. Elrington, Rifle Brigade, assembled at Aldershot on Thursday for the purpose of compiling a small book of instructions for infantry outposts for officers and non-commissioned officers, and suggesting any modifications in the portion of the field exercise alluding to pickets. Another committee, composed of Major-Gen. Sir Thomas McMahon, C.B. (president); Colonel Marshal, 2nd Life Guards; Colonel Baker, 10th Hussars; and Colonel Herbert, C.B., Assistant Adjutant-General, also assembled to draw up similar instructions for cavalry.

THE P. AND O. STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY.—The contract between the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company and the Italian Government has been signed. It is stated that the Peninsular Navigation Company is going to establish a new harbour at Venice.

INDIA AND LONDON LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY.—Vice-Chancellor Malins had before him on Saturday the petition of Colonel Dyke, the holder of a deed of annuity issued by the India and London Life Assurance Company, praying for an order to wind up that Company, which had been amalgamated with the European. Mr. Glasse and Mr. Graham Hastings supported the petition, which was opposed by Mr. Jackson, who appeared for the India and London Life Assurance Company, which he said in 1860 made an arrangement with the European Assurance Society, whereby the latter company, in consideration of a payment of £14,700, undertook to indemnify the former against all its liabilities. Counsel for the petitioner, in reply, said the European undertook to indemnify the India Company only against life policies. It was not the fact that Colonel Dyke had accepted the European in lieu of the India Company as his debtor. The Vice-Chancellor decided that nothing had been done by Colonel Dyke amounting to a novation of contract, and he granted the usual order for the winding up of the India and London Life Assurance Company.

ORIENTAL BANK CORPORATION.—The annual general meeting of the shareholders of the Oriental Bank Corporation was held on April 18, at the offices of the corporation, Threadneedle-street; the chair was occupied by Mr. James Blyth. The Chairman stated that the report set forth so fully the state of the affairs of the corporation that he need not trouble the shareholders with any lengthened remarks. He thought they would consider that the directors had presented a very satisfactory and favourable report of the proceedings of the corporation for the past year. The present dividend of 6 per cent. has now been maintained for six years, notwithstanding the difficulties which had surrounded Eastern banking during that period. This was mainly to be attributed to the vigilance and ability of the officers, both at home and abroad; and he was happy to say that the corporation held a very high position amongst Eastern banking institutions. Since the commencement of the present year the directors had continued to receive the most satisfactory reports from the East, which showed that the corporation continued to maintain its high position abroad, and there was every prospect of a continuance of that prosperity. In conclusion, the Chairman moved the reception of the report and accounts. Dr. Thom seconded the resolution, and congratulated the proprietors on the great prosperity which continued to attend the operations of the corporation. He expressed the great confidence which he felt in the management of the bank, both in this country and in the East. The resolution was then put to the meeting and carried.

Imperial Parliament.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, THURSDAY, April 18.—THE GRANT TO LADY MAYO.—MR. GLADSTONE: I wish to make a short statement, which I think may be for the convenience of the House, with respect to the motion which stands for to-morrow evening in the name of the hon. member for Waterford, who has given notice of his intention to bring under the consideration of the House the subject of the further provision for the widow of the lamented Lord Mayo. I am not sure whether my hon. friend will be able to bring it on, but the House will feel it is a subject with regard to which suspense is to be deprecated. (Hear, hear.) When her Majesty's Government first had the sad occasion put before them which led to the consideration of this question, they of course thought it their duty to look back to the precedents which appeared to be most nearly analogous to the case of Lord Mayo, with reference to determining both the amount and the source of a proper provision for the widow of that distinguished and excellent person. Upon examination of these precedents we of course found, as might be expected, that none of them precisely corresponded with the case before us. Those which we principally took into consideration were the cases of the widows of Mr. Perceval, Lord Elgin, and Lord Raglan, all of which were in some respects analogous, though none of them presented a complete analogy. We could not arrive at the conclusion for ourselves that it would be consistent with the rules such a series of precedents might be said to constitute that we should make a proposal beyond that which was granted by the Indian Council, and that we should move the Secretary of State for India to urge his Council to make any further grant. The course taken by my hon. friend the member for Waterford in placing his motion upon the paper has given us ample opportunity of ascertaining what is the state of feeling in the House, and there is no question that there is a very general desire in the House, by no means prevailing in any one quarter of it more than another, that some further provision should be made. (Cheers.) I should not be doing full justice to the case if I did not add there is a corresponding feeling out of doors. We thought it our duty to form our conclusions according to what appeared to be the rules applicable to the case; we do not at all contend that the same limitation applies to Parliament, nor do we think it our duty to carry our own opinions, so formed, to the point of resistance to the general desire. On the contrary, we think any such resistance in a matter of this kind would be a public evil far more serious than any deviation, if there be any deviation, from the strict rule in the consideration of the further provision for Lady Mayo. It is, therefore, our intention to take the matter into consideration—I am not prepared to state at this moment in what precise form, but I am prepared to state, as far as regards the substance of the motion of my hon. friend, that we are prepared to concur in the opinion that it is well, under the circumstances, that an addition should be made to the provision already made. I will only say in conclusion that it is far more agreeable to me to make that announcement and to concur in that course than it would have been to adopt any other line of action, for we are very deeply sensible that every claim that can apply to a case of this kind does exist in the case of the distinguished person the loss of whom we all so much deplore. While making this intimation we, of course, leave it open to my hon. friend to pursue the course he may think best.—MR. OSBORNE: After the satisfactory statement just made by the Prime Minister, I think I should be wanting in respect to him and to the House generally if I did not say I am sure that statement will be received by the majority of the House and by the people of the country as a most generous exposition of the sentiments of the Government. Under these circumstances I cannot hesitate to at once withdraw the motion which stands in my name for to-morrow night. (Cheers.)

HOUSE OF COMMONS, FRIDAY, April 19.—ROYAL HORSE ARTILLERY.—In reply to Major ARBUTHNOT, Mr. GRANT DUFF said it was not the practice for officers to take their horses with them either going or returning from India. The Secretary of State did not intend to make any compensation on account of the sudden withdrawal of the Brigade of Royal Horse Artillery.

PETITIONS PRESENTED.—By Mr. Grove, from Colonel Ross, late Madras Staff Corps, in favour of bonus claims; by Major Morgan, from Major E. M. Norie, her Majesty's Staff Corps, praying for redress of grievance on the principle admitted in Clause 4 of Army Regulation Bill of 1871, also from Lieut.-Colonel J. D. Williams, Bombay Staff Corps, with similar prayer.

FROM the Report on the Government Cinchona Plantations at Ootacamund for 1870-71, we learn that the growth of the plants has been very satisfactory. The older plants of the various medicinal kinds have grown from shrubs into trees 22 or 23 feet high, and 18 to 21 inches in girth. Of the Cinchona Succirubra the finest samples reach a height of 30 feet with a girth of 3. Three thousand five hundred plants of the Calisaya kind have been permanently planted out on two acres of new land. With this exception the work of the year has been confined to filling up failures, and planting along the roadside. Among the new species of plants lately introduced is the Pitayo bark, which appears to be hardy and well-suited to the climate. A lanceolate variety of Calisaya introduced from Java makes but slow growth at Ootacamund. During the year 51,353 lbs. of fresh bark were supplied to Mr. Broughton, the Government Quinologist, for the manufacture of amorphous quinine. From 1,000 eight-year-old plants of C. Succirubra, as much as 2,560 lbs. have been or will be extracted during this year. This average of more than 2½ lbs. to each tree will yield at the present rates of 2s. 8d. to 3s. a pound a clear profit of at least a rupee a pound. After the tenth year an increasing profit may be yearly expected, with a steady improvement in the quality of the bark. In the cheaper kinds of bark it is unlikely that India will ever compete successfully in the home market with America, where the plant grows wild, and its culture which is yearly spreading costs nothing. In the finer kinds of bark, however, a successful competition is far from unlikely, if the mopping process be steadily applied. Under this process each successive renewal of bark will become more valuable than the last, until red bark yields from 10 to 12 per cent. of crystallisable alkaloids containing from 6 to 8 per cent. of pure quinine, while 8 or 10 per cent. of the latter may be expected from the crown barks. In that case India would defy competition, for no such bark, it appears, could be obtained from America.

MUSKETRY.—NATIVE REGIMENTS.—With reference to the instructions contained in Part III. of the Native Musketry Regulations, the Right Hon. the Commander-in-Chief is pleased to direct that the wing officers only of regiments of native infantry armed with Enfield rifles are to be struck off all regimental and garrison duties during the time the companies of their respective wings are engaged in executing the annual course of musketry drill and practice; but it is to be distinctly understood that the wing subalterns and other attached European officers are, when not actually employed on other duties, to assist the wing officers in superintending the musketry drills and practices of their men. Whenever the rifle range is situated so distant from the regimental lines as to necessitate the encampment of the company at musketry, a wing subaltern, or other attached European subaltern officer, should, when practicable, be sent to reside in camp, to assist the wing officer. After the annual course of practice has been completed by all the companies of a regiment, a European subaltern officer will be struck off all duty to superintend the drill and practice of the casuals and non-exercised men, whenever there may be a sufficient number of those classes available to form a squad of five or more individuals.

THE PEOPLE OF INDIA:

A SERIES OF

PHOTOGRAPHIC ILLUSTRATIONS OF

ORIGINALLY PREPARED UNDER THE AUTHORITY OF

AND REPRODUCED AT THE INDIA MUSEUM

BY ORDER OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL.

EDITED BY

J. FORBES WATSON AND JOHN WILLIAM KAYE.

MEMORANDUM.

In addition to the copies of this work prepared for the use of the Government, the Secretary of State for India in Council has authorised the publication of an edition for sale.

The work will contain about 450 Photographs on mounts, in eight volumes, super-royal 4to., and it will be issued at £2. 5s. per volume.

The First and Second Volumes are still on hand.

From the TIMES.

"We gather from the Preface that this work grew to its present handsome dimensions from a very modest commencement. It originated in the wish of Lord and Lady Canning to take home a private collection of photographs which might serve to recall the scenes and incidents of their Indian life, but as it advanced its importance began to be perceived, and Government, with a most judicious expenditure of public money, took it in hand. Very few of the photographs are unaccompanied by descriptions, often copious and graphic, of the subjects they illustrate, and the result is a singularly varied panorama of human life and character exhibited under almost every conceivable aspect. Although these four volumes deal with only a portion of the empire, there is scarcely a type of character, from the loftiest to the most debased, that is not to be found in them, and nowhere else, perhaps, in the world are peculiarities of character so strongly marked and sharply defined as in India. We might exhaust far more space than we can afford without giving the reader at all an adequate idea of the strange varieties of character to which these volumes introduce him."

WHITE and SOUND TEETH are indispensable to PERSONAL ATTRACTION, and to Health and Longevity by the Proper Mastication of Food.

ROWLANDS' ODONTO,

Or, PEARL DENTIFRICE,

Compounded of the choicest and most recherché ingredients of the Oriental Herbal, is of inestimable value in Preserving and Beautifying the Teeth, Strengthening the Gums, and in giving a pleasing Fragrance to the Breath. It eradicates Tartar from the Teeth, removes spots of incipient decay, and polishes and preserves the Enamel—to which it imparts a Pearl-like Whiteness. The general demand for it at once announces the favour in which it is universally held.

Price 2s. 9d. per box. Sold by Chemists and Perfumers everywhere, and at all Bazaars.

* Ask for "ROWLANDS' ODONTO," and avoid all others as cheap spurious imitations.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS.

DYSPEPSIA, JAUNDICE.—These complaints are the results of a disordered liver, which secretes bile in quality or quantity, incapable of digesting food. Digestion requires a free flow of healthy bile to insure which Holloway's Pills and Ointment have long been famous, far eclipsing every other medicine. Food, irregularity of living, climates, and other causes, are constantly throwing the liver into disorder, but that important organ can, under all circumstances, soon be regulated and healthily adjusted by Holloway's Pills and Ointment, which act directly upon its vital secretion. The Ointment rubbed on the skin, penetrates immediately to the liver, whose blood and nerve it rectifies. One trial is all that is needed; a cure will soon follow.

Price 2s. 9d. per box. Sold by Chemists and Perfumers everywhere, and at all Bazaars.

Digestion requires a free flow of healthy bile to insure which Holloway's Pills and Ointment have long been famous, far eclipsing every other medicine. Food, irregularity of living, climates, and other causes, are constantly throwing the liver into disorder, but that important organ can, under all circumstances, soon be regulated and healthily adjusted by Holloway's Pills and Ointment, which act directly upon its vital secretion. The Ointment rubbed on the skin, penetrates immediately to the liver, whose blood and nerve it rectifies. One trial is all that is needed; a cure will soon follow.

Price 2s. 9d. per box. Sold by Chemists and Perfumers everywhere, and at all Bazaars.

* Ask for "ROWLANDS' ODONTO," and avoid all others as cheap spurious imitations.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS.

DYSPEPSIA, JAUNDICE.—These complaints are the results of a disordered liver, which secretes bile in quality or quantity, incapable of digesting food. Digestion requires a free flow of healthy bile to insure which Holloway's Pills and Ointment have long been famous, far eclipsing every other medicine. Food, irregularity of living, climates, and other causes, are constantly throwing the liver into disorder, but that important organ can, under all circumstances, soon be regulated and healthily adjusted by Holloway's Pills and Ointment, which act directly upon its vital secretion. The Ointment rubbed on the skin, penetrates immediately to the liver, whose blood and nerve it rectifies. One trial is all that is needed; a cure will soon follow.

Price 2s. 9d. per box. Sold by Chemists and Perfumers everywhere, and at all Bazaars.

Summary and Review.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail are—from Bombay, April 8; Agra and Madras, April 6; Calcutta, April 5.

THE Bombay papers contain brief summaries of Sir R. Temple's Budget Statement, but these have in a great measure been forestalled by the telegram sent home some weeks ago. It appears however that some of the figures were not quite correctly given. The real surplus for last year was £2,700,000, of which £1,850,000 were due to Opium, and £224,600 to Income-tax. The actual surplus of £1,482,990 referred to the year 1870, not to last year. Owing to the balance in hand from previous loans no loan will be taken this year either in India or England for public works extraordinary. The opium estimate for the same year is reckoned at Rs. 1,200 a chest. Half a million sterling is set down to loss by exchange. The cash balances of twenty-one and a-half millions include one and a-half million overdue to 5 per cent. creditors. The receipts for this year are estimated at £48,771,000, leaving a surplus over outlay estimated at £237,000.

IF the Times of India is correctly informed, some forty Bengal officers have received orders to apply for leave to retire from the Service. In this number are included both local and Staff Corps officers. Should they fail within a "reasonable period" of three months to comply with this highly reasonable order, their names, it is hinted, will be transferred to the half-pay list. We would hope for the sake of the officers and the credit of the Indian Government in this country, that there is some mistake in this announcement. It is hardly in keeping with the statement lately made in Parliament by Mr. Grant Duff that some scheme for promoting the retirement of surplus field-officers was under consideration; and the attempt previously made to force a number of Bombay officers out of the service in the face of Parliamentary guarantees had provoked so fierce an outcry and so determined a show of resistance, that any new movement in that direction could only bring the Government into worse discredit than ever.

THE remainder of General Brownlow's Column of the Loshai Field Force landed in Calcutta from Chittagong on Tuesday, April 2, and Thursday the 4th, General Brownlow and his Staff bringing up the last detachments. In Cachar, General Bourchier's head-quarters, the 4th N.I. were the only troops remaining, after the departure of the General and his Staff on the 19th March. Six or seven hundred coolies still remained in Sylhet. The 22nd P.N.I. left Chattak on the 19th and 22nd. Most of the officers of the Force are said to be suffering more or less from the poor diet and constant exposure to which they had been subjected, and the Englishman repeats a rumour that Lord Napier has requested the medical officers to report on the quality of the provisions issued to the Europeans in the Force.

MR. A. D. SASSOON gave the Governor of Bombay a splendid entertainment in honour of his approaching departure. Eight hundred guests were present at the ball, including one Parsee lady, the wife of a Mr. D. Kama, the first lady of her race who has ever joined in public in a square or a round dance. "Her picturesque costume of soft white silk (says the Bombay Gazette reporter) looked particularly graceful as its wearer glided through a quadrille or went through the figures of the Lancers." A number of native gentlemen were looking on, with what feelings we are not told; but the writer credits them with being "pleased at the new opportunity for exercising gracefulness of action" which quadrilles opened out to their wives and daughters. The Governor himself led off the ball with Mrs. Sassoon, who ought, we imagine, to be a Parsee also. In that case she must claim priority even over the courageous Mrs. Kama.

AJMERE, as the centre of "Rajasthan," is to have a memorial of Lord Mayo, to which all the chiefs of the surrounding Rajpoot States are to subscribe their several shares. The Maharajah of Jaipore further proposes, with Lady Mayo's leave, to raise a bronze statue of her husband in the gardens now being laid out between the Ajmere and Sanganeer gates of Jaipore city.

ILL health appears to have hastened Mr. Rivett-Carnac's return to Europe. Mr. Halsey is deemed likely to act as Cotton Commissioner in his absence. Mr. Paul is to officiate as Advocate-General of Bengal.

MAJOR SLADEN has taken up his appointment as Deputy Commissioner of the Amherst District in British Burmah. It is said that, before leaving India, the King of Siam wrote a letter to the Supreme Government, thanking them for allowing Major Sladen to accompany him during his Indian trip, and acknowledging, in very flattering terms, the good services rendered him by that officer.

WE are not surprised to see it stated in some of the Indian papers that Mr. Cowan intends to sue the editor of the Friend of India for his repeated and violent attacks upon him in the matter of the Kuka executions. Whether the report be true or not, the journal in question has gone to what we cannot but think a very unseemly length in its abuse of an officer whose character stands deservedly high in the Punjab, and whose conduct in this particular instance was undergoing inquiry when the attacks were made. It would have been more becoming at least to wait for the upshot of that inquiry before dealing out cruel censures on the strength of altogether imperfect evidence. Certain it is that the Government and the press of the Punjab are of one mind in this matter, and their opinion, we need hardly say, differs as widely as possible from that of the Calcutta Journal, which does not even reflect the general opinion of Calcutta itself. The nearer we travel indeed to the scene of the late commotion, the stronger appears to grow the sympathy with Mr. Cowan and the belief in the wisdom of his mercifully stern proceedings. On this point the Pioneer of Allahabad is at one with the journals published in Lahore. What the Sikhs of Amritsar think of the Kuka rising, was clearly shown in their address to the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab. "We are happy"—they say—"that the Government has adopted most appropriate and excellent measures for controlling this wicked and misguided sect; especially as the measures in question are calculated to deter ill-disposed people from committing mischief in future." Nor did Mr. Davies's reply conceal his frank opinion of the "miscreants," who for years together had abused the forbearance of the Government towards men of all sects, and, "under pretence of religious meetings, had continued to hatch murder, rapine, and treason." The well-informed writer of a letter to the Bombay Gazette declares with evident truth, that the Patiala authorities are all on Mr. Cowan's side, and believe that "the blowing away from guns alone met the emergency." In their view, to have acted otherwise would have led to the dethronement of the present Rajah in favour of his uncle. It is worth noting on the same writer's authority, that whereas on the day before the executions hundreds of Kukas were flaunting their peculiar head-dresses in the immediate neighbourhood, on the day after not one of them was to be seen wearing his turban in other than the general fashion. It is again asserted, too, by informants on the spot that the sudden departure of the 14th Sikhs from Jalandhur to Rawal Pindi sprang from a discreet desire to remove them from a neighbourhood haunted by plotters of the dangerous sect. If it be true that they have been relieved by a Hindustani regiment, there may be good grounds for this view of the matter.

ALL this, of course, hardly amounts to sufficient proof that Mr. Cowan was justified in acting as he did. But it tends strongly to convict of rash unfairness those who have hastened to condemn him without a hearing. So far as it goes, it all speaks loudly in Mr. Cowan's favour, and we have little doubt that what else was needed to clear him altogether has been duly laid before his judges. Meanwhile, there is some significance in the opinion which the head of the Loodiana police appears to have expressed touching Mr. Cowan's suspension. He does not stand alone in thinking that "the utility of the executions has been annulled or considerably qualified" by a proceeding which the Punjab Government is known to have deprecated on similar grounds.

ONE of the Madras papers gives a delightful extract from a leading-article headed "Les Koukas," which appeared in a French journal, name not given. It appears that the first success of "Les Koukas" has "caused an immense sensation throughout India." We are next informed that "their insurrection is connected with that of the Loshais." The theatre of the war is said to be "between the sources of the Indus and those of the Brahmaputra, which lie at the foot of the Himalayas at the bottom of the Bay of Bengal." Our readers will be amused to hear that "England has done all she can to cut off the revolution from China," for which purpose she has despatched some regiments into the north of Burmah, and these "ask for nothing better than to join the movement." To crown all, "the Emperor of Burmah has refused to receive the English envoy whom he had reason to suspect; and on his side General Bouchier, who commands the English expedition, suspects the whole country, and has added a force of 279 policemen to his corps." Our first thought on reading this wonderful tissue of true-seeming fictions and plausible absurdities was to smile at the clever funning of the Madras editor; but then it occurred to us that only a Celtic brain could have spun so exquisite a tangle out of a few disconnected facts. The writer must have begun by confounding the Kookas with the Kookies, and then proceeded to display his genius for putting two and two together with the sublime contempt of his countrymen for historical and geographical accuracy.

THE latest telegrams announce Lord Northbrook's arrival at Bombay on Friday last. He was to leave that city on the 30th for Calcutta, resting one night at Allahabad, and arriving at Calcutta on Friday, the 3rd May. Lord Napier, the acting Viceroy, starts for England on the 7th, via Galle.

It appears from a Times telegram of yesterday's date that a Panthay Embassy from Yunnan has left Calcutta for England with sealed letters for the Queen, imploring her, it is supposed, to help the Panthays in their protracted struggle against the Chinese. We fear that they are only coming on a bootless errand, whatever might be said for them in the interests of inland trade between India and China.

THE first steamer that has ever gone through the Paumben Channel appears to be the Harefield, whose commander, Captain Farrar, took her through the other day in twenty minutes, without any mishap. The channel in question, which divides Ceylon from the Madras coast, narrows in one place to a Pass about 150 feet wide and 150 yards long, cut out of the solid rock. The Harefield was lightened until it drew only ten and a-half feet of water, but the Pass itself has a minimum depth of fourteen feet, which might for a moderate outlay be increased to a depth sufficient for large steamers fully laden. Such is the opinion of Captain Farrar, whose experience bears out the statements of competent judges in this country. The question of improving and deepening a channel, the passage through which would save from thirty-six to forty-eight hours on the road from Suez to Calcutta, becomes more and more pressing in view of the steadily increasing traffic through the Suez Canal. Time in these days counts for much, and shipowners would gladly pay a moderate charge for the use of a short cut which on the double voyage would save them three or four days' expenses at the least.

A MORE imposing state-funeral was never perhaps witnessed in Dublin than that which took place last Thursday in honour of India's late Viceroy. "No element," says the Times reporter, "was wanting to make the ceremonial worthy of the occasion and of the country." As a mark of imperial homage paid to a distinguished and lamented servant of the State, it seems to have been peculiarly impressive, surpassing in this respect even the funeral of the popular Duke of Rutland in 1787. The Viceroy of Ireland as chief mourner headed a procession in which many leading statesmen of both parties and nations bore their part. The India Office was worthily represented by Mr. Grant Duff, Sir John Kaye, and Sir Erskine Perry; the Marquis of Lorne standing for his father, the Duke of Argyll, who was too ill to be present himself. The son of General Barrow, Commissioner of Oudh, was also among the mourners. The whole ceremony was in keeping with the splendour which had marked Lord Mayo's viceregal progresses; while the simpler habits of his private life were illustrated in the more homely ceremony with which his body was afterwards borne to its last resting-place in his native county of Kildare.

AN important meeting was held on Saturday at Willis's Rooms, under the chairmanship of the Duke of Edinburgh, to consider the question of a memorial to the late Earl of Mayo. A goodly gathering of noblemen and gentry betokened the deep interest taken in the subject which had brought them together. The best speeches on the occasion seem to have been those of Mr. Disraeli and Lord Derby. In reference to Lord Mayo's Indian career the former especially dwelt on the wide personal influence wielded by the late Viceroy over all classes and races in India:—

Sometimes a great man had gained the devotion of the army, but he was viewed with suspicion by the Civil Service. Sometimes it was the reverse. Sometimes a Governor general, from his personal qualities, could count upon the enthusiastic devotion of the European community; but he had found that by some means, which he could not penetrate, he had alienated from himself the feelings of the native princes. But in the case of Lord Mayo, whether it was the Army or the Civil Service, the European community or the native Princes, all were alike devoted to him—(cheers)—and at this moment in India all these classes and all these individuals are mourning his loss with not less sincerity than those who are assembled in this room.

The secret of this he ascribed to Lord Mayo's "noble presence, his cordial manner, the magnificence of his life, his active accomplishments, his extraordinary power of physical endurance combined with an intuitive knowledge of mankind and an inexorable love of justice, which was only tempered by the abounding generosity of his heart." Lord Mayo in short "was a man who was really beloved."

LORD DERBY pointed to the combination in Lord Mayo of great qualities seldom to be found together. "I have known"—he said—

Other men, though not very many, who were, perhaps, his equals in industry, in clear-sightedness, and in the assemblage of qualities which, united, form what we call a good man of business; and I have known men, though but few, who possessed, perhaps, to an equal extent that generosity of disposition in private and public life, that unfeigned good humour and good temper, which were among the most marked characteristics of our lamented friend; but I do not know if I ever met anyone in whom those two sets of qualities were so equally and so happily united. No discussion could be so dry but Lord Mayo would enliven it with that unforced humour which was one of his greatest social charms. No question could be so difficult or so complicated but that his simple, straightforward way of looking at it was quite sure of suggesting something of which you had not thought before.

The late Viceroy's kindly bearing towards all was "not a matter of calculation, but the result of nature." He did and said kind and generous things neither from political motives nor even from a sense of duty, but "because it was his nature and he could not help it." The only speaker who seems to have known him in India was Lord Sandhurst, his sometime colleague, who bore witness to his quick yet thorough comprehension of all business details, and to the immense labour he bestowed on "one of the most difficult negotiations"—the treaty with the Ameer of Kabul—"on which a Governor-General had ever been engaged." In dealing too with a great financial crisis, he "did not shrink from those measures which we are accustomed to think would cover a ruler with unpopularity." It was not the least, we may add, of Lord Mayo's achievements, that his personal popularity endured so little damage from one of the most unpopular measures which a Governor-General ever had to carry out.

A SUGGESTION lately thrown out in the Times by Captain Dicey goes near, we think, to solving a difficult problem connected with the passage of the British Channel. There is no need to dwell on the miseries endured by those who have to cross the Straits of Dover in the wretched little steamers now plying between the ports on either side. Quis talia fundo Temperet a lacrymis?—one might almost say. To avert the horrors of that Middle Passage all kinds of schemes have repeatedly been broached, including a tunnel under the Straits and a line of very large steamers across them. All such schemes however were more or less open to objection on account of their cost or their impracticable nature. If the large steamers for instance had a proportional draught, none of the existing harbours could take them in. If they were built for light draught, they would be almost certain to founder in very bad weather. Captain Dicey however, who seems to have roughed it for many years in the old East Indian Marine, appears to have hit upon a safe, easy, and cheap method of dealing with the difficulties that beset the question. The chief of these are "the rolling and pitching of the vessel and the deficiency of accommodation on deck for passengers;" and his aim is to get rid of these without increasing the vessel's draught on the one hand, or making it crank and unseaworthy on the other, and without diminishing the present rates of speed. All this he proposes to accomplish by applying the lessons taught him in his voyages through Eastern Seas. Some of our readers must have seen the "outriggers" that ply in the harbour of Point de Galle—long cranky boats hollowed out of tree-trunks, and steadied in the water by a log of timber fixed to the end of two wooden outriggers which project some way from the vessel's side. Some of these vessels, carrying between one hundred and two hundred tons burden, will ride steadily in a heavy swell that causes a large steamer to roll its ports under water. Improving on the hint thus offered him, Captain Dicey proposes to build a double steamer of large size; each hull to be 400 feet long, twenty feet beam, and twenty feet depth of hold, but drawing only six feet of water; while the two would be connected by strong arched iron girders thirty-five feet long. The inner side of each hull would be straight as a wall, and paddlewheels should be affixed to that side alone. The deck might be carried over the connecting girders. The hulls would be very sharp at each end, and all need for turning the vessel round would be removed by placing rudders fore and aft. Each hull acting as outrigger to the other, with a proper length of girder between them, the rolling of the vessel would be reduced to a minimum; there would be ample room for passengers and cargo; and so long as the girders held, the vessel would be absolutely safe from turning over, in spite of its tall sides and very light draught. Here surely we may see our way to abolishing the drawbacks of the Channel passage without the great cost of deepening harbours, or the fearful risk of building large steamers to draw very little water. It is possible indeed that no girders might stand the enormous strain involved in the working of such a vessel; but if that one difficulty could be met by our naval engineers, no other objection of any real moment seems to hinder an early trial of Captain Dicey's scheme.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

INCOME-TAX EXPERIENCES.

THE Pioneer, a paper by no means prone to take anti-official views of things Indian, quotes three significant instances of the way in which the income-tax screw is applied in the Upper Provinces. Scene the first is laid in the court of an English magistrate. A Parsee tried for robbing the house of a Banya or grain-dealer, loudly protests his innocence, while the banya as loudly bemoans his loss. Some words he lets drop about the "Tikkus," or Income-tax, rouse the Magistrate's suspicions. It appears that the banya had prayed for remission of the tax on the ground of the alleged robbery. A visit to his house threw further light on the case. "The hole in the wall turned out to have been made from the inside." In short the banya and his friends had clearly trumped up a false charge in order to save the former from paying a hateful impost to which he was not fairly liable.

Scene two represents a nautch given by an Oudh Rajah to an English guest. The dancing so pleased the sahib that he offered the dancing-girl whatever reward she pleased. "Protector of the poor"—was her ready answer—"Excuse me from paying the Tikkus!" It seemed that she had been assessed to the tax, that next year her assessment was doubled, that her petitions only resulted in still increasing charges, and that she, who only danced in Rajahs' houses, had been twice compelled to perform in those of Government underlings, under the pain of having her assessment again doubled. It would not be so bad, she said, if the charge was always the same, or if the payment of "one big nuzzar" might serve for a lifetime.

Scene three shifts to a ferryboat on a river dividing two districts in Oudh. One or two peasants with their families and flocks are crossing the river. In answer to the questions of an English officer who chanced to be in the same boat, one of the peasants spoke to the following effect:—

Yes, Sahib, I am a shepherd, and also I had twenty bigahs of land; I am running away from that country (pointing backward) on account of the tikkus. Two years ago I and my brother were made to pay Rs. 5, and then Rs. 10; I don't know why. I petitioned against it, but the big Sahib would not listen. Then I had to pay Rs. 15. When I petitioned against this a munshi came to investigate matters. I had to give him food while he was with me, and he became angry because the ghos I gave him was made of sheep's milk; I had no other ghos, so he reported that I and my brother could each pay Rs. 15. We were obliged to pay Rs. 30. Yes, we are both living together as one family. We spent altogether nearly Rs. 10 more in stamped paper and costs of attendance at Court. So, after cutting our barley crop this spring, we resolved to leave the country, and we are now doing so. Yes, Sahib, we were very sorry to go; we had built two wells, and had begun to plant a grove. What can we do? We are coming over the river, because our sister's son, who lives on this side, told us the big Sahib here had greatly reduced the tax. No, we did not know that the tax had been reduced everywhere. No, we won't go back now; our land has been given to others, and eight of our sheep have died on the road. We shall settle here in our nephew's village, where we shall not pay any ticcus.

Here then we may note three different forms of evil arising from the same cause. In the first case an unfair and heavy assessment led to the making of a false charge against an innocent man. In the second a series of petty oppressions and unfair charges had to be borne with a good grace; and in the third the same kind of unfair and oppressive action drives an ignorant peasant away from his native village and his little farm. The Pioneer is not far wrong in arguing that "the only course left to the Government is to improve the tax off the face of the earth."

THE HARBOURS OF THE MADRAS COAST.

MR. GEORGE ROBERTSON, the Civil Engineer sent out some time ago by the India Office to examine the harbours along the Madras coast, has at length sent in the Report which he came home to draw up at his leisure. With regard to the particular question of a close harbour or a breakwater for Madras itself, he avows a certain leaning towards the breakwater, guarded indeed by an admission of ignorance on the cardinal points involved in the very questions he had been expected to decide. "Before any works can be safely commenced," he says, "more must be known regarding the most important points in connection either with a close harbour or a breakwater,—viz., the currents close in shore and the amount of sand in motion at the coast line. The whole success of any scheme depends on this knowledge." We suppose that it formed no part of Mr. Robertson's mission to try and ascertain these points for himself before leaving India. He contents himself at any rate with complaining that trustworthy evidence on these points seems altogether wanting, and proceeds to dissect the conflicting statements contained in the Report of the Committee of 1868; an amount of work which hardly needed the despatch of a special commissioner all the way from England.

If there is so much sand in motion on the shore at Madras, as to defy the controlling power of groynes, and threaten the formation of a fresh beach to the very end of a long pier, then Mr. Robertson would have small faith even in a breakwater. It would certainly still the surf which helps to keep the sand moving, and it would most likely fail, he thinks, in strengthening the inshore currents. In that case the sand would be heaped up behind the breakwater, and the greater the success of the breakwater in creating calm water behind it, "the more certain would be the destruction of the scheme from silting." Pending further information however as to the strength of the inshore currents, Mr. Robertson gives his vote with the committee for a breakwater in preference to an enclosed harbour. His reasons indeed are not theirs, because the shoaling which they fear from the building of solid piers he is inclined to dread from the breakwater also. The latter however would give, he thinks, much more deep water shelter than the harbour, at no greater cost. It would "create a considerable length of sufficiently smooth water at the coast line to enable boats to land or to come to jetties; and vessels can enter and quit more easily from behind a breakwater than through the one entrance of a harbour." Moreover a harbour like that designed by Mr. De Closet, in connection with docks on the island, "would admit so great a swell that vessels would be dashed to pieces in attempting to enter the docks."

For economical reasons Mr. Robertson adopts the Committee's suggestion that the breakwater should have a length of two thousand yards, and be placed in seven fathoms water. To place it further out would give more deep water shelter, at a cost perhaps too great for the financial position. The rest of this Report is taken up with calculations of cost, on which point Mr. Robertson makes important deductions from the Committee's estimates, and with suggestions as to the best way of building the breakwater within a reasonable time. Altogether it does not seem very clear why a civil engineer was despatched from this country in order to pronounce a "decided opinion" that the rival claims of breakwater and harbour for Madras cannot be fairly settled one way or the other, until somebody else shall have ascertained the exact strength of the currents and the amount of sand in motion in the Madras Roads. The Report in truth reads in many places like a more elaborate version of the oracular sayings ascribed by Dickens to our old friend Bunsby.

In his Report on Coconada Mr. Robertson suggests some easy and desirable improvements in the approaches to the Coringa River. The channel ought to be buoyed out the whole way to the river's mouth from Coconada. There is so little surf in Coringa Bay, that, with the further help of a dredger, a constant depth of six or seven feet at low water of springs might be kept up on the bar and in the channel leading to the river. If the head of the river were to be closed at Yenam, Coringa would be destroyed as a port. But for the expense, it would be well to "anticipate the action of nature" by embanking the channel on both sides all the way to Coconada, "thus shutting out the mud which comes down the neighbouring small mouths of the Godavery." In the channel at Coconada a good deal of silting has taken place, its breadth being too great for the unaided action of the tidal scour. A wall or bank on the south side, from the bridge downwards, would remedy this defect. A beacon is wanted at the head of the north groyne. Coconada or Coringa Bay, at the mouth of the Godavery, must in time become part of a delta formed by that river. Various schemes for delaying or averting such an issue have been put forth; but none of them finds any favour in Mr. Robertson's eyes. He would test the exact set of the currents however by means of floats; and if these showed no manifest tendency to enter Coconada Bay, or to remain in an eddy at its entrance, "something might safely be done towards the preservation of the anchorage." By throwing out a long groyne near the entrance to the Wanka-Nulle, the set of the stream might be trained more directly into the eastern channel, so that more water could be discharged to the south of Hope Island. The lighthouse on that island has been thrown many miles inland by the growth of the surrounding delta, and, owing to the swampy jungle, the light is seldom visible more than ten miles off. Mr. Robertson therefore "strongly advises" the placing of another light some seven or eight miles N.E. by N. of Hope Island Lighthouse. It ought, he adds, to be a floating light, so that it may be shifted at need as the delta increases, and not, like a light on screw piles at the mouth of a river in flood, be liable to undermining.

SALT.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—There is some reason for fearing that the English public may lose sight of the point on which the controversy regarding the salt-tax in India should be centred; and that the Cheshire manufacturers may be deluded by the arguments of those who delight in realising a large revenue by taxing excessively a necessary of life in a tropical country hundreds of miles distant from salt-water air.

I invite your attention to the experiment now being made of permitting salt to be manufactured in the Jounpore district, subject to the payment of the usual tax.

The experiment of levying an excise instead of a customs' duty has been repeatedly tried, and has invariably failed. The honest manufacturers have not been able to compete with the Cheshire, Sambhor Lake, and Punjab merchants, while the dishonest manufacturers have succeeded in cheating Government to an enormous extent.

The question is, not between an excise and a customs' duty, but between an excessively high and a moderate duty. Are we to tax salt until we make it a luxury, or are we to content ourselves with a salt revenue which, while it yields millions sterling annually into the British Treasury, will not diminish the consumption of salt by our poor and helpless subjects?

The tax on salt in Upper India is at present about £9 (nine pounds sterling) a ton. I argue that if the rate be reduced to £3 a ton, the consumption will be doubled, smuggling and illicit manufacture discouraged, and health restored to millions of souls and to millions of cattle.

According to the increase in the consumption so will be the increase in the exports of salt from Liverpool.

An excessive tax is a wicked one because it causes poor natives to give less salt to their families and cattle than is good for their health; the effect of an excessive salt tax is therefore more mischievous in a sanitary point of view than a Poll tax.

That the tax is excessive can be proved by comparing the consumption of salt under our regulations with its consumption in native states where the tax is lighter. Men and beasts do not eat more salt than is good for them. If on an average more salt is consumed in the Bhurtpoor kingdom than in the Mynpoorie District, we may fairly infer that the consumption in the latter is insufficient to preserve health in man and beast.

A grand and impenetrable hedge now stretches from the Punjab west of the Jumna southward into the Saugor and Nerbuddah territories. This hedge has been carefully grown by Government in order to prevent the smuggling of salt from the west eastward. If we compare the health of men and cattle east of this hedge with the health of those west of it, we shall soon be convinced that an excessive duty on salt is a tax dishonourable to a civilised nation.—Your obedient servant,

THE INDIAN PUBLIC SERVICE.

The Madras Mail holds that with qualified men on the spot to fill vacancies which may occur in the public service, the Indian Government cannot stop work till a nominee arrives from England. That the local Government, for instance, shall not appoint its own Advocate-General, or Solicitor, or Legal-Remembrancer, is a rule too absurd to receive a moment's attention except in a despatch; and it is no less absurd that the choice of the Government should be restricted to members of the Covenanted Civil Service or natives of India. Such appointments will, therefore, continue to be filled, as now, by the local Governments, without reference to the Secretary of State; and that officer himself will, we hope, be glad enough to forget his rash order. Against the general principles enunciated by the Duke of Argyll, that the only distinction in the Civil Service of India should be between natives and Europeans, and that all the Europeans should be appointed in the same way and under the same conditions, we have nothing to say except that general principles have never ruled the conduct of any Government since the world began, and by the nature of the case never can; for Governments must be flexible engines, whereas general principles are incorrigibly stiff. There are many objections to the present distinction between covenanted and uncovenanted Civilians; but how far that distinction should be modified is a question much too large for discussion in a single article, or even in a single despatch. All that can be said with certainty is that the Covenanted Civil Service, as at present constituted, cannot possibly supply men for all the posts in the Administration which must be filled by Europeans, to whatever extent the "indents for Civilians" may be increased; and that for filling those which cannot be supplied from that source no better system has yet been suggested than that which is at present in force, viz., the system of taking the best man who can be found at hand.

REDUCTIONS IN THE INDIAN ARTILLERY.

If the Madras Athenæum could be surprised at anything, it would certainly be "surprised to learn" that a number of officers are to be induced to retire by the offer of the special annuities. Subalterns who are up on the list may be glad to hear of the reduction as the retirement of senior officers will, it may fairly be presumed, give them a number of steps. But we think that the reduction in the arms of the service is a mistake. With all the Artillery of the three local armies, aided for the first time in the history of India by batteries of Royal Artillery, we were obliged during the mutiny to turn infantry into gunners, and to recruit the regular batteries largely from foot regiments. Since then the Golundauze batteries have been abolished, and now we are going to reduce the army again by as many field officers and captains as there are at present on the strength of the Madras establishment. This we consider is "one pace to the rear" if not more. It takes a comparatively short time to equip and drill native Infantry Regiments, but a long time to create efficient artillery men. The object cannot be simply army reduction after all, because since the mutiny broke out the Royal Artillery proper has been increased, if we remember rightly, twice. It must be intended simply to destroy as fast as possible all traces of the old Adam of India. There have been instances of dissatisfaction at the treatment the old local officers get at the hands of the Horse Guards. Some of them have been put on half pay, which is a new mode of dealing with Indian Officers, and one which the officers are not likely to fancy. They will, as a matter of course, if they have not done so, complain at this violation of their original terms of service. And we presume that the present reduction is intended as a warning that, unless the officers are satisfied with what they get from the concurring Dukes, the batteries will be reduced until the old leaven of India has been eliminated. This is a necessary consequence of handing the Indian army over to the Horse Guards, where it was never held in very high esteem after the Sepoy general ceased to take an interest in it. There the perfection of all armies and all military discipline and regulations is only to be met with in the Royal Army proper. Everything that an Indian officer may claim beyond what a line officer is entitled to is regarded as theoretically preposterous and subversive of discipline. To obtain symmetry and uniformity individual interest may be disregarded to the utmost extent which the Henley clause will permit. It is in this light that we are disposed to view and consequently condemn the proposed reduction. We also condemn it on the other grounds which we have named.

OFFICERS' RETIRING PENSIONS.

The Madras Mail argues that the sole remedy for the very serious state of things which is shown to exist is a revision of the pension regulations. The object to be kept in view is to encourage the efficiency of the commissioned ranks by holding out inducements to all officers above twenty-five years' service to leave the army, and not, as at present, to remain in it until they are entitled to the largest possible retiring allowance. On paper, no doubt, the present pensions look well, and appear to be liberal enough. But the truth of the matter is that modern ideas have quite changed the conditions under which an officer serves now-a-days in India. The prevalent feeling is that not less than two years out of ten should be spent in England, and by this means the tour of an officer's service is so spun out that it is not worth his while to retire before he is entitled to his colonel's allowances. This change in feeling generally, which has been caused by the development of steam and locomotion, of itself demands that a scale of leave of absence and of pensions which might be adapted to past times should undergo some modification to adapt them to the requirements of the age. Under present conditions, an officer takes his first furlough of two years, say, at the end of ten years' service; he then has to put in eight years after his return. At the end of that term, being young and perfectly healthy, he is disinclined to retire on £191 per annum, but probably takes a further two years, to rub himself up in European matters, military, social, and general. On his return he has to serve four years more to qualify for £292 per annum, and if he does not retire then, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, he hangs on for colonel's allowances. It is only just at this juncture that the pay he commences to draw is likely to compensate him for not leaving the service. The case above taken is that of an officer, who has never had occasion to take sick leave, and is, therefore, one presenting the most favourable view of the propriety of the existing scale of pensions. But the great majority of officers are compelled, on account of the absence passed on sick certificate, to remain on and recoup their service; and by this means it becomes impossible for them but to wait until they are entitled to off- reckonings, or Colonel's allowances. To meet the circumstances of the case, it seems desirable that after a term of 25 years' service, including 2½ years' furlough, the retiring pension should not be less than £400 per annum. After 28 years' service, including three years' furlough, the retiring pension should not be less than £500 per annum; after 32 years' service £600 per annum; after 35 years' service £700 per annum. Such pensions are no doubt liberal, though it must be remarked that now-a-days officers can scarcely afford to retire on less sums. Nor would the Government be losers by such a scale of pensions, for there can be no doubt greater efficiency than at present exists would be ensured; and it must also be remembered that, the smallest pay drawn by an officer of the 26 years' service,—doing absolutely nothing—except perhaps causing discontent,—is £993 per annum!

THE INDIAN BUDGET.

The Bombay Gazette observes that Sir Richard Temple's good luck this year almost rivals Mr. Lowe's. It has not fallen to the lot of any former Finance Minister, or of Sir R. Temple himself in any previous year of his Ministry, to lay before the public a statement showing the financial condition of India to be so thoroughly sound and prosperous as it appears from the Budget for 1872-73 to be at the present moment. The surplus for the financial year 1871-72, ending on the 31st ult., amounts to no less a sum than two millions and three-quarters (£2,700,000), and it is a comfort to know that this is a real surplus. The ordinary condition of Indian finance used to be that an imaginary surplus was declared one year for the sole purpose, seemingly, of creating an actual deficit the next. Thus, in 1865-66 the nominal surplus was £2,766,068, and in the year following the deficit came to £2,517,491. We have at least got a better system now, thanks to the courageous action of Lord Mayo in exposing the financial fictions with which the country had been beguiled; and the public, both here and at home, may rest perfectly convinced that there has been no juggling of any kind to produce the surplus of the year just closed. There is, however, in the figures before us, one of those annoying variations in the way of stating the accounts in which Indian financiers delight, and which make it impossible for any one, with only a telegraphic summary to go by, to compare the "Regular Estimate for 1871-72" with the "Budget Estimate" for the same year framed by Sir R. Temple in March, 1871. The reader should bear in mind that the accounts for each year in India pass through three stages, appearing in the form of a Budget Estimate one year, and a Regular Estimate the next, and finally giving the actual results when all the operations of the year have been brought to an end. Last year, of course, the accounts for 1871-72 were only in the first stage; and, as the Budget Estimate of Receipts during the year was £49,098,900, and the Regular Estimate now is £49,976,500, it would seem that the surplus of income is only about £900,000. The bulk of the surplus would appear from a like comparison of the Budget and Regular Estimates (the former being £49,005,500, and the latter only £47,276,500) to be due to reduction of ordinary expenditure. It is certain, however, that the surplus is mainly owing to an increase of receipts. We learn from our special telegram that opium has yielded a net sum of £1,850,000 in excess of what the Government expected, while the Income-tax has brought in about a quarter of a million more than was calculated upon; so that we have here more than two millions out of the two and three-quarters of the surplus accounted for. The balance may probably be ascribed rather to an increase under other heads of revenue than to lessened expenditure; and the discrepancies in the figures of the two years can only be explained by the supposition that some accounts which it has been usual to state in gross are this year stated in net, with the effect of cancelling certain amounts on both the receipt and the expenditure side. But the reality of the surplus may be easily proved. Adding the ordinary and extraordinary expenditure together, so as to show to a rupee all that was spent in 1871-72, we find that the total amount was only £49,013,300, while the income was £49,976,500. There is, therefore, a surplus of nearly a million left, even if the account be stated in this way; but, as the Secretary of State last year raised a loan which was more than sufficient to cover all the extraordinary expenditure, it is obvious that Sir R. Temple had to provide for ordinary expenditure alone, and that his surplus is therefore as large as he declares it to be.

INDIAN CIVIL ENGINEERING COLLEGE.—It has been determined by the Secretary of State for India in Council that, in the examination for admission into this college intended to be held in July, 1874, and in all future examinations, no candidate will be allowed to compete who shall, on the first of the month, have attained the age of twenty. For the examinations in 1872 and 1873 the maximum limit of age will remain, as at present, at twenty-one.—India-office, April 23, 1872.

ANGLO-MEDITERRANEAN TELEGRAPH COMPANY.—The report of the Anglo-Mediterranean Telegraph Company (Limited), to be presented at the extraordinary general meeting to be held on Tuesday, the 30th inst., states that the directors have agreed with the boards of the Falmouth Company, the Marseilles Company, and the British-Indian Submarine Telegraph Company to the following terms of amalgamation:—To issue to the stock and shareholders of the four companies fully paid shares of £10 each in a new company, in exchange for each £100 nominal amount in the Anglo-Mediterranean Company, £200; Falmouth Company, £120; Marseilles Company, £100; British Indian Submarine Company, £120; these relative proportions being based upon a computation of the present receipts and an estimate of the prospects of the several companies. The share capital of the new company required for the proposed distribution will be £3,307,000, but it is intended to fix the nominal capital of the company at £3,800,000, as further sums may hereafter be required for extensions. It is also proposed that the reserve funds, amounting together to about £70,000, shall form the basis of the reserve fund of the amalgamated company.

SANITARY.—The proposition made by the Sanitary Commissioner with the Government of India, to amalgamate the Vaccine and Sanitary establishments, has not been approved by the Government of the Punjab, his Honour considering that vaccination is too important to be made subordinate to general sanitary work. His Honour has also expressed himself opposed to the suggestion to make vaccination compulsory, as he is of opinion that in time the people will acknowledge its efficacy as a prophylactic, and will take to it voluntarily. That the popular prejudice against vaccination is already giving way, is evident from the last Report on Vaccine operations in the Punjab. One case of opposition has, however, attracted the attention of the local Government, that of the Rajah of Keonthal, and he has been addressed on the subject. The proximity of the Keonthal State to Simla renders it very advisable that the population should be protected from small-pox.—Pioneer.

Bengal.

CIVIL.—Mr. George Ricketts, C.B., will officiate as Commissioner of Allahabad during the absence on privilege leave for three months of Mr. O. F. Mayne, C.B. It is not yet known who will officiate for Mr. Ricketts as Judge, but Mr. Pollock is next on the list.—Mr. C. A. Elliott, hitherto only officiating as Secretary to the Government of the North-West Provinces, succeeded from the 1st inst. to the substantive appointment. The Pioneer congratulates Mr. Elliott, and no less the Government which has obtained his permanent services.

SERAMPORE.—At the time we are going to press a thunder and hail storm is passing over Serampore. The hail in all manner of shapes is extraordinarily large—we picked up one of an irregular oval shape fully two inches in length, and an inch and a-half in diameter, and this was not at all out of the ordinary run. The hail fell at first perfectly round, and about the size of an ordinary marble, but very soon their came lumps of ice as large as pigeon's eggs. These huge lumps are now falling almost as thickly as ordinary hail.—Friend of India, April 5.

MILITARY.—The head-quarters of the 2-25th King's Own Borders marched into Jubbulpore on the morning of Tuesday, the 26th of March, from Saugor, which station they had left on the 17th. Notwithstanding the great heat in the day-time, they had no sickness on the road. It is said the reason for this sudden and expensive move was the want of sufficient barrack-accommodation at Saugor. Although the men will be comfortable enough in this respect at Jubbulpore, the officers will be very much the reverse, as we are told there are absolutely no vacant bungalows, and the regiment cannot even secure a suitable mess-house.

CHOLERA IN THE 22ND N.I.—The Pioneer says that the 22nd N.I. has suffered from cholera on its way from Calcutta to Jhelum. There had been several cases of cholera among the men soon after leaving Tapai Mookh, and several more, four of which were fatal, on the way to Calcutta. On departing up-country the disease again broke out in the train. One man died on the platform at Mirzapore. The train was met at Allahabad by the Deputy Inspector of Hospitals, Dr. Rose, the Brigade Major and the officiating Quartermaster General, and it was decided not to allow the men to go further. The gallant regiment was taken into the cholera camp twelve miles north of Allahabad. Three fresh cases have since been reported.

THE CONVICT SHEPHERD.—The young man Shepherd, whose conviction and sentence for dacoity occasioned so much comment some three years ago, and whose youth and intrepidity excited no little sympathy among those who most gravely appreciated the character of his offence, has helped to suppress a rising in the Alipore Jail, of which he is an inmate, and thereby assisted the authorities in quelling what might have been an emeute attended with much bloodshed. We trust his friends will make use of this circumstance in a further attempt to obtain mitigation of his sentence. Shepherd can yet be little more than twenty-three years of age, and the authorities might be glad of the plea to exercise the prerogative of mercy on his behalf.—Indian Public Opinion.

TIGERS IN TOWNS.—Tigers in these days seem to have conceived an alarming predilection for crowded cities. We heard the other day of the performances of one of these beasts at Benares. Then again at Ghogha a correspondent of ours has been scared out of his wits by the lawless conduct of a pair of them. And we have the misfortune to hear that another of these obtrusive visitors turned things perfectly topsy-turvy at Krishnaghur. "Yesterday," says a correspondent, "in broad daylight, a man, who happened to pass by a culvert on the south-west corner of Peter's Tank, near the Collector's, was dangerously wounded by a tigress that was lying concealed under it. Prompt information was sent to Mr. Oldham, the Joint Magistrate, who was then in his office. He immediately proceeded to the place, followed by all his cutchery men, and a few other European gentlemen. Mr. Bodham shot through the leg of the animal, when it came very furiously out of the culvert, and attacked and wounded a boy. At this critical moment Mr. Bodham again fired at the animal, and it fell flat upon the ground, and was soon killed. The tigress had four cubs in her womb."—Indian Mirror.

MR. M. H. COURT.—The native gentry of Allahabad met yesterday in the Khoosroo Bagh to bid farewell to M. H. Court, Esq., C.S.I., Commissioner of the Allahabad Division, who is held in great esteem by them. The natives at first wished to present him with a testimonial acknowledging the kindness and consideration they invariably met at his hands. This, however, was refused by Mr. Court as being against Government orders; they therefore invited him to give them the satisfaction of seeing him once more to their heart's content, to which he agreed, and met them by appointment in the place, and spent nearly an hour in holding familiar conversations with all his old acquaintances and friends present. All felt more than they could express in offering their good wishes to him, and he was overpowered by his feelings in the attempt to return his acknowledgments to them. Mr. Rust, the photographer, took advantage of this opportunity, and obtained permission to photograph the scene. No doubt it will command a large sale amongst the natives.—Pioneer, April 3.

A SAD OCCURRENCE.—A sad event occurred the other day at Lahore. Gunner Morris Brown, of the 4-13th Royal Artillery, stationed at Fort Govindgurh, Umritsur, proceeded on leave, accompanied by his wife, for the purpose of visiting Lahore. He and his wife remained in the fort of Lahore during the night of the 28th inst. On Friday morning, the 29th, they, accompanied by another married woman of the same battery, left the fort in good health and spirits on their way to the railway station, for the purpose of returning to the battery at Umritsur. They had hardly been more than three or four minutes on the road when Mrs. Brown asked for a draught of water and to be allowed to sit down. Her husband placed her on the ground and called for water, when she immediately expired. The event naturally excited the most painful sympathy, and the funeral was attended by a large number of the troops stationed in the fort.—Pioneer, April 4.

TRADE OF INDIA.—The accounts relating to the trade and navigation of British India for January 1871-72 show that during the month the total value of duty free and dutiable imports to Bengal was Rs. 11,336,336, as compared with Rs. 14,781,129 in the corresponding month of the previous year, and Rs. 11,935,364 in the same period of 1869-70. The imports to Bombay were valued at Rs. 11,949,895; to Sind, at Rs. 568,291; to Madras at Rs. 4,171,899, and to British Burmah at Rs. 1,157,688, making a gross total of Rs. 29,084,109, against Rs. 29,421,381, in the same month of 1870-71, and Rs. 31,347,498 in 1869-70. The total value of exports from the five provinces of Bengal, Bombay, Sind, Madras and British Burmah during January last was Rs. 72,859,282, a large increase over the value for the same months of the two preceding years. During the ten months ending 31st January last no fewer than 2,931 vessels, with a tonnage of 1,433,294, entered the several ports of British India. As compared with the number that entered the same ports during the corresponding months of 1869-70, these figures show a slight falling off.

A SUCCESSFUL EXPERIMENT.—An experiment of some interest has been prosecuted to success at Oraie. In 1866 the Jaloun Dispensary Committee suggested the establishment of a kind of Druggist's Hall for the sale of genuine and approved medicines in supersession of the often deleterious and generally inappropriate drugs administered by native quacks. A shop was opened at Oraie rent-free, and Rs. 300 was advanced for the purchase of a stock of English medicines, and a native dispenser of adequate qualifications was employed at Rs. 8 per mensem. The medicines, i.e., the English ones, were purchased from English chemists in this country, and were retailed at a somewhat advanced price; nevertheless the demand for them from native patients was such that the advance of Rs. 300 was repaid within six months. Branch shops have been opened at Calpee, Koonch, and Madhogurh; and on the 1st January, 1872, there was a cash balance in hand of Rs. 100, and a stock of medicines, &c., valued at Rs. 652. The articles most in demand are quinine, chlorodyne, peppermint, soda, tea, and arrowroot.—Pioneer.

IRRIGATION.—From the Revenue Report of the Irrigation Department of the Punjab for 1869-70 we learn that the financial results of the year 1869-70 on the permanent canals were not so favourable as those of the previous year, but owing to the larger supply brought down the several rivers, the returns from the inundation canals were above the average. The fall of rain, though double that of 1868-69, was still below the average. As in the North-Western Provinces, so in the Punjab, a deficiency of rain in the early part of the khureef season led to a large increased area being irrigated at that time, and to a diminution in the rubbee crop. The net result was a profit from direct income of Rs. 10,72,690 on the aggregate transactions of the year, or Rs. 19,15,133, if the indirect returns are taken into calculation, giving a percentage of Rs. 7 and 12-52, respectively, on the outlay. The aggregate profits amounted to 48-91 per cent. of the gross direct income, to 87-33 per cent. of the total income, direct and indirect. The areas irrigated by the respective works amounted to 1,261,410 acres, distributed as follows:—Western Jumna Canal, 496,543 acres; Baree Doab Canal, 233,927; Delhi and Goorgaon Works, 9,746; Inundation Canals, Upper Sutlej, 148,924; ditto Lower ditto, 243,094; Indus Canals, 129,176—total, 1,261,410 acres.

THE BUDGET OF THE NORTH-WEST PROVINCES.—We have before us the Budget estimate of the Government of the North-West Provinces for the year 1872-3. The receipts are put down at Rs. 1,61,69,797, and the expenses at Rs. 1,62,21,985. We do not quite see through the object of this budgeting for a deficit, but should hardly think it was a mode of proceeding contemplated by the Supreme Government in its financial scheme of last year. The excess of expenditure for the year over 1872-73 is £84,079, and the Lieutenant-Governor remarks that "this excess is entirely due to the Department of Public Works, under which head alone the excess amounts to £88,110; while the cost of the remaining departments is very nearly the same in the two years. This bears out the view taken by his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor at the time, and expressed in the resolution quoted at the head of this order, as well as in his Honour's speech in the Legislative Council at Allahabad on April 1st, 1871, that the allotment to the other departments was sufficient, but that the grant to Public Works having been based on the short expenditure of 1870-71, the amount would be found unequal to the requirements of future years, and would have to be largely supplemented from local taxation." It does not appear from the Budget how the deficit is proposed to be met; but probably it is hoped that it will be met out of Sir Richard Temple's surplus.—Englishman.

THE NEW MONEY-ORDER RULES.—A correspondent writes:—"You have not said a word about the new postal rule. I think it is a most arbitrary one. It is most vexatious and will not add much to the coffers of the Post-office, for the public will also try to dodge the offices by folding the money order, &c., in such a way as to be invisible. Don't you agree with me that the order is a monstrous and niggardly affair? If you do, why not put your best strong foot on it? It is a question that will cause much discontent amongst natives as well as Europeans. I do not think the Postmaster General can compel a person to pay an extra rate on letters containing valuables whether 'apparent or known,' unless he holds the department responsible for loss in transit. I could understand the Indian Post-office proposing a rule to the effect that if persons wished to ensure the safety of a draft or currency note they could do so by paying a premium, of say $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., with the proviso that the draft or note is shown to the Post-office clerk and the letter sealed in his presence. The Postal Department of course would take such steps as it considered necessary to secure the integrity of its servants. This system would be a prudent one, would cause no miscarriage, and I think I might predict that it would work well, and be adopted by at least one section of the public, namely, the cautious and timid. The rule however as it stood before was practically good. I have for the last twelve years done considerable business in India, and have forwarded remittances through the post by Hoonches, bank notes and money-orders and have only once lost anything. This was half of a currency note, and as I had the other half in my possession, I stopped payment, and in due time recovered the amount from the Currency Department. You will understand from this that my plan is only to enclose half notes in a letter, and some time after to send the second halves under another cover."—Friend of India.

Madras.

DEATH AT AKYAB.—We learn of the sudden death of Mr. Phillips, Collector of Customs of Akyab. He was out walking one morning, when he was seized with paralysis, accompanied with apoplexy, and died two days after. He has left a large young family.

ACQUITTAL OF MR. STEWART.—Mr. Stewart, the manager of Mr. Powell's stud farm in the Nizam's dominions, who was attacked by the natives, and in self-defence shot one man dead and wounded two others, has been tried on a charge of manslaughter. He was acquitted.

MILITARY.—The Madras troops sent to the frontier of Arrakan during the late Loshai expedition are shortly expected to return to Akyab, where the local authorities hope that one wing of a regiment will be permanently stationed, as the late Viceroy is stated to have promised the Commissioner should be the case.

COFFEE PLANTERS IN TRAVANCORE.—Now that, on account of the surplus at home, Mr. Lowe is about to do away with the duty on coffee, Indian coffee planters should, the Madras Times advises, do their utmost to better themselves. "They labour under several very cruel and abnormal burdens. For instance, coffee planters in Travancore have to pay, over and above a land-tax, a tax of five per cent. on their coffee as export duty! This is an unjustifiably severe tax, and as such will do the Travancore Government no good."

THE MOHURRUM IN MYSORE.—During the Mohurram festival in Mysore there was a terrible row between the Hindoos and Mahomedans. The Hoolce festival also came on at the same time with the Mohurram, and the whole town was in a terrible state of excitement on the 24th ult. Two persons lost their lives in the disturbance, and a few others were wounded. Colonel Renton, town magistrate, succeeded in effecting a reconciliation between the two parties, and it is hoped that these unseemly disputes will not take place hereafter. The Mahomedans were, a contemporary says, willing to effect a compromise, and were foremost in the matter.

COAL FIELDS IN INDIA.—The quantity of coal recently discovered in the Nizam's dominions is beyond estimation. Mr. T. M. Hardy Johnston, the secretary of his Highness's public works department, who has shown much ability in the organisation and management of this branch of the Nizam's service, has recently made a six weeks' tour of inspection to the coal-fields. The first shaft, which has been named Sir Salar Jung, after the Nizam's renowned Prime Minister, is already in working order; the seam, which is excellent steam coal, is 30ft. thick, and only 80ft. from the surface. Two more shafts are being sunk about a mile apart, in one of which the seam is of the enormous and unparalleled thickness of 50ft. It is important to observe that besides immensely increasing the wealth and resources of the Nizam's territories, these vast coal beds will ere long supply the entire eastern market, and proportionately reduce the heavy demand upon our own coal supplies.

NOISY PUNKAHs.—In reference to the system of pulling punkahs at present undergoing trial in the General Hospital, and about to be extended to the regimental side of the building, the Deputy Inspector-General of Hospitals points out that, as the punkahs are at present hung, a squeaking noise is produced when they are in action, which is highly undesirable in sick wards. Mr. Orr, who is conducting the experiments in the hospital, suggests a plan which appears to Dr. Elliott would prevent all unpleasant noise in pulling the punkahs, and would prove cheap and efficient in every way. At present the mode of suspension is by iron joints and sockets. Were the iron rods split or top-curved, and suspended by two loops on hooks, and the loops saturated with plumbago and grease, the noise would be done away with, and the alteration need not be expensive. The Government have desired the superintending engineer to take the necessary steps to remedy the noise complained of.—Madras Mail.

COLONEL CHARLES ELLIOT, C.B.—We understand that Colonel Charles Elliot, of the Mysore Commission, left for England by the French mail steamer last Saturday, and thereby forfeits his appointment as Superintendent of the Ashtagram Division, three years not having elapsed since his return from sick leave to Europe. His late severe illness, the result of over-work, has rendered the move almost absolutely necessary, and, though a change to the hills might bring with it fresh vigour sufficient to allow of his tiding over the stipulated period necessary for the retention of his staff appointment, still he wisely resolved to avoid the risk of a longer sojourn in the East. Colonel Elliot is a younger brother of Sir Walter Elliot. He entered the Madras Artillery in 1845. After serving with his Battery in the Straits and elsewhere, he joined the Mysore Commission in 1851. This period of his service in the Commission was comparatively short, as he happened to be one of the Officers selected by Sir Mark Cubbon, at the desire of the Government of India, for employment in the Central Provinces. The Mutiny found him at Raipore, and during those trying times he rendered right good service, which was rewarded by the Companionship of the Bath. In 1862 he was re-appointed to the Mysore Commission as Superintendent of a division. The settlement on two different occasions of the late Maharajah's debts, and the unenviable duty of reducing the large Palace List, fell to his lot, and may be regarded as services of a special nature rendered to the Mysore State. The task of breaking up a large retinue of hereditary followers was indeed no easy matter; but his great tact and method, combined with an eminently persuasive manner, enabled Colonel Elliot to successfully accomplish it within a very short space of time. A better selection for this particular duty it would have been difficult to make, and it has always been a marvel to us how such valuable services should have been passed over without some tangible proof of acknowledgment. His nomination to the Guardianship of the present Maharajah would have been but a well merited reward, and the sinecure would have afforded rest and ease to a distinguished officer, who had done his duty cheerfully and well. The Mysore Commission loses in him one of its best officers. Among his European conferees his many amiable qualities will not be soon forgotten, and the natives of Mysore will miss in him one who was universally respected by them. We wish Colonel Elliot many years of health and happiness in his native land; and hope that his ripe and varied experience of this country may yet be turned to good account at home to India's benefit.—Madras Mail, March 30.

FROM BAGHDAD TO BABYLON.

BAGHDAD, Feb. 12.—A few days' stay at this fine old city has given me an opportunity of making a most interesting tour of a week in Mesopotamia, during which I have visited the sacred Shia shrines of Hossein at Kerbela, Meshed Ali at Nedjif, the ruins of Kufa, the old and now ruined Caliphate city, Ezekiel's tomb at Kifel, the Birs Nimroud, or tower of Babel of early travellers, the town of Hillah, and the ruins of old Babylon. The weather was fine and clear on the morning of Monday, February 5, when, with another English gentleman, a Cavass, or a Christian servant, named Elias, a capital fellow for the trip, kindly supplied by Colonel Herbert, her Britannic Majesty's Consul General, to act as guide, a servant to cook and look after the baggage, a couple of baggage animals, and a couple of sices to tend the horses, we set out shortly after daybreak. Our course was over the great plain westward, and we had to cross the lower bridge of boats leading over to the west side of the city. The bazaars had not yet opened, though men and donkeys laden with vegetables and other provisions were arriving in town from suburban village gardens. Our animals were not first-rate, for want approaching to famine, and dearthness of corn and hay, has made it difficult for many to keep their animals alive even, and not a few have died. Hence it is not to be wondered at that many are lean. They, however, cantered away over the fine open plain, passing numerous caravans of camels and mules which were just starting on their several routes to distant and perhaps desert places. We passed several large square buildings at intervals of eight or ten miles, looking very much like fortified castles, though the walls were less lofty. These were caravanserais. They consist of a series of brick or stone arched cloisters, built around a large quadrangle, in which is sometimes one or more wells. Large strong massive doors, kept by a janitor, stand open during the day, and are shut at night, admit visitors or keep out Arab plunderers or other marauders. The cloisters are divided internally into arched spaces, which will accommodate a family or party of three or four, giving them room to cook and eat their food, and to spread their mats for repose. The inner arches are sheltered and warm in the cold or wet season, and the outer arches, which are more airy and exposed, are tenanted in the dry and warm weather. Several of these caravanserais, which are built by Moslem charity, I observed with more than 160 such arches, and would consequently afford shelter for five or six hundred persons. At one of these, named Mahmodieh, about twenty-one miles from Baghdad, we halted for a brief period shortly after noon, and refreshed ourselves and horses. The place was quite a small town in its way, with its shops for the sale of bread, dates, flour, sugar, grain, and hay or straw. And here strange groups of wayfarers were to be seen, some with asses laden with skins or produce, camels with huge bales of piece goods or dubbers of oil or ghee, packmen with their varied stores, women with chatties of water or milk, and sweetmeat men with trays of dainty halwa; and generally a few ragged or more than half-naked beggars and other hangers-on at the doors. After giving the horses a feed and refreshing ourselves we again set out. Our route had been almost direct south from the time of our leaving Baghdad, and we had close beside our tract the wires and posts of the Ottoman Government Electric Telegraph. We now left them and passed on to the westward to Mosaib, a small town of ten or fifteen thousand inhabitants, who cultivate gardens and date groves on the Banks of the Euphrates. Here we crossed to the west or right bank by a bridge of boats, and it being evening we halted for the night in a large and well built serai. Though the night was somewhat cold, yet, with the aid of a fire, a good hearty meal and warm rugs, we managed to sleep comfortably till four or five the next morning. Our course lay now for about twenty miles nearly westward along a fine canal, about five yards wide, which we crossed by an arch. This canal, which is named the Hooseinea canal, leads from the Euphrates to Kerbela, the sacred city of Shia pilgrimage. Boats laden with grain and merchandise pass to and fro along the canal, and its stream of deep sweet water (the jugular vein of Kerbela) irrigates gardens fertile with corn, vegetables, dates, oranges, and pomegranates, for several miles to the east of the city. These present a strange contrast to the desert around, which is covered with a short stunted prickly shrub, or whitened with a coat of saltpetre.

We arrived at Kerbela shortly after noon, and were very courteously received by Ahmed Ali Khan, the British India Agent here, and who is a descendant of an Oude family of high rank. To him the Nawab Ikbal Doula, formerly of Lucknow, who resides in Baghdad, as well as Colonel Herbert, had given us letters of introduction, as also to Muzur Pasha, the Governor. After refreshing the inner man, and putting the outer a little in order, we sallied forth to call on the Governor and to see the city. The Governor received us with much civility, and ordered coffee and nargillas and small cigarettes to be brought, and after a brief chat, in which he expressed a hope that the railway which had been talked of would at no distant day pass this way, he sent a couple of soldiers to show us round the city, as well as promised us a guard of four for next day to protect us from the Arabs. One was surprised to find so populous a place here on the very verge of the desert and border of the Pashalic, for the city is said to contain 30,000 inhabitants. It is surrounded by walls, but it is just now being greatly enlarged by the addition of new streets and bazaars of shops, laid out in a style more European than Oriental. Many of the houses, too, are lofty, but above them all rise the noble gilded dome of the tomb or mosque of the martyr Hossein, and the blue enamelled dome over the tomb of Shaik Abbas, the father of Mansur, the founder of Baghdad. Both tombs or mosques are splendid buildings, and each has two lofty and graceful minarets coated with blue, white, and yellow enamelled tiles like the minars of Kathemaime and Baghdad; such tiles I have seen on domes in Hyderabad, Sukkur, and other places in Scinde. There is a great stream of pilgrims almost constantly to this place; many come to die, and thousands after death are brought to be buried near their revered Hossein. Hence, there are not a few in deep poverty and want, and large charities have been left by the Royal families in Oude for the relief of the Moslem pilgrims, and especially Indian poor. Above Rs. 1,400 per mensem are thus administered in Kerbela and Nedjif by English agents, to whom it has been left in trust. After visiting the Governor we were invited by the commandant of the garrison, Colonel Osman Beg, to inspect the soldiers' barracks, a building in a fine open yard, the "Horse Guards" of Kerbela. He told us there were about 4,000 troops on the Euphrates from the town of Hit, a little above, to Nedjif, away to the south. He appeared to be a thorough soldier—tall and manly, and more like an Englishman than any other Turkish soldier I had met. The Colonel had, however, a feeling heart, and I noticed a timid and graceful gazelle butting playfully at him to obtain dates, while a fine Persian cat purred at his boots as he stood in the yard. After ordering coffee, pipes, and cigarettes, the Colonel chatted on the state of the country, the want of canals, a railway, and of the unsettled state of the Arabs, and after promising us that our guard should be in readiness at an early hour in the morning we took our departure. Next morning we took leave of the hospitable abode of our friend, Ahmed Ali, and started for Nedjif, about fourteen parasangs off, or a distance of more than forty miles, with only one serai or place of shelter about half way on the road. The morning, too, was far from promising; it had begun to rain, and before we had got far it rained and blew like a winter's day, and continued to do so until we nearly reached Khanal Hamed, a distance of about twenty-two miles, when we halted between one and two P.M. We had in spite of the rain and wind seen some of the Arab horsemen out on the desert, and the sowars, one of whom rode up to them, said they were robbers. They however passed on to the westward, and were soon lost in the distance. These are the men who live in their saddles and subsist by plundering travellers and other more settled Arab tribes. In passing on from Kerbela, the ruined mound of Birs Nimroud was visible for some hours on our left, rising like a conical mountain towards the east. The river Hindiyah, an overflow of the Euphrates, ran between us and the mound, and large swamps extended for miles, in which immense flocks of pelicans and geese were sporting. The Arabs dig round holes about six feet in diameter here, and about two or three feet deep, in which they hide, so as to shoot these birds or other game that may come near. The plains here, and indeed all the way across Mesopotamia from Baghdad, are entirely destitute of trees, except where the date tree is cultivated by irrigation. Almost everywhere, too, the huge whitened bones of camels, those stranded ships of the desert, are to be seen, and make one shudder at the thought of being left alone with an exhausted animal amid the solitary waste.

Miscellaneous.

IRRIGATION.—The papers relating to the Taptee Irrigation project—long huddled away on the Secretariat shelves—are, we rejoice to see, at last given out for public use.—Times of India.

MEDALS FOR THE ABYSSINIAN CAMPAIGN were presented to the 2nd Grenadier Regiment N. I. on Wednesday last. When the regiment went to Abyssinia the officer commanding was Colonel Muter. On Saturday last Major-General J. T. Grant, C.B., Commanding the division, explained to the men of the brigade all the history of the services of the regiment in the Abyssinian campaign.—Deccan Herald, April 5.

DENGUE FEVER.—A correspondent writes to the Pioneer to deny that "dengue" fever was "imported" by H.M.S. Crocodile via Bombay. The "dengue," he says, was rife in Howrah all last December, and is known to all Indian medical men of long standing, though it has not been active of late.

HEAVY FALL OF RAIN NEAR SHOLAPORE.—There has been a heavy fall of rain between Barsee and Sholapore, so heavy as to carry away some of the telegraph posts, and keep back the trains passing along at the time. This will help to fill the tanks in that neighbourhood, and palliate the evils caused by scarcity of water. We only wish Poonah could have had a share of the blessing.—Deccan Herald, April 3.

MILITARY.—There are, we learn, numerous changes impending among the brigade commands of the Bombay Army, though it is not yet definitely known what those particular changes are to be. General Stock, however, succeeds Sir George Malcolm, and Colonel Schneider is appointed a brigadier, vice General Lynch, resigned. General Schneider, we believe, goes to Aden as brigadier and political resident combined, as soon as Government can provide for General Trememheere.—Times of India.

WEDDINGS IN KATTIAWAR.—The natives of Kattiawar appear to have a good notion of combination. There are a number of villages in those parts, where the people are of the same race. The Hindu custom is, as everybody knows, to spend plenty of money on weddings; but the people of those villages being poor cannot afford to give great feasts, hence they often resort to the expedient of performing the marriage ceremonies in hundreds, each family contributing a certain sum to make up the fund required for the festivities. Such an event lately occurred in a village near Rajkote among the shepherd community. The marrying couples were about one thousand in number. Families from thirty or forty miles' distance arrived with their brides and bridegrooms to join in the general event. The guests numbered about fifteen thousand.

ORDERLY-ROOM CLERKS.—H.E. the Gov. general of India in Council is pleased to notify that orderly-room clerks of hill depots shall, like regimental orderly-room clerks, receive an increase of sixpence per diem after an uninterrupted service of three years; but, as such appointments are only temporary, the incumbents will not acquire the status of regimental orderly-room clerks, as prescribed by Royal Warrant. The provisions of this order are applicable to the three Presidencies.

EXHIBITION, 1872.—The Commander-in-Chief is pleased to announce that the Soldiers' Industrial Exhibition of 1872 will take place at Poona, in the month of September next (the exact date will be given hereafter), and will be conducted under the same regulations which governed the Exhibition of 1871 (G.O.C. No. 412 of July 19, 1871). H.E. accordingly requests that regimental committees be at once formed in every corps, British and native, and that the names of the officers composing them be communicated without delay to the secretary to the Central Committee at Poona, to whom the list of proposed contributions and monthly progress reports must also be transmitted. The Central Committee will be appointed under the orders of the Major-general Commanding Poona Division of the Army. Detailed instructions will be hereafter published.

TRANSPORT AND PASSAGE.—The annexed extract from a letter, No. 294, dated London, the 22nd November, 1871, from the Right Hon. the Secretary of State for India, to his Excellency the Governor general in Council, is promulgated for general information and guidance, with reference to G.O. No. 471 [Military Department No. 56, dated Jan. 6, to Quartermaster general], dated 11th May, 1865 [S.O., page 71], publishing the Royal Passage Warrant of 1865:—"Your Excellency will observe that the interpretation placed upon Clause 3 at page 14 of the Royal Passage Warrant of 1865 entitles the families of officers doing duty with troops in every description of vessel to free passages. I have approved of this interpretation of the warrant, and request that it may be adopted in India for the future. The messing rates laid down at page 6 of the Royal Warrant will be chargeable in this country." The following Horse Guards' G.O. No. 95 of 1871 is published for information and guidance:—"The forms of mess certificate hitherto in use on board her Majesty's troopships will in future be replaced by a statement that the officers named therein were messed for the periods mentioned. This statement will be signed by the military commanding officer only. Any complaints which individual officers may consider that they have reason to make in regard to their messing, will not be inserted in the certificate, but should be forwarded through the commanding officer, as pointed out in G.O. No. 5 of 1869, in the same manner as complaints upon other matters. SERVICE QUALIFYING FOR THE STAFF CORPS.—The Right Hon. the Gov. gen. in Council is pleased to notify that previous service for a year in the survey, public works, commissariat, and stud departments, and in the police, will not in future exempt a candidate for the staff corps, who may desire to enter it with the view of obtaining civil or departmental employment, from the rule which requires a year's service with native troops as a preliminary condition to his admission as a probationer for the corps. Such service with native troops will hereafter be always required, excepting in very special cases, before a candidate is accepted as a probationer for the corps in any department, civil or military.

ENGINEERS.—The following letter from the Right Hon. the Secretary of State for India, No. 313, dated India-office, London, Dec. 14, 1871, to the Right Hon. the Governor-General of India in Council, is published in the Indian Gazette:—"Your despatch No. 198, dated July 14, 1871, asks for information as to the position of an officer of the Indian cadre of royal engineers, on the seconded list, who might, while in England, be ordered to do duty at the depot. I consider that if an officer on the seconded list were ordered to depot duty while on furlough with retention of appointment, he would be kept on that list, and would have a right to return to his appointment until he had been absent from India for the period of his furlough. An officer who might join the depot at the expiration of his furlough would cease to be seconded."

THE BOMBAY BANK.

With reference to Mr. Gregory's motion, which stands for May 3, the Echo has received a copy of a letter addressed by Mr. J. S. Mill to Col. Cowper, of which the following is an extract:—

I find that the Government throughout the whole course of the bank's misconduct were as utterly regardless of their obligation to watch and control its management as if no such obligation had existed. They gave no instructions to the Government directors. They allowed the bank to be carried on under the new charter without even any bye-laws to govern and direct the management, and they neither obtained nor sought from their representatives on the board any information respecting its proceedings. The great pressure of public business on an Indian Government might be some, though a very insufficient, excuse for this quiescence, as long as there was nothing to excite suspicion. But the quiescence continued after the mismanagement and embarrassments of the bank were so notorious, even in England, as to alarm the Secretary of State, who felt it his duty to warn the Bombay Government. After this the conduct of the Government was, if anything, more discreditable than before. Their unwillingness to admit that anything was seriously amiss almost amounted to complicity. To the warnings and questionings which they now frequently received from their superiors in England and at Calcutta they answered smooth things, extenuating to the utmost the amount of mischief, abetting the directors in withholding information demanded of them, and acting as if it was their deliberate purpose to screen the misconduct of the bank, though possibly only desirous of screening their own neglect of the duty of supervision. It is shown that had the Bombay Government, even after they become aware of the evil, done their duty in preventing further malversation, the bank, notwithstanding the great losses already sustained, might have been saved from insolvency, and the property of the shareholders in great part preserved to them. By not having done this, even if by nothing else, the Bombay Government made itself morally a party to the misconduct of the directors, and responsible for it to the sufferers.

It may be said that the majority of the directors, including those most actively guilty, were elected by the shareholders. But, considering the extreme difficulty under which shareholders labour, as well in England as in India, in choosing trustworthy directors, or in controlling them, it is certain that the shareholders placed (as they had every reason to think themselves warranted in placing) their principal reliance on the Government, whose representatives on the board, themselves high in the public service, must, if they did their duty to Government, even as the largest shareholder in the bank, take care that its interests, in common with those of the other shareholders, should receive ordinary and decent regard from those to whose charge they were entrusted. The shareholders would have had no claim to indemnity from the Government for ordinary losses, or for such as were occasioned by irresistible circumstances, or even by ordinary and remedial mismanagement. But they have a just claim in foro conscientis to reparation from the Government for loss sustained by gross and criminal violation of duty on the part of its agents. An able speaker in the House of Commons who was master of the facts could make a speech on them which would resound through the whole country, and would be damaging to any Government that resisted the claim.

PROPOSED MEMORIAL TO THE LATE LORD MAYO.

On Saturday morning a numerous and influential meeting was held at Willis's-rooms, under the presidency of H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh, to consider whether a fund should not be raised to be applied, under the direction of a committee of subscribers, in such a manner as will evince their regard for, and admiration of, Lord Mayo's memory as a distinguished Indian administrator and a valued public servant, and as one whose estimable qualities in private life especially endeared him to all classes, creeds, and parties. Among those present were Lord Shaftesbury, K.G., Mr. Disraeli, M.P., Lord Derby, the Duke of Richmond, the Duke of Cambridge, Lord Redesdale, Lord Sandhurst, Lord John Manners, Mr. Ward Hunt, Viscount Barrington, Mr. Cowper Temple, M.P., Viscount Crichton, Colonel Taylor, Mr. C. Dalrymple, M.P., &c.

The Chairman (H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh), in a few words, explained the object of the meeting, and then called upon

Mr. Disraeli to move the first resolution, who said they had met, amongst other things, to express their opinion that some enduring memorial should be raised in this country to the eminent statesman whose untimely end had deprived the country of an invaluable servant, and his friends of one they admired and loved. The public career of Lord Mayo was by no means a short one. Previously to his appointment to the great Viceroyalty he had served his country for twenty years in the House of Commons. Although he made no pretensions to great powers in the House, still those who had been acquainted with his Parliamentary life recognised in Lord Mayo qualities which would, without doubt, have rendered his career there distinguished. (Cheers.) During the time he was there he connected himself with two most difficult measures, and succeeded in carrying them through the House. They were questions which demanded a great knowledge of detail. One of those measures was the reform of the Civil Service, which obtained for him the gratitude of the whole of that powerful body. The other measure with which he was connected referred to the most important trade of his native land—the distillery trade. He carried through a measure which relieved that important industry from several regulations which bore very hard upon them. The right hon. gentleman concluded by saying that the memorial should be one that would last for ever, and be well worthy of the great man who had passed away. The resolution was as follows:—"That it is desirable to commemorate in this country, in some enduring and becoming manner, the noble character and eminent services of the late Earl of Mayo, Viceroy of India."

Lord Sandhurst seconded, and it was carried.

The Duke of Cambridge moved the second resolution:—"That a committee be appointed to receive subscriptions, and to decide on the form the memorial should take."

This was seconded by the Duke of Richmond and carried.

Lord Derby moved, "That this meeting desires to convey to Lady Mayo their most sincere and heartfelt sympathy with her under her affliction, which affliction they venture to hope may in some degree, however slight, be soothed by the universal feeling of respect towards him whom she has lost." He said he knew the late Lord Mayo during very many years as a colleague in his Parliamentary life, and latterly as his colleague in administrative office, and he stood there as a witness, however little it might be needed, to that which had already been said. He then spoke of Lord Mayo's personal character in terms of high praise, and said it was their duty to raise some memorial, a duty which they owed to England, who, even with all her wealth of political ability, could not afford to look over and forget examples of patriotic and self-denying service. (Loud cheers.)

Lord Shaftesbury seconded the resolution, and it was carried.

Mr. Gathorne Hardy, M.P., moved, and Mr. Cowper-Temple, M.P., seconded a cordial vote of thanks to H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh for his kindness in presiding, which was briefly acknowledged by the Chairman.

The proceedings then terminated.

FUNERAL OF LORD MAYO.

The Enchantress having arrived in Kingston Harbour on the evening of the 24th, the funeral progress through Dublin took place the next day.

The movement of the troops to the various points assigned them was the first indication of the approaching display, and at eleven o'clock the streets were lined along the route of procession. All the available troops in the garrison were assembled to give splendour to the ceremonial. The arrangements for the disposal of them were under the direction of Colonel Mayow, the Deputy-Quartermaster General, and were effectively executed. The Coldstream Guards furnished a guard of honour consisting of one regimental captain, two subalterns, and the usual proportion of non-commissioned officers and 100 rank and file, and were drawn up near the landing-place at the Custom-house at eleven o'clock this morning. The King's Dragoon Guards contributed an officer's guard of honour, consisting of an officer and twenty men, who were in attendance upon his Excellency the Lord Lieutenant. They were in waiting at Dublin Castle at half-past eleven o'clock. A squadron of the same corps formed an escort to accompany the remains. It was ordered to proceed at the conclusion of the ceremonial to Rath-coole, where it was met by another escort from Newbridge.

The tenantry who were to head the procession, to the number of 150, awaited the removal of the remains from the Enchantress, which came up from Kingstown at 10.30, and took her place opposite the Custom-house. They were a very respectable looking body of men, and, wearing white scarves and hatbands, were conspicuous throughout the ceremony. The marines and sailors from the Vanguard, with their officers, who represented the Royal Navy, were also in readiness and marched along Eden-quay to Carlisle-bridge, there forming. The personal friends of the late Viceroy remained on the quay. Beside the yacht a gun-carriage was drawn up to receive the coffin, which was removed without difficulty by the appliances provided for the purpose. At twelve o'clock all the materials from which the fabric of the brilliant spectacle was to be constructed were distributed in regular order to be fitted by the potent architect of State pageants, Sir Bernard Burke, who attended in full splendour, with his official insignia. The line of quays and the streets through which the procession was to move presented then a highly picturesque and animated aspect. The shipping in the river had their flags displayed half-mast high; flags were also hung out from some of the houses: every window and balcony were filled with spectators. Indeed, the people swarmed in every direction and every public place; they had invaded the rigging of the ships, climbed the battlements of the bridges, the roofs of houses, the tops of cabs, of omnibuses, railways, monuments and structures of every kind. They clothed in masses of living drapery the Bank of Ireland and other public buildings, and they stood in dense crowds along the footways. The military lines, standing at intervals, kept back the concourse, leaving in the centre an open space, on each side of which they formed a brilliant edging. The view at Carlisle-bridge and Westmoreland-street, where the cavalry bands were massed and the Artillery and Coldstream Guards were formed, was strikingly vivid, and presented a strange combination of objects. At 12.30 his Excellency the Lord Lieutenant, accompanied by the Marquis of Lorne, and attended by a guard of honour, rode from Dublin Castle along the lines to the Custom-house. His Excellency, who was attired in plain dress, with the star and riband of St. Patrick, rode a magnificent charger. The Marquis of Lorne, dressed in uniform as colonel of the Argyshire Artillery Militia, was also splendidly mounted. On the arrival of his Excellency the signal was given to be ready, and in a short time the procession was fully marshalled, and moved forward.

The tenantry walked eight abreast at the head of the procession; and as they moved slowly on, arrayed in their white scarves, they contrasted strikingly with the brilliant scarlet and blue uniform of the military and the dark masses of the civilians on each side of the lines in the distance. They were followed by the Marines, who marched ten deep in three bodies, and then came the sailors ten deep, preceded by their officers in full uniform. At first they wavered a little, but soon got in compact order, and from College-green, where the procession was fully developed, they moved quite steadily. The banners of the Orders of the Star of India and of St. Patrick were borne in charge of the Knights in single file, and stood out conspicuously. The insignia of the orders were represented upon black ground. The spectacle was displayed in Dame-street with magnificent effect. From end to end the street was filled with the solid masses of military, whose brilliant uniforms and trappings, splendid in the sun, presented a combination of colours of rare harmony and beauty. As the lines advanced with slow and measured pace, the bands poured forth from 160 instruments, in perfect accord, the strains of a solemn march, which mingled with the suggestive sound of the minute-guns. The cavalry numbered ten abreast, and the lines were kept with wonderful compactness and precision. The deputation from the India-office was conveyed in an open carriage at the head of the State equipages of the Lord-Lieutenant, in official uniforms. Among the representatives of the Indian Government who attended to do honour to the late Viceroy was the son of Major L. Barrow, Commissioner of Oude, who was prevented by illness from being present himself. The coffin was concealed from view, having been covered by the Union Jack. The external one contained the following simple inscription:—

"Richard Southwell Bourke, Earl of Mayo, Baron of Naas, K.P., G.M.S.I. Born 21st February, 1822. Died 8th February, 1872."

In the original programme, prepared by Sir Burnard Burke, an interesting feature was introduced, which circumstances afterwards rendered it necessary to omit. It was intended that the charger of the late Viceroy, richly caparisoned, and led by an equerry, should follow the coffin. As the empty chair in the household, so the empty saddle would have appealed with touching effect to the sympathy of the spectators. The intention, however, was abandoned because the horse of Lord Mayo has not been brought home to Ireland, and although it would have been easy to supply the want the family did not wish that the genuine character of the ceremonial should be in any respect impaired by resorting to any such means to produce what it was felt could only be a dramatic sensation.

The demeanour of the vast assemblage of spectators along the whole route was expressive of marked respect and sympathy. It took about three-quarters of an hour to pass given points. After the Carbineers had closed the military pageant, a cavalcade of carriages, numbering about fifty, followed. They were led by the Lord Mayor, and included the Lord Chancellor, the Judges, gentry, members of the Corporation, and other citizens. At two o'clock the cortege reached the Esplanade, where the closing scene was enacted. It was strikingly picturesque and impressive. In the space immediately in front of the Royal Barracks, which is enclosed by iron railings, the various sections of the procession formed, as announced in the programme. At the side next the barracks the coffin was put down, surrounded with all the emblems of dignity and power. Behind it 100 men of the Coldstream Guards were ranged as a guard of honour, and formed a striking background. The Earl's pennon and bannarets were placed in front of the Coldstream Guards. At each end of the coffin stood three aides-de-camp, and beyond them wings of the King's Dragoon Guards and the body of tenantry. At the opposite side of the enclosure, next the river, were the massed bands and the sailors and marines. The eastern and western sides, one of the gates in which afforded an uninterrupted view to the public, the windows of the banks and the wall overhanging the Esplanade, as well as the sides, were filled with spectators. As the Lord Lieutenant rode in the bands played with splendid effect, and the ceremony of fling past the coffin commenced. The tenantry went by in good order, and as they passed simultaneously uncovered their heads with mournful reverence. The sailors and marines, the cavalry, and the Coldstream Guards next went by in successive bodies, saluting as they came up. Then the banners of the Orders of St. Patrick and of the Star of India, which had been placed in front, were by a sudden and graceful movement unfolded to the breeze as they were born along to pay similar homage. Then came the General commanding the troops and his Staff massed in a splendid group, such as an artist would depict in some famous battle scene. After these came the carriages of the civil dignitaries and citizens, and with them the ceremonial closed. The Lord Lieutenant and the Household returned to the Viceregal Lodge, and the coffin was conveyed away under an escort of cavalry to its final resting-place in the county of Kildare. Not the slightest accident or hitch occurred to mar the success of a ceremonial which was remarkable for its representative character as an expression of sympathy and for its splendour as a pageant.

The late Lord Mayo's remains were interred on Friday within the ruins of the old church at Johnstown. Artillerymen drew the coffin all the way from the house to the churchyard. In front of them walked the tenants of the late Earl; and behind the coffin followed Lady Mayo, in company with her eldest son and Earl Spencer. Behind these came the rest of the family and a number of friends, including the Duke of Abercorn, the Marquis of Drogheda, the Earl of Clonmel, the Marquis of Headfort, Colonel Mure, Right Hon. Colonel Wilson-Patten, and the Hon. Mr. Wyndham.

THE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN FINANCE.

On Friday, the 19th inst., the examination of the witnesses, Messrs. G. F. Harrison, Comptroller-General of Accounts, Calcutta, and Mr. Gay, was resumed, the subjects inquired into being the charges on the collection of customs, salt and opium. It being ascertained that the cost of customs collection in the Bombay Presidency was heavier than either of the other presidencies, Sir S. Northcote inquired why this was the case in a minor presidency, while the collection of the general taxes was not so unusually costly; and the reply, as we understood, was that the Custom-house at Bombay is a very large establishment. The gross taxation of the Bombay Presidency was through customs dues. The whole question of the administration of the salt revenue was under the consideration of the Government of India. The charges on collection might be much reduced. The re-establishment of the local manufacture of salt in Oude had been recently sanctioned experimentally, and the same measure would be extended to the North-Western Provinces within the customs line. The salt duties now range from one and a-half rupees to three and a-quarter rupees per maund. The next subject inquired into was the opium monopoly, and the same ground was gone over as was taken last year. The last subject taken was the coinage of India, and it appeared that one of the three mints established at the presidencies had been abandoned, as two were all that was necessary.

The expenditure on the presidency mints and coinage was resumed, and the information obtained last year on this subject was completed. The mint establishments had proved a loss to the Exchequer. For 1870-71 the loss sustained was £32,000.

On Tuesday, 23rd, the examination of Messrs. Harrison and Gay was resumed on the cost of collecting the taxes and other sources of revenue in India.

It appeared that the Post-office had suffered an annual loss by being compelled to carry official letters free, but lately a change had been made which relieved the establishment of the incubus. The loss had been as much as £130,000. There is every prospect of the revenue from the Indian Post-office improving gradually, although it can never be a very profitable speculation to carry Indian letters, there being no great disposition to write letters by the natives, except among commercial firms at the Presidencies. The next subject dealt with by the committee, in connection with the Post-office, was the cost of the clerical establishment. The salaries had been increased in recent years in consequence of the increase of work. As it was necessary to inquire into the cost of the Government telegraph lines in connection with the postal service, and a gentleman was present acquainted with the subject (Colonel Robinson, Director-General of Indian Telegraphs), the Right Hon. the Chairman of the Committee (Mr. Ayrton) advised examining Colonel Robinson, and then returning to the evidence of Messrs. Harrison and Gay. This course was pursued, and Colonel Robinson was called and examined on the Indian telegraph service. His information, however, was similar in all respects to the evidence afforded last year by Colonel Chesney and other witnesses. [The witness undertook to come provided with papers now needed at a future opportunity.]

Messrs. Harrison and Gay were recalled, and the inquiry now fell upon an item in the Indian accounts of expenditure for the household and tourage expenses of the Governor-General of India, the Governor of Madras, the Governor of Bombay, the Lieutenant-Governors of Bengal, North-Western Provinces, and the Punjab, the Commissioners of Scinde and the Central Provinces. First, the salaries of the Governor-General and the other Governors were given; then the cost of their households, and touring expenses; next were given the salaries of the members of the Legislative Council, &c., and their duties were gone into. It appeared that there were notably two matters connected with these inquiries which were rather rigorously investigated, viz., the extraordinary travelling expenses of the Governor-General when yearly leaving the capital to take up his holiday sojourn at Simla. In recent years the Governor-General of India had accustomed themselves to these semi-holidays at Simla, but it appears by the accounts produced that they have always been very costly to the State, and might be curtailed with advantage; at any rate, the Governor-General might make some better arrangement than taking all his whole staff and household, and also some of his council with him. The other extra expense objected to was in the household expenditure of the Governor of Bombay, who was down in the last Budget for household expenses to the large figure of £21,600. It was explained that £4,100 out of this total was for cost of furnishing a new residence for the Governor at Poona; there were other charges on the keeping up of the household, such as the salary and allowances of the military secretary, which used to go to another account; these additions to the household account had enlarged the estimate to the £21,600. Compared with the gubernatorial domestic expenses of fourteen or fifteen years back, the present expenses had been doubled and trebled in the case of the Governor-General, and had greatly increased also in the case of the minor governorships. The Governor-General's annual tour not only involved enormous household expenses, but a very considerable expenditure on troops, artillery, aides-de-camp, &c. When the Viceroy's Staff and household visit Simla "everybody seemed to benefit by it." Their allowances were increased; but it was the more incumbent for some of the Staff to accompany the Viceroy on his tour, as deductions were made from their allowances when they became absentees. The clerks were allowed house allowance as well as personal allowances.—After investigating a few other charges connected with the above establishments, and the expenses of the military secretariats of the three presidencies, the committee adjourned.

Miscellaneous.

ARRIVAL OF TROOPS FROM INDIA.—The Indian troopship Malabar, Captain Douglas, arrived at Portsmouth on Wednesday from Bombay, via Suez Canal and Malta, with military invalids and time-expired men.

THE NON-PURCHASE REGIMENTS.—A War Office return, issued on Friday, gives the number, rank, and names of the officers of non-purchase Indian regiments transferred to the Crown who have retired since the 1st of November last, with the sums they have severally received as an equivalent in lieu of any claim for bonus, together with the number of those who have applied to retire, but have not yet retired. The number of retirements is ten; the number in course of being completed, four.

COMPULSORY RETIREMENTS.—The Standard is informed that a long list of names of officers in the Indian Army, who, being unemployed, are to be compelled to retire, arrived in this country a short time ago. It has since been sent back to India for revision, as it appeared to the India Office that too many names were included in the list. Be the list, however, large or small, equally are the covenant of the East India Company, and the Parliamentary guarantee of vested interests set at naught by compelling any officer of the Indian army to retire, save at the recommendation of a medical board.—Globe.

DEATH OF LIEUT. COL. W. R. CAMPBELL.—Lieut. col. W. R. Campbell, of Ballochyle, Argyleshire, whose death from congestion of the lungs, at the age of fifty-two, occurred at Edinburgh on the 22nd ult., was a distinguished officer in the service of the East India Company, and well known as a first-rate Oriental scholar. His first commission was in the 28th Madras Native Infantry, and latterly in the Staff Corps. It was owing to his tact and courage during the mutiny, and at great personal risk, that a discovery was made of a plot in the territory of the Rajah of Shorapore, which led to the annexation of that country. His health requiring a visit to his native land, he came to England on leave, intending to return to India.

GREAT SOUTHERN OF INDIA RAILWAY.—EXTENSION SHARES, £2 PAID.—The following notice, dated the 12th inst., has been given to the holders of these shares:—"I am instructed to inform you that, on and from the 1st of May next, the privilege of making payments in anticipation of calls on the extension shares of this company will be withdrawn, and from that date no further payments will be received on these shares except in pursuance of calls to be made by the directors, of which notice will be given in the usual course. Should you wish to make any further payment previous to the 1st May on the shares standing in your name, the necessary form will be forwarded to you on application."

Summary and Review.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail are—from Bombay, April 15; Agra and Madras, April 13; Calcutta, April 12.

SIR R. TEMPLE'S Budget Statement was of course the prominent topic of the week in India. Elsewhere we have given some extracts from it, and hope to give more next week. He began by showing that the main cause of the surplus arises from opium receipts, which amounted to nine and a-half millions, thanks to the unforeseen rise in price; the average for the year having been Rs. 1,388 per chest, or more than Rs. 300 per chest above the estimate, and this in spite of a short yield for that year. Luckily there had been a reserve to fall back upon from the year before. The surplus on the receipts had been increased by a reduction of nearly half a million on the estimated outlay. The actual net gain therefore under the head of opium amounts to £1,845,100. Of the remaining three-fourths of a million saved on the budget for the whole year, nearly all arises from actual savings in expenditure on the Post-office, Telegraphs, Law and Justice, the Marine, on Land Revenue Establishments, the Army, and one or two other items. On the other hand Sir R. Temple points to an unsatisfactory decline of £193,800 in the salt-revenue receipts, of £142,700 in the land-revenue of Oudh, Bombay, and Bengal, and of £25,700 in the canal rents.

THE Budget estimate for the present year reckons on nearly twenty-one millions from land revenue, "the largest sum ever yet presented." It must, however, as Sir Richard takes care to remark, depend on the coming rainy season, how much of this will be realised. For the Forest Department he expects a net increase of about £45,000 on the right side. The Customs revenue is estimated at £2,570,000, about the same as last year, which was not a good one for Indian trade, so far as the imports of silver were concerned. Among the changes caused by the growing trade through the Suez Canal, Sir Richard notes the influx of English in supersession of native coal. Jute, rice, and other bulky goods are passing more and more largely through the canal. An estimated increase of £100,000 on salt brings the receipts on that article to about the level of 1870. Opium receipts are reckoned at 7½ millions—"considerably less than that which we are receiving for the current year." This low estimate is based upon the short crops of the past year, and also on the intention of the Government not to sell more than 48,000 chests next year. It has been resolved, in fact, to form by degrees an opium reserve, as a safeguard against bad seasons and falling prices. The estimated revenue from stamps will be 2½ millions, about the same as last year. Sir Richard counts upon a slight decrease on the Post-office, a slight increase on telegraphs, a gain of £102,000 on interest from Government Securities, and of about £230,000 on railways. On the expenditure side there is an estimated increase of one and a-quarter million for civil charges, owing chiefly to new arrangements for growing opium. Of the estimated increase on the Post-office, nearly half or £50,000 is due to "circumstances affecting the payment of the subsidy in England." An increase of £70,700 is estimated under the head of Law and Justice, and one of £119,200 provides for "the increased retirement of Covenanted Civil Servants after the new orders concerning the annuity fund." The loss by exchange is estimated at half a million.

THE army charges of nearly sixteen millions show an estimated increase of £118,110, due to outlay on stores from England. Forty thousand pounds are set apart for camps of exercise. On Ordinary Public Works the decrease is reckoned at £99,300, on a total grant of two and one-third millions. Sir Richard grows pathetic over this piece of economy in view of the need there is for increased outlay on barracks and sanitation. We should have thought that no more barracks were required for a long time to come; but perhaps the last batch is tumbling down even faster than it once threatened to do. For guaranteed railway interest less net traffic receipts the charge is set down at one and three quarters millions, about the same as the last two years. Sir Richard does not speak very hopefully of Indian railway prospects. Two lines have suffered from disastrous floods the traffic on the East Indian line at one time fell off to an alarming extent, although it has since improved again, on no line is the goods and passenger traffic advancing as it ought to do, and the working expenses are generally high. The fares moreover seem generally too high to "attract the moving and travelling masses of a poor population like that of India," or to stand competition with the high road and the river.

THE Indian papers are almost at one in their dislike of the new Budget. Sir R. Temple is no favourite with the Indian tax-payer, and some perhaps of his critics are a little too hard upon him. But in quarrelling with his obstinate retention of the income-tax and his absurd storing up of cash balances to the tune of twenty-four millions, they have reason and common sense on their side. Had Lord Mayo lived, we believe that the income-tax would have been consigned to the limbo of all manifest miscarriages. According to the Englishman there would have been no possible excuse for its retention, had Sir R. Temple slightly raised the estimated value of opium per chest, as he might safely have done.

ACCORDING to a telegram of May 4, Mr. Forsyth has been transferred to the Oudh Commission.

SIR S. FITZGERALD has dealt a parting slap to the Executive Commissariat Office in Bombay. Successive officers, he says, have "habitually rendered false cash accounts," in order to conceal the fact of their keeping large cash balances in hand, in defiance of express orders. One officer had as much as Rs.

99,000 thus omitted from the regular accounts, and for eight years past some of them have been signing "false certificates of having no cash balance in hand."

WE learn that Colonel Mowbray Thompson has been appointed Political Agent at Manipore, in the room of General Nuthall, who has resigned.

WE are glad to see that the Indian Government have at length decreed a just and needful improvement on the Furlough Rules of the Indian Army. It is now declared that an officer who has taken furlough on private affairs, and may afterwards be compelled to obtain extended leave on sick certificate, "will be thenceforward entitled to the same advantages and subject to the same disadvantages, as to retention of appointment, pay, &c., as if he had originally obtained leave on medical certificate."

IN the girls' schools of Tinnevely District shirt-making appears to form an essential feature of the list of subjects for examination. Failure in this part of the course, says the Madras Mail, "vitiates the examination, however well the candidate may get through the other parts." That the young women of India should learn to hem and to sew, may be a good practical rule; but why shirts in a country where such things are never worn by natives of either sex? Would it not be more to the purpose to teach Indian girls how to cut out and make up some ordinary article of Indian clothing? We can only hope that no distrustful native will take it into his head that shirt-making is but a step towards the forcible conversion of his country-folk to European ideas on the subject of dress.

THE Ameer of Kabul seems bent on copying English models to an extent not much appreciated by his own subjects. Having a fancy for an English cantonment, he ordered the people in the neighbourhood to bring wood for building at a given price. The people answered by "skedaddling." It next occurred to him to make his soldiers useful in constructing roads. One or two regiments were ordered to set to work with pick and shovel, but his warriors refused with much emphasis to demean themselves after the Feringhie fashion. Being in want of money for various excellent purposes, the Ameer proclaimed a tax of one rupee on every house in his dominions. The result so far appears to be that soldiers have been employed to collect the tax, and are quartered on the districts that appear loath to pay it. The order to impress young men for his army has caused a great deal of natural discontent, which in some places has vented itself in angry rioting. Even from such sources, however, the Ameer extracts some balm, in the shape of a heavy fine on the riotous districts.

THE fearful hurricane which only the other day raged round Zanzibar, destroying the greater part of the city and a hundred and fifty ships off the coast, appears to have since travelled, after the fashion of cyclones, up the Bay of Bengal. On the night of the 1st May it burst over Madras, breaching the pier, and doing great damage to the city and its suburbs. Many vessels, including the Hotspur, Armenian, Burlington, John Scott, Robert Scppings, Kingdom of Belgium, Invernesshire, Ardberg, Duprey, and Delorme, are said to have been completely wrecked. The captain and all but six of the crew of the Ardberg were drowned, and the same fate befel a part of the Hotspur's crew. The cyclone raged all next day, but its force was abating on the 3rd.

A Times telegram of May 3 announces the arrival of Lord Northbrook at Government House, Calcutta, on the afternoon of that day. A large gathering of natives and Europeans welcomed the new Viceroy on his way from the station. His Lordship was at once sworn in. By a later telegram we learn that he will start for Simlah on the 15th inst.

ACCORDING to a Times telegram of May 3, "the Viceroy's order respecting the Kuka executions is very severe both on Mr. Cowan and Mr. Forsyth. It is proved that Mr. Cowan ordered six men to be shot after receiving Mr. Forsyth's order to act according to law. Mr. Forsyth subsequently approved all that was done. The Viceroy sees no evidence whatever that the execution was necessary, and recommends that Mr. Forsyth should not again be placed in a position where similar control will be needed. The Lieutenant-governor of the Punjab agrees with the Viceroy, and has held the same view from the first." Mr. Cowan has been removed from the Service, and Mr. Forsyth from his present post.

IN recommending his scheme for a line of double steamers between Dover and Calais, Captain Dicey appears to have overlooked the very close analogy between his vessels linked together by strong girders and the sailing craft that ply among the Feejee Islands. Unlike the Ceylon "outriggers," these vessels really consist, it seems, of two boats of equal or nearly equal length, placed a few feet apart from each other, and connected by means of a common deck. They are sharp at both ends, so that each end in its turn may form the prow, according as the latten sail happens to be set. Here then we have the exact model of Captain Dicey's double steamer, and of course an additional argument in its favour.

WE are glad to hear that the India Office is really engaged in drawing up some kind of scheme for promoting the retirement of the surplus field-officers in India. Our only regret is that the necessity of such a concession did not force itself on the official mind when General Norman's scheme was first broached.

POOR little Mary Winchester has escaped from the friendly care of her Loshai captors, to undergo the ordeal of an interview with the correspondent of an English paper, who talked to her the other day at Elgin. The little lady of seven is described as "small for her years, very thin, with sharp features, and a lively eye." She also speaks fair English, and has very polite and winning manners. When her interviewer talked of the Loshais, she instantly became sad, and declared that she did not want to see or hear of them again. They appear, however, to have treated her very kindly in their own rude way. She talked about her father "readily though solemnly," and declared that her skin, which had been quite white on leaving her father's tent, turned dark under the scorching heat during her stay among the Loshais. Before giving her up to General Brownlow, her captors cut off her long curly locks to keep in remembrance of her. After her surrender she was given in charge to "a native officer named Scubedar," and presently this same gentleman figures as "Captain Scubedar." Here we imagine the correspondent and the printer have made between them a trifling mistake, confounding the rank of the native officer with his proper name, and then mis-spelling the supposed name. In all likelihood the little girl was handed over to a native Subadar, or captain of a company, of whom she soon became very fond. "I do love the Scubedar," she exclaimed, with reference to a photograph which represented her in his arms, and dressed in her Loshai costume—"two striped Indian cotton shirts, a jacket of the same material, a thin tartan plaid tied like a sash, and a pair of sandals." Her father appears to have exchanged his grocer's shop at Elgin for the post of a plantation overseer in Cachar. He and his motherless child Mary were on a visit to a friend at Alexandrapore, when the Loshais raided into the place. The friend escaped, but Winchester was shot down, as he was running away with little Mary on his back.

Now that Mr. Cowan has got his reward for quelling a formidable outbreak by summary means, it may be instructive to read what Lord Elgin, the successor in India to Lord Canning, wrote just ten years ago to Mr. Edmondstone, Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West Provinces, on the subject of popular risings. "For my own part," he said, "I am firmly resolved to put down with promptitude and severity any attempt at disturbance which may be made in any part of India, and I do not care how generally my determination on this point is known. I shall pursue this policy, not because I fear for the stability of our Empire in the East, but because tranquillity is essential to the progress of the country, and because lenity to the guilty originators of such machinations leads invariably to the severest punishment and suffering of misguided followers." The whole of the letter from which we have quoted may be found in the very interesting volume of Lord Elgin's Letters and Journals, lately published by Mr. Murray. From other of these letters we can guess what India lost by the writer's premature death. Had Lord Mayo lived a little longer, it is almost certain that he for one would not have consented to Mr. Cowan's dismissal. To judge from the foregoing extract, it seems little less certain that Lord Elgin would have agreed with Lord Mayo.

A LONG and so far unsatisfactory correspondence between Colonel Sykes and the India Office has been published in the Home News. It appears that the promotion of Colonel Anderson, the senior lieutenant-colonel of the Bombay cavalry, to the rank of full colonel, has been stopped by the Indian Government on the plea that he had not completed twelve years' service as regimental lieutenant-colonel. On account of this stoppage, Brevet Colonel Blair and Brevet Major Sykes, both officers of long standing, are debarred from the promotion they were entitled to expect. Colonel Sykes maintains with apparent justice that such a proceeding cannot be justified in view of those Acts of Parliament which secured to the officers of the Local Army the same pay, allowances, privileges, and advantages in respect of promotion, "as if they had continued in the service of the East India Company." In that service promotion took place by seniority, without reference to length of service in any particular grade. To this the India Office replies through General Pears, that, in accordance with the rules recommended by the Royal Commission of 1865, no lieutenant-colonel of a date subsequent to the 1st January, 1862, could rise to the rank of full colonel in less than twelve years. It is also pointed out that under any circumstances Colonel Anderson will get his colonelcy some years sooner than the average of his brother officers. Sir Bartle Frere however dissents from this reply, being unable to see that the Parliamentary guarantee, which secures "individual rights," is a whit the less infringed because officers may have since received "equal advantages of another kind and in another way."

COLONEL SYKES, in his rejoinder, reminds the India Office that the Commissions of 1863 and 1865 both expressed themselves doubtfully as to the fairness of the average proposed for lieutenant-colonels, before reaching the higher grade. It was all very well, he argues, to fix that or any other limit for the new Staff Corps; but to bring the local army under so Procrustean a process is manifestly unfair. If Major Blair for instance has to wait for Colonel Anderson's promotion in 1874, he will have served 42½ years before getting his colonel's allowances; while his senior captain, Major Sykes, will have "no reasonable prospect of his life being protracted to obtain colonel's allowances at all!" On the same principle Captain Oldfield will have to wait for his colonel's commission until he has served 54 years. An attempt by General Pears in his next letter to pick a hole in Colonel Sykes's reasoning is treated in the colonel's next reply as "an evasion of the principles involved in the whole argument." Inviting the colonel to withdraw that last remark, the military secretary again reminds him of the great advantages which the local officers have reaped from the measures taken to reorganise the Service, and discovers no reason in the Parliamentary Guarantee why the Locals should gain unlimited profit "from the combined operation of the old and new regulations of the service as respects promotion." Colonel Sykes hastens to withdraw the "discourteous" expression, discourtesy not being in his line. All he meant to say was that "the consideration of the principles on which the Parliamentary guarantees were founded, was 'waived or overlooked.'" As for the twofold advantages enjoyed by the local officers, neither himself nor the many officers who have written him letters of complaint are aware of any such. On the contrary, he holds that it is the Staff Corps officers who have alone benefited in pay and promotion from the changes effected of late years. With a mere acknowledgment of the receipt of this last letter the correspondence drops; but the matter is shortly, we understand, to be brought before the House of Commons. Colonel Sykes has a certain show of justice on his side, but it is not quite clear that substantial justice has been withheld from his clients by the rule against which he rails. Anyhow it is a difficult question to decide from any rational point of view.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

MONDAY, May 6, 1872.

MR. COWAN AND THE INDIAN GOVERNMENT.

THE tidings of Mr. Cowan's removal from the service of the Punjab Government, as telegraphed home on Friday last, must have caused some little surprise among those who derive their knowledge of Indian affairs from other sources than the Friend of India. It is something for his friends to know that in so rewarding the late Deputy Commissioner for his summary method of dealing with a dangerous outbreak, the Indian Government have expressed their great regret at such an ending to a career of unusual merit. They may also find comfort in the announcement of Mr. Forsyth's removal from his present post, although his punishment does not extend to the utter ruin of his official prospects. If Mr. Cowan was to be punished at all, the Commissioner of Ambála could not in fairness be allowed to escape scot-free; but his transfer to another province involves not much if any pecuniary loss, and may be taken to mean little more than a small temporary sacrifice to the decencies. With Mr. Cowan however the case is very different. He is for the moment a ruined man, cut off from a career of growing usefulness, and held up to general reproach as a bloodstained breaker of the law. Unless the home Government think fit to restore him to the service in which he rose entirely by his own merits, his future may be limited to a wearing struggle for life on the poor pension which his masters may consent to award him in consideration of his former services.

To such a sentence such a man ought not to be lightly doomed. We are bound of course to assume that the Indian Government, unbiassed by the clamours of well-meaning philanthropists there and here, has passed a verdict based on the careful sifting of the evidence laid before it. But we are compelled to own that the result is strangely at variance, not only with the statements of well-informed witnesses, as published in the Indian papers, but with the apparent meaning of events directly bearing on the recent outbreak. Mr. Cowan claimed to have collected trustworthy and convincing evidence that a general rising of the Kukas in March had been forestalled by his prompt if bloody suppression of the preliminary outbreak at Maloh and Malair-Kotlah in January. For some weeks before the 14th January the local authorities had learned that several of Ram Singh's Subahs, or lieutenants, were hurrying about from village to village and district to district on some mysterious errand. One of these men had been arrested by the Deputy Commissioner of Jalandhar only a few days before the outbreak. For some time past the Kukas had been loudly predicting the approaching triumph of their cause. On the 14th January Mr. Cowan learned that many hundred of the sect had the day before been assembled at Baini to hear Ram Singh preach sedition. Inflamed with excess of zeal, two or three of the leading Subahs appear to have spoiled their master's nicely laid plans by a premature attack with a few hundred men on the little fort of Malodh. This happened on the night of January 14. The insurgents, strengthened with the arms and horses found in the fort, next marched against Malair-Kotlah, the capital of a small Mohammedan State in Sirhind. Fortunately the townspeople, forewarned by Mr. Cowan, were partially prepared to receive the assailants, who, after a short fight, were driven off, but not till the brave Kotwal and half his small band of policemen had been killed or wounded. How this body of insurgents was followed up and finally captured by Mr. Cowan and a few hundred retainers of the Patiala chief is well known, and the fate that befel a certain number of them is matter of history.

But why did Mr. Cowan proceed to blow forty-nine of his prisoners at once from guns, without even waiting for orders from Mr. Forsyth? Because he had every reason to believe that nothing short of a prompt and stern example would nip a terrible danger in the bud. He and his few policemen and borrowed levies were all that stood for the time between the peace of a province and the spread of an armed insurrection. The troops that might have helped him were nearly two hundred miles away, in the Delhi camp, and there too was his own Chief, Mr. Forsyth. He learned, on what seemed trustworthy evidence, that bands of fresh Kukas were near at hand, waiting only for the word to advance against him. The delay even of a few hours might have caused a fresh outbreak, with which his scanty resources would have failed to cope. It is matter for common remark how easily in India a small political fire swells into a mighty conflagration; and in the country of the Sikhs there are always plenty of restless spirits ready to join in any fray. Mr. Cowan therefore resolved by one swift blow to avert the danger and the cost of a widespread rebellion. What he did was not done recklessly, in the heat of the moment. "I knew well," he says writing to a friend at home, "how serious a responsibility I was incurring, and that the disapprobation by the Government of the action taken by me meant to me ruin in reputation and in prospects; but I incurred this great responsibility in the honest belief that there were immediate urgent reasons for the action I took, and that no more lenient measures would have the effect of restoring peace to the country."

That Mr. Cowan was not by nature prone to cruel and strong-handed dealings, nor yet, like Mr. Eyre, the man to lose his head on small provocation, seems pretty clear from his previous conduct on trying occasions. To say nothing of his services in the Mutiny of 1857 and the Famine of 1861, it is well known that after the Kuka outrages of last year he objected strongly to dealing with the Raikot murderers by any process more summary than that of a regular trial. It is possible that Mr. Cowan may have been misinformed as to the extent of the danger; but in that case his error was shared by all around him, including afterwards Mr. Forsyth himself. No sooner had that officer reached the spot, than he ordered the arrest of Ram Singh and his chief Subahs; and further inquiries on his part resulted in dooming sixteen more prisoners to be blown away from guns. Meanwhile the people had everywhere hailed Mr. Cowan and his companions as their deliverers from a great peril, greeting them with shouts of "Peace is restored," "The rebellion is over." The Kuka bands too, who had been hanging about in hopes of further mischief, fled panic-stricken to their homes on hearing of the fate which had befallen their comrades.

The local authorities were all apparently arrayed on Mr. Cowan's side. Mr. Davies, the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab, is said to have gone so far as to protest against Mr. Cowan's suspension upon any pretext whatsoever. This however is directly opposed to the statement in the Times of Saturday, which describes him as concurring in the sentence of the Indian Government. Be that as it may, there is hardly an officer in the Punjab who disputes the wisdom of the measures taken by the late Deputy Commissioner of Loodianah. Englishmen and natives in that province alike commend him for what he has done. We have seen how heartily the native princes of Patiala, Jhind, and Nabha, avowed their gratitude for the fruits of Mr. Cowan's timely severity. That the Indian Government tends or did tend to the same way of thinking, is evident from the fact that Ram Singh has been deported to Rangoon, and that a Sikh regiment recruited in Loodiana district has been replaced in Loodiana and Jalandhar by a Hindustani regiment from Lucknow.

It is not often that missionaries take the part of those who stand charged with excessive cruelty; and no men in India are readier to denounce an act of needless severity than the American missionaries. It is a strong point therefore in Mr. Cowan's favour, that the great American Missionary Society in India have sent home for publication in America an account of the recent outbreak, written from the same point of view, in the same spirit of admiration for Mr. Cowan, as nearly all the letters and articles hitherto published in the papers of the Upper Provinces. It is hardly indeed too much to say that the whole public opinion of India, outside the capitals of Bengal and Madras, sets strongly in favour of the officer who has since been found guilty of slaughtering so many Kukas without just cause. Has public opinion judged wrongly in this matter, and are we to suppose that the evidence which to people on the spot appeared so trustworthy has failed to carry the same conviction to the minds of Mr. Cowan's judges? The matter as it stands is to us a painful puzzle, for whose solution we must be content to wait. We should be loath to infer that the Government had lightly sacrificed a deserving officer to the demands of a narrow formalism or a spurious philanthropy, at the cost of a practical rebuke to the loyalty of several native princes, and of sore discouragement to any officer who may hereafter be exposed to like perils. And yet it is hard to shake off a strong suspicion that some blunder of this sort has been committed, for which the rulers of India may yet pay dear.

RETIRING SCHEMES PAST AND FUTURE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—Could you suggest to the promoters of the scheme for retirement of Indian officers a comparison between the pensions given to the Indian Navy and those now given to the Indian Army? What proportion did the pension which was given about ten years ago bear to the Indian rate of pay in the navy? I believe the difference was small, being fixed no doubt by a consideration of the increased rate of living in England. Let me borrow a sentence from the Times of the 3rd January, 1872, which though applied at the time to the increased expenditure of the British nation, and Mr. Vernon Harcourt's challenge thereto, illustrates equally well for the present purpose the increased expenditure of individual Englishmen, and the scanty value now of a pension fixed in the last century. "The plain truth is that the amount, the intensity and cost of life, have alike increased during the last quarter of a century at a rate never before witnessed in the history of the world."

There is much to consider, much that perplexes the Secretary of State and his advisers, but in the present intention of dealing liberally with their officers a review of the terms fixed for the Indian Navy may be useful, and is hereby suggested by your obedient servant,

PETER SIMPLE.

NATIVE ENGINEERS.

The Amrita Bazar Patrika considers that to say that the Bengalees are backward in taking advantage of any boon thrown open to them, is to do them injustice. If the natives do not generally enter into the engineering profession, it is perhaps because the profession does not want them, or hold out sufficient inducements to them to enter it. It is not an independent profession ; if Government did not maintain the engineers of this country, they would starve in a body, all and every one of them. Perhaps Government has taken advantage of this helplessness of the native members of the profession. A medical man, whether a native doctor or sub, a B.L. or an L.L., when maltreated or paid insufficiently, might defy his superiors, and might do better independently than under the service of Government. But an engineer must either starve or serve Government, and people naturally do not like to enter a profession which cannot exist independently of the patronage and help of Government. Whether Government has actually taken advantage of this helplessness of the engineers or not, we cannot precisely tell ; but we know that our assistant engineers, overseers, and so forth, are the most hardworking of all Government officers. Day and night upon horseback, his horse lean, hardworked, ill-fed, and consequently ill-used like themselves, the native engineer performs his thankless duties without intermission, without sufficient emolument, without sufficient encouragement, and so forth. He has presumed to enter a service which the European thinks his own. The result is a ceaseless dispute between subordinates and superiors, and a universal feeling of discontent, the executive regarding his native subordinates as many obstacles in his way, noticing their shortcomings most rigorously, rewarding merit, or giving promotion most capriciously, while his subordinates are making themselves jolly at his errors and follies. The department which could not tempt an honest, and we must say it, a poor man, and a high officer like Baboo Khettru Mohun Bhattachajyu to continue an office, must need some reformation, and it is not the natives that are to blame if they do not take to engineering as readily as they do to doctoring. We are glad, however, to observe that Mr. Campbell proposes to take a most wisestep as regards the distribution of the engineers ; he means to take advantage of the road cess operations, to post one engineer to each district if necessary, paying him partly from the imperial and partly from the local funds ; but of this hereafter.

THE INCOME TAX.

The Englishman asserts that instead of being the only means of meeting a sudden emergency, the income-tax, although a highly convenient means of raising money for an idle or witless financier, is not only, for political reasons, the very worst that can be made use of for the purpose, but, in all such emergencies as would justify a measure in other respects so mischievous, must be utterly inadequate. England herself, wealthy as she is, has never yet, in modern times at least, met a great emergency by an income-tax, though she uses an income-tax as a means of meeting the obligations incurred during great emergencies ; and not even Sir Richard Temple would for a moment expect to be able to meet a really great emergency by this means to any but the most partial extent. The amount produced by the income-tax at its highest in one year has been but a small fraction of what is now the ordinary revenue of the country. It is absurd to suppose that a Government like that of India could not provide otherwise, and still more promptly, for any sudden necessity which this or double this sum would suffice to meet. If the Government had no other source to look to for meeting a sudden charge of such an amount as could be raised by an income-tax, in that case no income-tax would save it in a real emergency of magnitude ; and it would be bound to set about placing its finances and its credit upon a better footing, instead of depending on a tax which would be but a drop in the ocean of its necessities. The real question is, whether the income-tax is worth retaining, in order that the Government may be enabled to meet a small emergency, or correct a huge blunder, or provide with a little thought and trouble as possible for projects which, though not absolutely necessary, cannot be met out of ordinary revenue, without borrowing, or reducing the cash balances. As far as concerns all but the first of these purposes, no answer is required. As to the first, all we can say is that to a prudent financier a small emergency should be no emergency at all. If the want of two or three millions would be an emergency, Sir Richard Temple is bound to prevent its being so by other means than the retention of an odious and dangerous tax, which is not otherwise necessary, and the odium and danger of which must be increased tenfold whenever it is used to meet such a want. No mere theoretical considerations can balance the popular discontent and demoralisation caused by this income-tax ; and its capability of being readily increased intensifies the danger of retaining it. But it is not a fact that the want of two or three millions of money would be an emergency. If the Government should ever really require such a sum suddenly, it would not wait for the realisation of an income-tax, but would either draw on its reserves or borrow the money, which it could always do with ease. The necessity of repaying it, however binding it might be, could not be fairly called an emergency—certainly not an emergency so immediate and pressing as to justify a Government in stirring up wide-spread disaffection among its subjects to meet it. There are half-a-dozen ways in which extraordinary revenue could be raised quite rapidly enough for the purpose, without recourse to an income-tax, which, if at all justifiable in India, could only be justified by some such emergent actual necessity as could be met in no other way.

"INDIA HELD IN TRUST FOR THE PEOPLE."

The Madras Times thinks that if an intelligent foreigner, a Frenchman for instance, could be found to explain to the world the policy of Great Britain towards India we might expect no little amusement from his labour in that direction. He would learn from a portion of the English press, representing the opinions of many thousands of Englishmen, that England only holds India in trust for the natives ; and he would probably be told the same story at the India Office, although all the acts of the Indian Government he would observe as being clearly opposed to so profound a political sentiment. At last, and probably reviling us as perfidious hypocrites, he would give up in despair all thoughts of solving an enigma that puzzles Englishmen as well as foreigners, and think, with ourselves, that Great Britain has really no other policy towards India than that which the day brings forth, or the chapter of accidents. Our statesmen seem to take an incomprehensible pleasure in mouthing that piece of claptrap that avers we only hold India in trust for the natives ; but it would be an insult to their common sense to suppose that at heart they believe anything of the sort. Like many other abstract political sentiments, full of sound, but signifying nothing, it can be made to serve the purposes of politicians without much harm to any one ; nevertheless, as a sham palpable to every one, we can hardly see the advantage of preserving it as a tradition intimately connected with our honest administration of this country.

INDIAN EVIDENCE BILL.

The Friend of India remarks that Mr. Stephen's work in India is gradually being rounded off into completeness, and an official report, just issued, presents one of the principal features of that work, the Indian Evidence Bill, which became law on March 12. Mr. Stephen was able, at that meeting of the Council, to show that in reality the judicial and professional feeling of the country was with him, and not opposed to him, in this Bill, which, however, had received the sharpest, and in some cases, the most persistent criticism. Even the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, who would have opposed one very important section of the measure, spoke in terms which could hardly be understood as other than eulogistic of Mr. Stephen's efforts—successful efforts—to frame for India an Indian Law of Evidence. We believe that Mr. Stephen did not in the least overrate his success on the point of completeness and condensation when he asserted that every principle applicable to the circumstances of British India which is contained in the 1,598 royal octavo pages is contained in the 167 sections of this Bill, which had also been carefully compared, section by section, with Norton's Law of Evidence. The weeds and technicalities and over-statements that have been removed by Mr. Stephen will be seen no more. But the effect of the removal will, as Mr. Strachey said, be seen in the future improved administration of justice in India. Then, the Bill is remarkably clear. It has been drawn up with literary taste, as well as correct legal knowledge, and indeed it might be read, in connection with Mr. Stephen's introductory speech on the subject, for the interest of the reading alone.

THE BUDGET.

The Englishman doubts whether Sir Richard Temple could give any definite explanation of the principle on which he has estimated the price of opium in any one of the three years just referred to, but we are certain that no definite explanation he could give would apply to all three estimates. This year, he tells us, there is a tendency in prices to decline, though we must say we cannot see it ; but even if this be granted, certainly no reasonable ground can be shown for expecting a decline from Rs. 1,430 to Rs. 1,200, a price not only immensely below the average of the past year, which was Rs. 1,388, but fifty-five rupees below that of the previous two years. And below what Sir Richard Temple considers a "normal" price. As to the expectation of a large crop in China, we showed a few days since that such a crop could not prejudicially affect the price of Indian opium, unless the China enters into effective competition with the Indian drug as a separate product, which there is ample evidence to disprove ; while as to the Indian supply, that is in the hands of the Government, who have already limited it to an average quantity. The fact is, this and previous estimates are all pure guess-work, guess-work of the most capricious and mischievous description, and guess-work without any excuse for the state of uncertainty it indicates. What the "normal" price to which Sir Richard Temple refers may be, we do not know. But this we do know, that even if there were any reason to fear that the rates of the present year would fall below it, there would still be no excuse for not budgeting for the full average rate. Sir Richard Temple tells us that he intends to take advantage of the large out-turn of the current season, and form a reserve of opium. This is a very satisfactory proceeding as far as the drug itself is concerned ; but it is simply monstrous that, while doing this, Sir Richard Temple should be allowing another large opium reserve to be accumulating in the cash balances, without availing himself of the admirable opportunity it offers him for at one and the same time eliminating all uncertainty from this important source of revenue, and relieving the public of unnecessary and intolerable burdens. Of the board, which under the name of cash balances has now reached the enormous sum of twenty-four millions and a quarter sterling, no less than two millions and three-quarters is due to surplus opium revenue realised during the last two years' revenue, which Sir Richard Temple has been enabled thus to accumulate by filching money from the public upon pretences which, if not wilfully false, might as well have been, so far as they are concerned, and have been falsified by the event. Surely the public have some right to demand that these accumulations shall be utilised in some more legitimate manner than by being placed through the banks at the disposal of the mercantile community. The legitimate function of this money is that of an opium reserve, and by treating it as such, Sir Richard Temple has it in his power, if not to recoup the public for the unnecessary loss inflicted on them, at all events to prevent the recurrence of similar loss in future; if not to repair the damage done to the popularity and prestige of the Government by his mistakes, at all events to prevent their being still further impaired by a repetition of those mistakes. Had Sir Richard Temple estimated opium for the current year at Rs. 1,275, instead of Rs. 1,200, he would have shown a small surplus without any income tax, while he would not, we believe, have been estimating it at more than a fair average price, and he certainly would not have violated the reasonable probabilities of the market. But having so estimated it, and supposing that the worst had come to the worst, and the average price fallen as low as his actual estimate of Rs. 1,200,—almost an impossibility,—what would have been the consequence? Why, merely that from this reserve of two and three-quarter millions made up of the excess price of opium in former years he would have had to credit some £360,000 to the current year's revenue. For 1873-74 his estimate would be corrected, the low prices of 1872-73 being included in the data on which his average would be based. So on, from year to year, the estimate should be based on the average of the preceding five years, and neither more nor less than this sum credited to the revenue of the year, any excess being added to, and any deficiency taken from the reserve, and unless opium were to go on steadily falling for a long series of years, the annual fluctuations in price would balance one another long before the stability of the reserve could be effected, while the amount annually credited to revenue on account of opium would vary within such trifling limits as to relieve the Government from all risk of serious disappointment, and the public from all danger of unnecessary taxation. Variations in the price of opium, sometimes considerable and sudden, cannot be prevented; but the prejudicial effect of such variations on the finances of the country can be absolutely prevented through the expedient of a reserve, by the aid of which the excesses above and the deficiencies below an average price can be left to balance one another. Under any circumstances there is no sort of excuse for the present low estimate of opium. Making all reasonable allowance for a decline, it might fairly be taken at a much higher rate.

MAJOR LLOYD HARRIS.—About two and a half years ago Major E. P. Lloyd (now Major Lloyd Harris), a Deputy Commissioner in Assam was dismissed from his appointment by the then Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal at the instance of the Commissioner of that district, Colonel Agnew, on certain charges made by that officer against his deputy. These charges were never made known to Major Lloyd Harris, who, naturally enough, protested against his being dismissed from his appointment without being made acquainted with the reasons for his dismissal, and without having an opportunity afforded him of being heard in explanation. Under these circumstances Major Lloyd Harris appealed to the Secretary of State for India, and though late, yet better late than never, his Grace has ordered an inquiry to be made into this case by a Court appointed for that purpose. Colonel Agnew and Major Lloyd Harris, who were both in England at the time, were directed by the Duke of Argyll to proceed to India and present themselves before the said Court of Inquiry. This case shows the necessity of patient perseverance on the part of any one who may be similarly aggrieved. Had not Major Lloyd Harris persistently persevered in petitioning the higher authorities there would have been no alternative for him but submission to the one-sided sentence of the local powers—a sentence pronounced in fact on an unheard trial. Whatever the result of the enquiry into Major Lloyd Harris's case may be, it will be a satisfaction to him, as well as to the servants of Government generally, and, indeed, the public at large, to know that, unless a man tamely submits to be trampled on, he cannot be tried in ignorance of the charges brought against him, and upon which his condemnation is founded. That it, however, requires great patience and perseverance to carry an appeal so far as to the Secretary of State for India is clearly enough indicated by the cruel procrastination and delay which has taken place in this case. It has taken Major Lloyd Harris two and a half years to obtain a Court of enquiry. How he has suffered in pocket and in reputation [in the mean time he only can tell. We are aware, however, that the Commander-in-Chief has refused him responsible military employment on the ground of his having been dismissed from civil employment; his Excellency considering that, if Major Lloyd Harris was unfitted for the latter he could not be fitted for the former.—Madras Athenæum.

Bengal.

SIR R. TEMPLE'S BUDGET SPEECH.

We give the following extracts from Sir Richard's statement:—

The prices of Bengal opium, which stood at Rs. 1,163 per chest at the beginning of the year, that is, in April, rose gradually till they reached Rs. 1,569 per chest in November. Then they fell to Rs. 1,425 per chest in December, since which time they have remained steady on the whole, though with occasional fluctuations and indications of a tendency to decline. The average price per chest obtained for the 49,695 chests sold during the whole year has thus been Rs. 1,388, instead of Rs. 1,075 as estimated. After the fluctuations which the prices have experienced, it were vain to predict their continuance at any such rates; especially as they probably depend on the vicissitudes of season not only in India, but also in China. If there should be, simultaneously, propitious seasons in both countries, a fall in prices is to be feared. At all events, we should be on our guard against a fall in prices, which are now ranging higher than the average of recent years.

By this great gain on opium, then, we account for nearly three-fourths of the surplus (£2,606,600) over the original estimate, in other words, for that part of the surplus which is abnormal or exceptional.

But there still remains more than one-fourth, represented by £761,500, to be otherwise accounted for, which is of a more normal and regular character. This portion of the surplus does not at all arise from increase of receipts, other than opium, for, on the contrary, there is some decrease in those receipts. It really arises from large savings in expenditure, as will be presently seen. The reductions on the side of charges amount to £1,098,800, with a set-off of £337,300 loss of receipts—bringing out the net sum of £761,500 above shown.

I must, first, explain the decrease of revenue which occurs, under various heads, as follows:—

Under land revenue there is a falling off of £142,700, which occurs in Oudh owing to floods, in Bombay owing to larger remissions necessitated by drought in the Southern Mahratta Country, and in Bengal owing to the sale of Government estates being stopped.

Under forest there is a decrease of £146,800, partly balanced by a saving in the expenditure of £116,100.

The salt revenue shows a falling off of £193,800, which is distributed through all the provinces, and must cause some anxiety.

The decreases under post-office, telegraph, law and justice, and marine are all largely exceeded by savings shown on the other side of the account. The decrease of £25,200 under Public Works ordinary is owing to the transfer of receipts to Provincial Funds. The falling off of £25,700 in canal rents, notwithstanding the heavy expenditure of capital on these works, is not satisfactory.

On the other hand, there are some increases, namely, £25,900 under tributes, due to a succession having occurred in the Nabha State; £224,600 under assessed taxes (income-tax), the arrears from the preceding year having proved larger than was expected; and £64,300 under army receipts, sale of stores, and the like.

So much for the receipt side. On the expenditure side there are reductions as follow:—There is a decrease of £30,600 under interest on service funds and other accounts—attributable to transactions with the several civil funds; £90,100 in land revenue establishments, arising chiefly in the allowances payable to village officers in the Bombay Presidency; of £12,800 under assessed taxes; of £8,500 under customs; of £103,300 under post-office, partly due to economy in India, but chiefly relating to the payments in England of the subsidy for the overland postal service; of £48,400 under telegraph; of £13,700 under minor departments; of £129,800 under law and justice, owing to general economy, but partly relating to the process serving establishment in the Madras Presidency; of £170,900 under marine, relating partly to provision of stores in England, and partly to slack work in the Bombay dockyard; of £8,100 in the ecclesiastical department, owing to vacancies remaining unfilled; of £108,400 in the miscellaneous branch, owing to improvement in exchange. The decrease in excise of £159,500 is largely nominal, as already explained with reference to the opium figures, and the decrease under stamps and stationery of £150,900 is partly owing to the transfer of stationery to the heading of administration, which accordingly shows an increase of £82,200.

In respect of the Army, it will be observed that the charges are not expected to increase beyond the amount set down in the budget, but that, on the contrary, there is to be a saving of £240,100. That increase should be avoided, is a circumstance creditable to the military authorities, and indicative of saving and economy. For the estimates are burdened with two items not originally contemplated. A saving of £100,000 in the Native Army was reckoned upon,—which calculation was considered justifiable in the then condition of our correspondence on the subject with her Majesty's Government. To our regret, however, we have not been able to secure that saving. Again, since the framing of the budget, it has been found necessary, as is well known, to undertake military operations against the Lo-shais and other wild tribes on the Eastern Frontier. The cost of that expedition will entail an additional charge of £200,000 during the year.

It may therefore be asked how, notwithstanding these items of increase, the total result has not been unfavourably affected, but is turning out more favourable than the first estimate? Well, the reason is that there have been considerable savings, estimated at £480,000, or nearly half a million sterling. There is hardly time now to specify the items of which this large economy is composed. But I may state briefly the chief of them. In the first place there is a total reduction of £198,000 in various items, viz., the cost of provisioning European troops, the compensation payable to native troops for dearth of grain, the cost of feeding army remounts and commissariat cattle, the compensation for dearth of forage. Again, there have been lesser, though still appreciable, reductions in the purchase of live stock, of rum, of remounts, of camp equipage, in the charges for sea transport by the Cape and for overland transit, in medical supplies, in barrack establishments and supplies, and in miscellaneous charges, by abolition of various appointments, or by vacancies left unfilled in the medical branch, in the military account department, in the commissariat establishments, together with other reductions. On the whole, I think we may congratulate our colleague at the head of the War Department (General Norman) on the satisfactory condition of the military estimates.

The decrease in railways, £101,300, is owing to the short expenditure of capital. Less land has accordingly been taken up, and there is less loss by exchange. The head of guaranteed interest, which was at one time during the year the source of some anxiety, ends with a small improvement of £35,500. It will be observed that there is an increased charge of £101,400 for interest on the debt. This is due to large arrears of unclaimed interest having been paid during the year, partly in reference to the discharge of the Five per Cent. Loan.

To return to the figures then; the sum of my explanation is this—that besides the surplus of £1,845,100 from opium there is a surplus of £761,500 due to other causes. This latter amount (£765,100) is owing to large reductions in the expenditure. The Budget Estimate showed an equilibrium supported by a small surplus of £93,400. The regular estimate shows a surplus of 2½ millions (£2,700,000). Of the excess (£2,606,600) over the original estimate, more than 1½ million is due to opium, under abnormal circumstances. But there remain three-quarters of a million arising under normal circumstances of finance. Disclaiming any credit for the opium surplus, we may, perhaps, in some degree, claim credit for the remainder of the surplus, as tending to show that the original estimates were cautiously made, and that economy has been so enforced that the various departments have worked within the estimates of expenditure.

The surplus arising from comparison between income and ordinary expenditure is irrespective of the extraordinary expenditure on reproductive public works, which is provided for by loan funds. An expenditure on this account of £3,626,000 was contemplated in the budget estimate; the regular estimate, however, shows only £1,736,800 so spent. This latter sum has been chiefly expended on the great canal works in the Cis-Sutlej States from the river Sutlej; in the Agra Division, from the river Jumna, below Delhi; in Behar, from the river Sone; in Orissa, from the river Mahanadi, in the delta of the Godavery, for extension of the irrigation system there. There has also been some expenditure on important projects in Oudh from the river Sarda; in Rohilkhand, from the river Ganges (called the Eastern Ganges); in the Lower Doab, also from the Ganges; these canals being in addition to the well-known Ganges Canal.

In respect to the State Railways, there has been expenditure on the lines between Lahore and Peshawar; between Delhi and Rewaree; between Agra and Ajmir; also on the project for the lines between Multan and Kotri in Sindh; between Nimar and Indore in Central India, and between Dharwar and Karwar in the Southern Mahratta Country.

That the estimated amount has not been more fully spent is due chiefly to prolongation of the time allowed for the elaboration of the canal projects, and partly to the unavoidable delay in determining the narrow gauge for the State Railways in India.

According to the form prescribed for the financial statement, the sum of £1,736,800, added to the £47,276,500, of ordinary expenditure, make up a total of £49,013,300, or 49 millions.

Miscellaneous.

GENERAL OLPHERTS.—We are glad to be able to announce that General Olpherts has so far recovered from his accident at the camp at Delhi as to be able to resume command of his brigade at Bareilly.

TEA IN THE KANGRA VALLEY.—Owing to recent favourable rains the tea plantations in the Kangra valley are reported to give promise of the largest spring crop known for years.

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES.—We hear that Lieutenant C. W. Muir, of the 6th regiment, has been appointed to succeed Captain G. W. Anson as private secretary to the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-Western Provinces.

LUCKNOW.—A meeting was held at Lucknow on the 9th April, at the invitation of Sir George Cowper, to consider the best means of raising a memorial in honour of the late Earl of Mayo.

TURKISTAN.—According to the Kabul correspondent of the Delhi Gazette, the merchants in Turkistan have written to their agents at Kabul to buy as much hill tea as they can get, as it is much preferred to the China tea.

THE NEW ADVOCATE-GENERAL.—The appointment of Mr. Paul to be Officiating Advocate-General, which, although not yet published, is understood to be settled, appears to have given general satisfaction among the barristers and other "limbs of the law" in Calcutta.

MAJOR PARSONS.—A correspondent of the Delhi Gazette, writing from Loodiana on April 3, states "that Major Parsons has become deranged in mind. He went away on duty, and at Buttila became subject to the symptoms indicated. Captain Beecher has arrived and acts for him."

SERIOUS CHARGES AGAINST A CIVILIAN.—We learn with regret that charges of a serious nature have been brought against Mr. Broadley, Assistant Magistrate of Behar. We have not received particulars, but Mr. Broadley has, we understand, been sent to Patna under suspension, pending an investigation into the charges in question.—Englishman.

SPENCE'S HOTEL.—Government has purchased the property in Calcutta known as Spence's Hotel for seven lakhs of rupees, and the purchase-money has been paid. Whether the Government will take immediate possession or not depends upon the terms they may come to with Mr. Linton, the present tenant, who has some years of his lease yet unexpired.

THE NEEMUCH STATE RAILWAY.—Government has sanctioned an extension of the Neemuch State Railway project. Oojein, the great opium mart of Central India, is to be connected with Indore by rail, and Mr. W. Henderson, with Captain A. E. Downing, Executive Engineer, is now engaged in surveying the line for the Oojein extension. Telegraphic communication has been lately established between the two places.—Delhi Gazette.

THE CALCUTTA POLICE.—It is currently reported that the Detective Department, which, in the opinion of the Commissioner, is useless, is to be abolished, and that instead of one superintendent for the town and another for the suburbs, there will be two in the former and two in the latter. There will also be a separate superintendent for the river. The present river superintendent, Mr. Percy, is to have charge only of the Reserve Force and the direction of the Fire Brigade. An inspector of the Reserve Force is also to be appointed.

THE INDORE RAILWAY.—The Pioneer is told that, far from the Maharajah Holkar giving any help towards the railway to Indore, he appears to be doing his best to delay its completion by vexatious interference with the contractors and their work-people, on the plea of requiring a royalty on anything and everything, from the building-stone to donkey-grazing! The politicals, it is said, do nothing but write mild letters of remonstrance; meanwhile, the works are in some places at a stand-still in consequence of men and cattle being seized and confined by Holkar's people.

A MEMORIAL PILLAR TO LORD MAYO.—A handsome memorial pillar or obelisk is to be erected at Palumpore on the site where the late Viceroy sat in Durbar. The contributions for the same have been collected from the Rajahs, Chiefs, and principal European gentlemen of the Kangra district, who were present at the Viceroy's Durbar. The Rajah of Mundi has headed the list with Rs. 1,000, and the memorial pillar is being erected under the supervision of Major Strutt and Captain Harrison, two of the largest landholders in the Kangra valley, and whose estates join Palumpore. The latter has, we believe, designed the architectural model, which is very elegant, and will stand about fifty to sixty feet in height.

THE WEATHER AND THE CROPS.—There have been showers or hailstorms during the week ended the 6th of April in many parts of Bengal, where, according to the last district reports, rain was wanted. The natives were busy ploughing their lands for the bhadaï crops in consequence. The appearance of the October indigo sowings is still favourable, but rain is wanted for the spring sowings, especially in Jessore, where, we are told, some of the planters were sowing dry. There has been heavy rain in Sylhet, doing much good, and driving away the threatened outbreak of cholera; but in Cachar the report says that the tea has been considerably damaged by hail.

THE NUSSERABAD CANTONMENT CASE.—In this case a civil action for damages has been brought by the ejected civilians against Brigadier Sealy. The facts of the case are as follows:—Captain Rudd and Colonel Bushe set their eyes on a bungalow occupied in the cantonment by a Mr. Newman and his family. Belonging to the military, they had the power to eject Mr. and Mrs. Newman, and they did it. They were summoned to appear at Allahabad High Court on a charge of criminal trespass; but the jury returned a verdict of acquittal on all the charges. The jury further expressed an opinion that the accused were not guilty of conduct unbecoming officers and gentlemen.

A LENIENT VIEW OF ADULTERY.—The Deputy Commissioner of Peshawar seems to take a more lenient view of the crime of adultery than that sanctioned by the Penal Code. A writer in the Koh-i-nur says that many of the inhabitants of Peshawar have eloped with other men's wives, and gone to reside in foreign territory; and to induce them to return, an order has been issued by the Deputy Commissioner that on payment of a fine of Rs. 20 each, they will be permitted to return home, and keep possession of the women. Many of the absconders have, the writer says, returned on these terms. This can scarcely be true.—Englishman.

TEA PROSPECTS AT DARJEELING.—Tea prospects at Darjeeling are fair, especially in the terai, or low land, at the foot of the hills. There manufacturing is general, and on some gardens commenced at the beginning of March. The rainfall to date in the hills has only been 3.18 inches; last year it was 5.55 inches, or nearly double. This want of rain has retarded the flushes, but the tea, if slightly deficient in quantity, will be stronger, and the bushes will benefit by the increased rest. Last year it was generally considered that the terai gardens made a poor season; this year they bid fair to have a bumper year.—Darjeeling News.

PATROL COAT FOR THE HOT SEASON.—A general order has been published directing a plain white patrol coat, without braid, and with four buttons of regimental or Staff Corps pattern, to be worn during the hot season by officers of British and Native regiments. No mention is, however, made of a hot weather dress for officers of British regiments and Staff Corps holding appointments on divisional and personal staff. Are these officers supposed to keep themselves as cool during the hot weather in their blue patrol jackets as their brothers-in-arms in their white clothing? Why not (says the Times of India) allow officers on the Staff to wear, during the hot months, white patrol jackets, trimmed with white braid, in the same manner as the blue regimental patrol coat, with four olivettes or acorns (white) instead of buttons? A white patrol coat trimmed in this manner would sufficiently distinguish officers on the Staff from those doing duty with their regiments, and during the hot weather would be a great comfort to the wearers.

A NATIVE JUGGLER.—A correspondent of the Delhi Gazette says:—“Taking a walk on the Saharunpore-road, I met a couple of *fakera*s, and as is customary with the mendicant classes of India, I received a shower of blessings, after which one of them came up to me and caught me by the hand rather unceremoniously, which at first startled me, as I was under the impression that he might give me a quietus. However, my suspicion vanished when he sat down and pulled out a clove, and took up some mud and put it into my hand, and then told me to close it; after a minute he told me to open it, when in place of the mud a dozen grains of wheat were found; he then caught my little finger and squeezed it, and about an ounce of water flowed in the palm of my right hand and overflowed; giving my hand a gentle slap he very abruptly heeled about and left me. Had he given me time to speak to him, I should have certainly recommended him to Professors Ruchwaldy or Vanek, along with whom he no doubt would do well, as I can put him down as nothing else but a good juggler.

IN HONOUR OF LORD MAYO. At the meeting held at Lahore on the 30th of March, to do honour to the memory of Lord Mayo, the chair was taken by Mr Justice Boulnois, owing to the unavoidable absence of the Lieutenant-Governor. The first resolution passed was, “That this meeting desires to record its sense of deep sorrow at the great calamity which has befallen the empire in the death of the late Earl Mayo, and its high appreciation of the energy and vigour with which he discharged his duty to the country.” Mr. Egerton then proposed, “That with a view to raise a memorial to the great statesman who had died in the discharge of his duty, a committee be formed to collect subscriptions in Lahore and the Punjab generally, and that the form of the memorial be determined hereafter.” Mr. Cordery seconded this resolution, but suggested that the memorial should be a local one, and recommended the erection of a University Hall, typifying the interest of the late Viceroy in oriental education. Rai Mulsing, the spokesman of the Rases of Lahore, concurred in Mr. Cordery's suggestion, and the resolution was then carried, the appointment of the Committee being left to the Lieutenant-Governor.

BREAK OF GAUGE.—We have good reason to believe that the whole question of the break of gauge on Indian Railways has been re-opened, and is once more engaging the serious consideration of the Secretary of State. The Government of India has already been persuaded to adopt the broad instead of the narrow gauge for the Hyderabad (Deccan) and Carnatic Railways; and the recent publications of the estimates for the construction of the 86 miles of railway from Kundwah to Indore on the 3 ft. 3½ in. gauge has enabled the advocates of a uniform gauge to maintain that even on the score of cheapness there is nothing to be said in favour of the proposed change. The metre-gauge Kundwah-Indore line is to cost, when all preliminary expenses and rolling-stock are included, about £11,000 a mile. The additional cost for a 5 ft. 6 in. line would only be about £800 a mile, or £68,800 in all, and this sum, it is contended, would, if there were no break of gauge, be more than compensated by the saving in the cost of a separate station at Kundwah and by the employment of existing stock of the G. I. P. Railway in working the new line. The G. I. P. Company have carriages and waggons enough to carry all the traffic of both lines; but a break of gauge at Kundwah would render necessary the expenditure of a large capital in new stock to suit the peculiar gauge of the new line. The strongest objection, however, to the adoption of Colonel Strachey's gauge for this line is that the railway from Kundwah to Indore is “a connecting link in the chain of railway communication between Bombay and Agra and Delhi,” and that it would cause great loss to the G. I. P. and East Indian Railway Companies and to the State if this connecting line had a gauge of a different width from that of the two trunk lines between which it is designed to facilitate the interchange of traffic. We do not desire to write dogmatically on the subject of the gauges of Indian Railways, but would prefer considering the case of each railway on its own merits. There are, no doubt, parts of the country in which the preference should be given to the narrow gauge; but, as regards at any rate all sections of trunk lines, it is, on political, military, and commercial grounds, most desirable that our Government should bear in mind the doctrine laid down by one of the Royal Commissioners on Railways in 1846:—“The Government of the country will not have done its duty in the matter of railways until such arrangements shall be made that loaded railway carriages may travel from one end of the kingdom to the other without interruption, and this can be effected only by carrying one gauge of rails throughout the whole country.”

RAILWAYS.—It is said that the Great Southern of India Extension line, from Trichinopoly to Tuticorin, is to be constructed on the narrow guage.

COCHIN HARBOUR.—In his report on the Cochin harbour Mr. Robertson, the harbour engineer, says that the Cochin backwater can be converted into the largest harbour in the world by dredging the shallow places, and that the rise and fall of the tide is so small, that it would practically be a wet dock of greater area than all the wet docks in Great Britain put together.

THE NEW ADVOCATE-GENERAL OF MADRAS.—The Madras Athenæum understands that the members of the Madras bar are about to send home a protest against the appointment of Mr. Cunningham as Advocate-General to the Secretary of State for India, and also to induce some member of the House of Commons to put a question to Government in the matter.

CUDDAPAH.—The Government have, as a temporary measure and on the recommendation of the High Court, sanctioned the establishment of an additional District Munsif's Court at Cuddapah from the commencement of this month, and have further approved of the proposal that the additional District Munsif of Trichinopoly should be re-transferred to Tanjore, whence he was originally removed at the close of the year 1868.

COAL IN THE NIZAM'S COUNTRY.—A Madras contemporary reports that Mr. W. King, of the Geological Survey, has found a new coal-field in the Nizam's Dominions. The locality is about twenty-four miles to the north north-east of Kummummett. The field is a small one, only about ten square miles in extent, and the amount of coal cannot of course be ascertained until the field has been tried by boring. About two feet of the seam of coal is exposed, and the coal appears to be good. This is the most southerly field yet found, and great hopes are now entertained by the geologists of finding coal seams in British territory before long.

STRAWBERRIES IN THE NEILGHERIES.—Some time ago a box of strawberry plants was despatched from Australia by Sir W. MacArthur for the Ootacamund gardens. It appears that all the plants did not reach India in a healthy state, the box in which they were placed being injured at Galle. It is also thought that they suffered from heat after being landed in this country. Out of the nine varieties one plant of each kind survived, and from these it is thought that it will be easy to propagate the plant. In return for the strawberry plants the Government has ordered a box to be packed with Ootacamund plants to be sent back to Sir W. MacArthur.

REGISTRATION OF LETTERS.—A great deal has been said about the compulsory registration of letters—a great deal that is entirely misleading. The order about compulsory registration only applies to letters that obviously contain notes, stamps, or cheques; and all that persons posting such things have to do to avoid registration is to take care that the character of the contents is not visible from an inspection of the outside of the letter. Of course, letters are not opened to ascertain whether the contents are such as would warrant compulsory registration. All the Post-office are concerned with is that letters whose valuable contents are patent to all who handle them should be registered, so as not to place undue temptation in the way of Post-office and other servants through whose hands they pass. This is reasonable enough; but it would be unreasonable to require any one to register a letter containing, say a crossed cheque, unless it were exposed so as to tempt the cupidity of Post-office subordinates by its supposed value.—Madras Times.

THE TRADE OF MADRAS.—The import trade of Madras last month was valued at Rs. 26,11,095, of which corals were valued at Rs. 10,500; grey twist valued at Rs. 3,55,534; dyed twist, Rs. 3,66,491; metals, wrought, Rs. 1,60,769 for 614 tons; piece goods, Rs. 9,32,481; railway stores, Rs. 59,426; woollens, Rs. 22,564; wines and liquors, Rs. 79,320; oilman's stores, Rs. 29,292; gold and silver thread, Rs. 57,799; malt liquors, Rs. 13,586; treasure, Rs. 2,52,506. The value of the exported goods was Rs. 29,96,812; cotton, Rs. 4,60,740 for 20,568 cwt.; coffee, Rs. 13,590; hides and skins, Rs. 3,60,532 for 32,680 corges; indigo, 5,543 cwt., value Rs. 15,90,403; cotton piece goods, Rs. 1,27,402; seeds valued at Rs. 72,337; grain of the value of Rs. 60,229, and miscellaneous articles which go to make up the total value of goods exported by sea. In the month of February only eighteen thousand rupees were exported in specie.—Madras Standard.

THE RAILWAY TO THE NILGHIRIS.—The embankments for the projected line of rail to Mettapolliam appear to have been completed for more than half the distance. At this point the line crosses the road to the left, after which the course it takes is not clearly perceptible. Report says the whole line will be finished and opened for traffic in December next, but we question this. None of the bridges have apparently been commenced, and the construction of the stations, of which we presume there will be at least two, does not seem to have been attempted as yet. We very much fear that the rail, when it assumes a matter of fact aspect, will interfere materially with our carrying and transit agencies, and Joseph's Hotel, the Oak, at Mettapolliam, will also probably be seriously affected. Whatever arrangements are made by the Railway Company, we trust the departure of the trains from Mettapolliam will be so timed as to admit of no lingering at Pothanore, a nice station in its way, but exceedingly hot, and musquitoed by the hundred.—South of India Observer.

EDUCATIONAL.—The Director of Public Instruction, in a letter to Government, says that he called together the Inspectors of Schools to Madras in order to discuss certain matters of importance connected with education. The chief subjects brought forward for discussion were the revision of the Results Grants Rules, the revision of the Salary Grants Rules, the revision of the scheme of studies in Government Schools, and the determination of a precise line of demarcation between Lower Class and Middle Class Schools. Mr. Arbuthnot was present during the sittings. The Director says he has long felt the necessity of a clear line being laid down to separate lower class from middle class schools. Up to this time the matter has been left to the discretion of the Inspectors, and these officers have not followed any clear and uniform plan of action. It was proposed therefore that the standard of lower class schools should not rise above the third standard of the scheme for result grants, and it was also proposed that English should be omitted from the scheme. The Government agreed with the view taken by the Director and the Inspectors of schools.

BANGALORE.—A correspondent, writing from Bangalore, says:—"We had a thunderstorm accompanied by heavy rain on Thursday afternoon. When the latter ceased, I went out for a walk, but was sorely discomfited by the horrible odours arising from the damp earth, and which could only be compared to the sulphuretted hydrogen gases of a sewer or shore. In the Native Infantry lines these odours were worst, but I experienced them also all the way from the Post-office to the Police Thannah on the high ground. My theory to account for this stinking phenomenon is, that old Cantonments and towns like Bangalore are perfectly saturated with filth—that in the form of hot weather dust, which blows here, there, and everywhere, we fail to recognise the odorous properties of the soil, but that when the rain falls after a lengthened drought and sets free the gases contained in it they are brought to the cognisance of our noses in a very disagreeable fashion. But if the soil is so bad what must the water be? No wonder that diphtheria, cholera, small-pox, &c., &c., are not uncommon at Bangalore, or that generally speaking the rains are the most unhealthy season in India." Possibly our correspondent's theory is correct; at any rate it is clear that Bangalore would be none the worse for a good washing.—Madras Times.

TIFE CENSUS.—As has been usual in recent years, Madras is ready first. There is no sign of the completion of any similar statement in Bengal, the N.W.P., or the much vaunted Punjab; and the public will probably have to wait for many months before any such paper is issued. The Madras figures have been made up by the revenue officials in each taluq and thrown into district statements by the collectors, so that, though the work involved has been great, it has not pressed unduly on any one. It will be seen that the gross total is 30,857,390; but this is probably under the mark, for it is known that certain outlying Zemindars have not sent in their returns. We will, however, omit them for the present, and, without further preface, give the following table compiled from the statement before us. It exhibits the population of each district as it was found on the 15th of November last. Ganjam has 1,487,227 inhabitants; Vizagapatam, 1,832,614; Godavery, 1,584,179; Kistna, 1,439,252; Nellore, 1,375,349; Cuddapah, 1,343,762; Bellary, 1,653,154; Kurnool, 956,068; Chingleput, 940,744; Madras Town, 395,440; North Arcot, 2,007,667; South Arcot, 1,762,525; Tanjore, 1,975,042; Trichinopoly, 1,197,936; Madura, 2,259,263; Tinnevely, 1,689,421; Coimbatore, 1,754,705; Nilgiris, 50,194; Salem, 1,963,243; South Canara, 915,139; Malabar, 2,274,466; grand total, 30,857,890.—Madras Times.

FROM BAGHDAD TO BABYLON.—II.

BAGHDAD, Feb. 12.—After a twelve hours' stay at the Khan, we started early on the morning of Thursday, the 8th Feb., for Nedjif, the sacred city where rests the dust of Ali, the cousin, son-in-law, and successor of Mahomed. We approached the city as the morning sun lit up with rare effulgence the beautiful gilded dome of Ali's shrine, until it looked like another sun in the distance. Two graceful enamelled tile-covered minars rise on the north and south sides a little in front of the great dome which rises from a building nearly fronting the east. We entered the east gate of the city, passing through a mile or more of graves, which are constantly and rapidly increasing by the arrival of corpses brought from immense distances, even afar off in Persia and Afghanistan, to repose near the sepulchre of Ali. And if the resurrection be simultaneous, one could not but speculate on the immense army that will rise up around the son-in-law of "the Prophet." Here, after having been courteously received by the Governor, we were conducted round the city, in the bazaars of which I noticed as an instance of the permeating power of commerce, English and German lucifer matches, (Johnkoping's "Tandstickor," and "Bryant and May's Patent Safety"), Manchester cottons, Birmingham, Sheffield, and Swiss goods, and even American clocks, though the Turkish division of time differs slightly from ours—the day beginning at six o'clock or sunrise in the morning. All these must have been brought immense distances by ships, railways, and camels. For this place, like Kerbela, is far off from the river, though the salt lake, Bahr-el-Nedjib, about sixty miles long, washes the south and west of the city, and has a few small boats which find their way hither from the Euphrates by the Hindiyah. The wealth of the city, which may contain 15,000 or 20,000 souls, however, like that of Kerbela, depends upon its shrines, and in neither of the cities are Jews or Christians to be found in such numbers as to have a place of worship of their own. Nor probably would the bigoted Moslems permit them quietly to enjoy equal religious liberty, seeing the very soil of both cities is regarded as holy, and little tablets of it, one of which I procured, are made for the faithful to rest their foreheads upon wherever they may be at the hours of prayer. Breakfast over, we again mounted and rode over a sandy plain, with mounds of sand and ruins, to Kufa, about three miles east. There was the old capital of the first caliphs, the city of Ali, but war and fire reduced it, and the removal of the capital to Baghdad caused it to go into utter decay; and vast heaps of ruins now mark its site, near which a small walled-in mosque and serai, and a fishing village, where a few date gardens are cultivated by the right bank of the Hindiyah, which is here a rapid stream 100 yards wide, with several boats plying thereon. Here we embarked for Kifel or Ezekiel's tomb, about twelve or fifteen miles distant, the horses going over the ferry and across the marshes. We arrived at Kifel about seven, and the serai being dirty and nearly full, a Mussulman gave us a spare room in an unoccupied house for the night. In the morning a lofty minar about 100 feet high, which had formed part of a now ruined mosque, was ascended, and we had an extensive view of the level country around; the Birs Nimroud could be distinctly seen about fifteen miles to the north or north-west. Across the yard to the south-west of the minar is a plain flat-roofed building about thirty paces square, surmounted by an elongated spiral dome, which covers what the Jews of Baghdad and the East generally regard as the tomb of Ezekiel, Cohen-w-Nebi, ben Buzi, "Ezekiel, the priest and prophet, the son of Buzi." The village is but a small one, and probably not more than fifty families, all or nearly all Jews, live there, yet a considerable number are daily in the synagogue (for such is the first or north part of the building), either for prayer or to read the writings of the prophet. I pulled off my boots like the rest, and walked across to see the tomb, a rectangular shaped structure nearly five feet high, six feet broad, and nearly twelve feet long. It is covered with a cloth, but under it are numerous slips of paper pasted on the encaustic tiles, with the names of those who have come to offer prayer at the tomb. One or two women were going round kissing the tomb at every step, and whispering their prayers the while. The Cohen was at the same time reading the public prayers in the larger court, and when he had done he came and spoke to me, showing me a book of the prophets and the great roll from which he had been reading, and which is said to be very ancient. It was apparently in a silver roll case, beautifully chased at the top. I read a few sentences from the book (the roll appeared to be regarded as too sacred to remain exposed after he had done with it), at which he seemed pleased. Though this place is upwards of eighty miles from Baghdad, many of the Jews of the latter city make frequent pilgrimages hither. The scene of desolation in and around the place (which is appropriate enough, whether authentic or not) brought vividly to mind the denunciations of the bold and unflinching prophet who prophesied "among the captives, in the land of the Chaldeans, by the river Chebar."

At 8.30 A.M. of Friday, 9th, we left Kifel and rode towards Birs Nimroud, the ground being somewhat swampy with the late rains, though the day was fine and clear. As we drew towards the Birs the Arabs were making small irrigation canals, and in a few places men were ploughing with a very primitive wooden plough and pair of oxen. We approached the mound from the south, some of the animals being sent on with the baggage and syces to Hillah, about 12 miles on to the N.E. The ground, though a vast plain, is extremely unlevel around for miles, with the walls of old canals, a few new ones also are working. Being thirsty with a walk over these, I tasted some of the water of a swamp, but it was so excessively bitter and salt that I had to spit it out, and I observed in many places the ground as white with salt as if covered with snow. As we ascended this immense pile of ruins we disturbed the foxes or ackals which ran or sneaked off here and there, casting suspicious looks behind them. A considerable flock of blue pigeons, too, left the rugged mass of brickwork on the summit as we approached. These were the only living things we saw there; the weather being too cold for the lizards which abound; it is said, on the plain and ruins, to make their appearance. The day was clear, and from the top of the enormous mound appeared Kifel, or Ezekiel's tomb, nearly south, and a little to the right the dome of Ali at Nedjif; the caravanseries looked like distant castles here and there in the desert, over which were dotted Arab encampments with tents of black wool or hair, while to the north were floods and swamps from the Hindiyah or some outbreak of the Euphrates, beside which, about fifteen miles distant, lay hid in palm groves the town of Hillah. The plain to the east, like that to the west, was bounded only by the horizon. The mound is perhaps about 200 feet or more in height, the brickwork at top being some thirty or forty feet higher; the length is about 100 yards, and breadth a trifle less.

Immense irregular shaped blocks of vitrified brickwork from six to eight feet or ten feet in diameter lie in strange confusion on the top of the mound; and one is at a loss to conceive what force could have exploded material so strong (for it is harder than granite), without throwing down the brick ruins a few feet distant from them. Of the age or purposes of this tremendous pile little is certainly known, and the learned differ. The Tower of Babel, a Temple of Belus, and a palace of Nebuchadnezzar are all urged as its former object or objects. The bricks, several of which I examined, and which are marked with arrow headed characters, all bear, it is said by Layard, the name of the above king; but they are thought by many to be merely the later additions of that monarch to some former edifice. On the east of Birs Nimroud, and separated from it only by a small valley, covered also with debris, is another mound larger in extent but not so high; and on it is a small mosque-like building held in veneration by the Arabs as the place where Nimrod cast Abraham into the fire, or as having been a family sepulchre of the patriarch. An Arab resides here during the day and gives cool sweet water to passing travellers or Arabs who come to bury their dead around, on the top and slopes of the mound. I entered the little chapel-like building, below the floor of which was a cellar covered with palm-leaf matting, on which lay two irregular-shaped pieces of what appeared like an ancient marble tablet; a small recess in the wall closed by old and curiously-carved wooden doors was all that was to be seen in the place, which was probably an early tomb that had been plundered and desecrated. We drank a hearty draught of the pure cool water, which the Arab brought us, for the sun was warm and the hour one P.M., and having given a small gratuity to the man and his little boy, who was playing with a milk-white pet lamb, we departed for Hillah. As we descended the mound we observed, besides occasional foxes, a huge boar galloping across the plain to the swamp where he stayed to drink and wallow.

A ride or walk of two or three hours brought us to Hillah, where we called upon the Acting Governor and presented our credentials, asking his assistance in giving us sowars to show us Babylon and in procuring a couple of strong horses (as our own were tired, and the men had given them straw for corn) to take us in before our luggage next day. This he very readily offered to do. When the horses came we determined to look at them, though it was dusk, as the owners generally cover up the sores with cloths or saddles. To this the men readily assented. When with the utmost coolness they uncovered one of our own horses which was a little chafed, and on my remarking that it resembled the one most chafed of our stud, its rider recognised it, and avowed rightly enough that it was the one he had ridden all day. Whereupon, to the no small amusement of the by-standers, the bringers of fresh horses affirmed that the horse was theirs, until they found their mistake on being shown their own horse similarly but worse chafed. They had, however, they affirmed, brought us the best horses in the city; and, as they certainly were no better, if not worse, than our own, we dismissed them, and kept those we had. We slept that night on the west side of the Euphrates, at one of the dirtiest and most uncomfortable old serais we had seen, though it was in the midst of the town. There was, however, plenty of provisions of the best kind, a Turkish bath if we had wished, and an electric telegraph office, if we had needed to inform the Western world of our whereabouts.—Times of India Correspondent.

STATION TALK.

MATHERAN, April 1.—A correspondent of a contemporary seems fond of describing the flowers and flowery trees of Matheran with the most elaborate minuteness. Each stem, each leaf, each fibre, is set forth with all the profoundness of perfect knowledge. "The handsome koonook tree," "the never-failing burtee," "with its pinch of golden pollen," "the dendrobia," "the barbulatura," "the choropa," "the warus," with its "pinnate leaves," "the anjun," and "the bushy little toorda," are all painted with the pregnant power of a fertile and flowery imagination. For our part we must confess that we failed to see these blossoming beauties; but the fault, doubtless, lay with an ignorant obliquity of vision. The describer reminds us forcibly of the great Greek painter whose grapes deceived the birds, for, so vivid has been the painting of these glowing flowers, that some few ladies have been lured from the coming festivities in Bombay to gaze upon them. For this Matheran thanks the painter. It is so refreshing to see how beautifully English beauty goes at Matheran. Sometimes it dawns upon you in all the soothing elegance of snowy muslins and gipsy bonnets, and sometimes it flashes past you "perfectly overwhelming" (to use the courteous words of the courtly Disraeli) "with its bewildering habits and its bewitching hats." But, you may ask, are there no attractions to compensate the ladies for their disappointment about the flowers, and to reward them for their desertion of Bombay? We answer, many—every way. First, a climate which since Thursday last has rivalled the sweetest English air; then views, too well known to be described, and which often "beggars all description;" and, lastly, a great attraction, or rather the absence of a great distraction, there are no mosquitoes! Not a solitary roamer invades the peaceful slumber, and there is no need to wall in sleep with breeze-expelling network. Good Friday was a delightful day up here, and consequently the church was not very well attended, notwithstanding the number of visitors who had come up the night before. They were, we presume, enjoying the cool breeze at some of the points; but if it was coolness they needed, they would have found it in the church, for of all places on the hills it is, we believe, the coolest. On Easter Sunday the air was positively cold. The sun did not appear from behind the vapour till nine o'clock, so that we know not whether it danced at its rising or not. If English tradition is to be trusted it must have done so. We know, however, that it was in a very good humour, for it did not strike the rocks with its usual violence, but all day long it—

A chequer-work of beam and shade along the hills."

So tired was it after its exertions that it did not leave its bed of mist next morning till past eight o'clock, and it showed a great inclination to sleep behind the clouds all day. If the sun's sleepy humour continues, Matheran will prove a delightfully cool retreat when all "the dances are done." Everything is ready, and the ladies have only to stream forth from the heated ball rooms to find palkees waiting to carry them up to that "grand evergreen forest which clothes the summit of Matheran," where cooling breezes blow, and where flowers "blush" unseen.—Bombay Gazette Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

THE CENSUS.—The exact number of the population of Bombay on Feb. 21 last, when the census was taken, has now been ascertained to be 646,636 persons, including the harbour population.

SIR G. MALCOLM.—Sir George Malcolm, K.C.B., General Commanding Mhow Division of the Army, has engaged passages for himself and family by the Austrian Lloyd's steamer Aretusa, to leave Bombay for Trieste about May 10.

GOA.—Just before Prince Augusto of Portugal left Goa he received a telegram from the King of Portugal, authorising him to grant a free pardon to all the rebel troops, except the commanding officers of the four rebel regiments. The Prince at once made known his Majesty's gracious commands to the prisoners, who were then released.

CHOLERA AT PUNDERPORE.—A telegram received by the Government of Bombay from the District Magistrate of Sholapore on the 5th states that cholera has appeared at Punderpore, that it is in other villages in the neighbourhood, and that water is scarce. With reference to the ensuing fair, the magistrate has been empowered to take such "steps as may be practicable to prevent the assemblage of pilgrims at the approaching jatra."

THE FLYING SQUADRON.—The Flying Squadron, under the command of Rear Admiral F. B. Seymour, C.B., which was expected to arrive at Bombay on April 18, comprises, we believe, the following vessels:—The Narcissus (28), the Admiral's flagship, commanded by Capt. W. Codrington; the Inconstant, Capt. C. Waddilowe; the Immortalité (28), Capt. W. Graham; the Topage (31), Capt. R. B. Oldfield; the Cadmus (17), Capt. W. H. White; and the Voltage (8), Capt. M. Culme Seymour.

NOT A BAD IDEA.—The following letter has been addressed to the Sindian:—"Kurrachee, Rambaugh, near the Native Library. Sir,—The committee having invited opinions and suggestions as to the disposal of the subscriptions to the Mayo Memorial Fund, I suggest that the amount be offered to me to relieve his memory from the reflection that I received no redress when I appealed against a grave injustice; the sums contributed will thus enable those who have the final decision to do good with the money.—I am, &c., P. Higgins."

THE GOVERNMENT.—Sir Seymour Fitzgerald has accepted an invitation to a farewell dinner to be given to his Excellency at the Byculla Club on the 1st of May. The Chief Justice, Sir M. R. Westropp, will take the chair at the dinner. Sir Seymour has, we hear, to run up to Mahabaleshwar for a few days this week. Sir Philip Wodehouse, according to a telegram received here, is to leave Brindisi for Bombay to-day. He will probably be here, therefore, in the first week of next month. The retiring Governor does not leave Bombay till the 13th May. The Hon. B. H. Ellis and the Hon. S. Mansfield go home together in the P. and O. mail steamer leaving on the same day.—Bombay Gazette, April 15.

THE FORT CHRISTIAN SCHOOLS.—The Fort Christian Schools, a charitable institution, have been the subject of several recent applications to the High Court at Bombay. A native gentleman had made a gift to the building fund of the school, in consideration of which it was decided to admit non-Christian children to the number at least of one-third of the average number of girls attending at the school. In connection with a suit filed in the name of the Advocate-General at the relation of Mary Prescott, the lady superintendent, against the Rev. F. J. Spring, late senior chaplain at Bombay, a scheme for the schools was prepared by the Lord Bishop, to which the relatrix took exception, and it was eventually submitted for settlement to the High Court. Considerable discussion took place at hearings of the matter before Sir Charles Sargent, and after a long delay, the learned judge finally confirmed the scheme on the 12th instant. The costs of the Advocate-General and of Mr. Spring up to the 15th March last were ordered to be paid out of the fund now in the hands of Messrs. Remington and Co., and after payment of the expenses the fund is to be transferred in the names of five trustees—the Archdeacon of the Diocese of Bombay, the Senior Chaplain of St. Thomas's Cathedral, the Accountant-General, the Collector of Bombay, and the Principal of the Elphinstone College for the time being. Government have already granted a site for the school.

POOR BOMBAY.

There was a young man of Bombay,
Who cried, "It is just as you say;
If I had been older
I'd not been a shareholder,
At least in the Bank of Bombay.
I am sure we have heard quite enough
In the speech made by Mr. G—— D——;
Heard the widow and orphan
Made subject for scoffing,
And their whining at ruin called stuff."

THE LATE LORD MAYO.

The following letter, which puts on record the high opinion his colleagues entertained of the late Lord Mayo, has just been published:—

London, April 11, 1872.

Dear Lady Mayo,—We, the late colleagues of Lord Mayo, bound to him by the ties of friendship as well as political regard, while we will not presume to obtrude upon you topics of consolation in your terrible bereavement, request permission to offer you this tribute of our heartfelt sympathy.

The whole nation has recognised with sorrow and admiring respect those qualities of the man and statesman which endeared him to us, and which we so warmly appreciated; but while we unite with it in doing honour to his genial virtues, eminent talents, and distinguished services, allow us to add the expression of that deeper feeling with which the private grief of one who adorned his home and cheered his life so profoundly affects us.—Believe us ever, dear Lady Mayo, your faithful friends and servants,

THE INDIAN STAFF CORPS.

A "Staff Corps Colonel" thus writes to the Broad Arrow:—

"Will you oblige me with space for another view of the Indian Staff Corps retiring question?

"A rumour, owing to a remark in the House of Commons by the Under-Secretary of State for India, is abroad that a new scheme for trying to persuade the senior officers of the three Indian Staff Corps to retire is under consideration at the India House. Will you allow a colonel in one of these corps to say a few words in the interests of Government? I will not at the same time forget the interests of the service to which I have the honour to belong.

"The retiring scheme supposed to be coming out will be the third since the reorganisation of the Indian Army. On the two former occasions the service was distinctly told that the offers of pension then made were final. Those offers have proved mere temporary makeshifts. The present one will assuredly turn out the same. Can the able statesman now Secretary of State for India not face the difficulty, and by some final, really final, arrangement solve that difficulty and be done with it? The Staff Corps, as it stands and works, has been pronounced a failure, and without doubt it is so. Promotion by length of service, and the rule for getting off-reckoning are simply great blunders. I do not see how the former can well be modified at this time, but altering the latter would help greatly to put matters right.

"When our present rates of pension were first fixed by the Court of Directors, they were based on the then value of money, and were undoubtedly handsome. As time passed, and men found that money did not go so far, these became insufficient to tempt retirements as before. The Court then allowed juniors in regiments to subscribe among themselves to induce the seniors to leave the Service. The bonus thus raised varied for captains from £1,000 to £2,000, and for majors from £2,000 to £3,000. (The subject of compensation for loss of bonus under our new organisation is now being agitated, and will be brought before the House. I would venture to suggest to the Duke of Argyll that this claim be granted, and that, under experienced and competent Indian advice, to fix the various amounts at once and absolutely for ever, for those only of course who were in the army before the amalgamation. The present state of the finances enables him to arrange this liberally.)

"The pensions to which we were entitled were in round numbers as follows:—After twenty years' service, £190 a-year; after twenty-four years, £270; after twenty-eight years, £360; and after thirty-two years, £450. We are still entitled to these. The bonus enabled a captain, who had probably retired on £270, to add about £75 a-year to his pension, and a major about £125.

"I would recommend a new scale of pensions altogether, somewhat enhanced, partly because we can get no bonus now, and partly because the expense of living in England has increased of late years. The Government cannot be expected to make up the whole of the deficiency in a man's income owing to the above causes.

"I would give:—After twenty years' service, £200 a-year; after twenty-four years, £300; after twenty-eight years, £400; after thirty-two years, £500; continuing the present rule of after thirty-five years, £600; and after thirty-eight years, £750 a-year. A small increase is given to the first rate of pension, more to make it even money than anything else—we do not wish to tempt young men to retire. Altogether, I think these rates liberal, though the increases are not large.

"But no scheme will be of any permanent good unless we seriously take up the question of 'off-reckoning' or 'colonels' allowances,' which amount to £1,124 a-year. The framers of the rule, by which every colonel in the Staff Corps gets this very handsome income after thirty-eight years' service, has left a legacy to posterity with a vengeance. Passing such a rule was a great blunder—a blunder which the finance of the country will not be able to bear, and one which they ought not to be expected to bear. A Government finding itself in a financial difficulty (I will here say nothing of the system which gives us more field officers in our army than captains and subalterns combined), which is likely to be embarrassing, increasing, and permanent, is bound in common justice to the taxpayer to modify the measure which causes the difficulty, and tends to make the army inefficient; we have been too liberally treated in this off-reckoning scheme. Its alteration cannot become a question of guaranteed rights and privileges taken from us. The Home Government abolished purchase. The Crown had the power, and there was no attempt to appeal.

"The old Bengal Army had about 2,500 officers—cavalry and infantry—and some ninety of these entitled to off-reckonings. The Bengal Staff Corps numbered on the 1st January, 1872, including probationers, 1,177, of these 212 will be entitled to off-reckonings on the 1st January, 1880, and 452 on 1st January, 1886, or fourteen years hence. Considering the ages to which these hardy old warriors generally live, we may safely assume that the expenditure under this head only, will be on the latter date—mind you, for the Bengal Staff Corps alone—not less than £100,000 a-year, and at least a similar sum for the two other presidencies. On the 1st of January, 1886, £800,000 a-year for the one item of officers drawing off-reckonings; and the bill steadily on the increase. Shall I allude to ages? In the list of officers drawing £800,000 on 1st January, 1886, most probably there will not be one over sixty-four or sixty-five years of age.

"I say, then, deliberately, let the present rule be abolished, and let us have for Bengal a fixed number of ninety officers entitled at one time to off-reckonings. In proportion to our strength, this is double what the old Bengal army had, so we ought to have no real complaint to make. In other respects we are now better off than we used to be. We have quicker promotion, and consequently get higher rates of pay sooner; we begin life on better allowances than the ensign of old; and all have staff appointments.

"Under the present system nearly every man is holding on for off-reckonings, the few that may not be, and they are very few, are ever hoping for some new scheme of extra pensions. The result is literally, no one now retires. We are hampered with the enormous number of field officers, as well as the long list of unemployed or "general doing duty" officers. Regarding the profitable employment of these latter I could give a few hints; but I have written at greater length than I intended. I will reserve these for a future occasion, if allowed room."

THE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN FINANCE.

On Friday, the 26th ult., the examination of Messrs. Harrison and Gay was continued, lasting throughout the day, and being upon the expenditure and on the administration of the revenue. It is hardly necessary to detail the statistics and figures produced to verify the cost of the administration, since there were none but here and there exceptional items in the accounts which raised particular objections. The expenditure on the machinery for the collection of the revenue had increased since 1857 in most departments, and in every presidency and governorship of India; but that increase arose from the great development during the last ten years or more of the sources of revenue. In Bombay the increase was from £13,800 to £18,700, caused partly by the appointment of assistants to the revenue commissioners; partly by the postage on official correspondence, which used to be free. The debiting of a department with the cost of official despatches, letters, circulars, notifications, resolutions, &c., showed as an item of importance in the increase of expenditure in nearly every province. The committee proceeded to investigate the cost of the establishment of "financial commissioners;" the audit and account departments of Calcutta, &c.; the banking department; and, finally, the administration of law and justice. The governmental banking system was called into question, as it had been several times before in the course of the sittings of this committee, and all the evidence now taken went to show that the banking administration had involved the Government in great losses and responsibilities, and that the administration still continued lax and financially unsound. If the new Bank of Bombay, for instance, failed, as the old one had most disastrously, the Government would be at the loss of all its advances. There was no Government member in the present Bombay Bank, as there were in the other banks, viz., of Bengal and Madras. The committee next began an inquiry into the administration of law and justice, comprising the civil and criminal courts, gaols, &c., of India. The total cost of the department in 1856-7 was £1,741,000 against £2,966,000 in 1870-1. The increase on the gaols was £444,000. The examination was barely entered into when the committee adjourned.

On Tuesday Messrs. Harrison and Gay's examination was resumed as to the departments of law and justice. In regard to the magisterial courts, some time was taken up with the cantonment magistrates. The employment of so many new magistrates arose from the disorganisation of the system of judicature produced by the events of the mutiny. The land revenue collection was stopped by the mutiny, and the records destroyed, consequently it was necessary to reorganise everything after 1857, which had been gradually done, and in 1866 a new system of revenue collection and new courts was established. The cost of these establishments was, it appeared, by contrasting 1857 with 1870, doubled and trebled, viewing the whole system of judicature throughout India; but it was also shown that the improved efficiency obtained was productive of increased revenues and better justice to the people. Accounts were referred to by the committee and the witnesses to prove this. It did not appear that money had been spent wastefully, or without good cause, upon the magisterial system, although there were two or three items of expenditure which looked exceptionally heavy; but it was more than once explained that the seeming excess of expenditure—the large annual outlays upon the jurisdiction of certain presidencies, could be modified by another form of allocation of the accounts; for instance, charges which upon the old system had been distributed over different departments were lumped under one head in the case of certain presidencies. It was incidentally stated that the salaries of the local and other judges had been generally increased latterly through the increased demand for their services. A considerable number of the cantonment magistrates were military officers; but, of course, the larger proportion were civilians. The next subject taken was the cost of the gaols, and it was proved that the introduction of modern prison reforms had not only been morally beneficial to the convicts and all other prisoners, but had been self-supporting, as in the case of making the labour of the convict the means of supporting him. It appeared, however, that convicts did not cost the State more, on the average, than fifteen rupees per annum; seemingly a very small sum for the keep of a man for a whole year. But it was explained that natives do not require the strong dieting needed by Europeans, and that the cost of nineteen rupees per head became thus small through the value of the convict's labour saving something considerable to the State. The cost of dieting prisoners had fluctuated at different times, through the rise in the price of provisions from nineteen rupees per head per annum to forty-four rupees. It was now nineteen rupees per head. It might have averaged fifteen rupees in certain years. It came out in the course of the gaol investigations that the present annual cost of Port Blair is £109,900. This is the cost of the gaol separate from the small military establishment kept up to guard it. There had been a mutiny in this gaol. There are about 2,000 convicts now in the Port Blair Gaol, inclusive of only a few Europeans. The witness could not say how it was there were so many as 2,000 prisoners at Port Blair. To another question as to the salaries of superintendents of gaols throughout India, including presidencies and provinces, the witness stated that to every gaol there was what was called an inspector-general, who was the superintendent. The pay is as moderate as it would be for the keeper of any European gaol.

The next matter inquired into was the expenditure on the police establishments of India. The most remarkable statements made under this head was that in Madras the new police system introduced in 1866 was so good it had formed an adequate substitute for the loss of twelve regiments disbanded in that presidency after the mutiny. Mr. Harrison read from a Blue-book the statements and opinions of General Grant regarding the reduction of the twelve native regiments. General Grant concludes his remarks with the words, "I think I may truthfully say that the Madras police force is capable of fighting my battles." The force is more than self-supporting, viewed as a substitute for the twelve regiments, and contrasting the expenses of the civil as against the military force. Here, through Mr. Fawcett going into the general question of army finances, the more immediate matter was being lost sight of, and the chairman brought the committee back to the police system of Madras. Adjourned.

On Friday, at a short sitting of the committee, Messrs. Harrison and Gay's examination was resumed, the subject being the cost of the Government Dockyard, Calcutta, the mode of carrying stores by the Admiralty and other ships in the pay of the Indian Government, the pilot service, &c. After considerable inquiry and repeated cross-examinations of the witnesses, the chairman (Mr. Ayrton) said so little had been explained regarding the marine expenses of Bombay, that the disposal of the large sum of £241,000 for 1870-71 (against £275,600 in 1856-7) could not be ascertained without a balance sheet, and this was not, it appeared, to be had at present, as there were hardly any accounts at hand to prepare it from. It came out that the Bombay harbour expenses account was saddled with a bad debt of £56,000, the amount due from the old Bombay harbour board to the new one (as we understood). Some questions put to Mr. Harrison and Mr. Gay concerning the financial responsibilities attendant upon the abolition of the old Indian navy resulted in its being ascertained that the witnesses could give no account, one way or the other, of the loss or gain from that measure. But from the items of expenditure called over for 1870-71, it appeared that the saving effected through the abolition of the Old Indian Navy had not been such as to much improve the finances of the Bombay Government.

There being no further topic to discuss, and no new witnesses to call at present, the committee adjourned over the usual time, Tuesday to Friday next.

Miscellaneous.

CHARGE OF FORGERY.—Clarence H. T. Neale, of the Bengal Civil Service, was committed for trial from the Mansion House for forging the name of his father, the Rev. Erskine Neale, to a bond for £100, with intent to defraud the Reliance Mutual Assurance Society.

BILLS ON INDIA.—Tenders for £600,000 in bills on India were received on Wednesday, the 1st inst., at the Bank of England. The amount allotted was £2,500 to Madras. The minimum price was fixed, as before, at 1s. 11d. on all the Presidencies, and tenders at that figure will receive in full. These results show a continued falling off in the demand for remittances to the East.

SAFETY OF DR. LIVINGSTONE.—The following telegram has just been received from Mr. Pender, M.P., by British Indian cable from Aden:—"Some natives who have been forty days on the journey arrived at Zanzibar, and report Dr. Livingstone alive and well at Ujeeji, where he had been joined by another white man—Stanley. No other details. I spoke with an old Zanzibar resident who arrived here May 1, and who said the Zanzibar people had long been satisfied of Livingstone's safety." The trustworthiness of the foregoing announcement was recognised by its being read at the last meeting of the Royal Geographical Society.

THE MAIL SERVICE VIA BRINDISI.—It is stated upon authority that a Convention has been signed by the Ministers of the Italian Government and the representatives of the Peninsular and Oriental Company and the Adriatic and Oriental Steam Navigation Company, which provides that the mail service between Venice, Ancona, Brindisi, and Alexandria, at present carried on by the latter company, shall be discontinued, and that the existing weekly service of the Peninsular and Oriental Company between Brindisi and Egypt (under their English contract) shall be extended to Ancona and Venice. The formal ratification of this Convention by the Italian Parliament and the King of Italy is now alone required, and it is expected that the new service will commence in about two months. Italy will by this means secure the great advantage of direct communication between Venice, Ancona, and Brindisi and all parts of India, China, Japan and Australia served by the existing lines of the Peninsular and Oriental Company, and passengers and shippers by the steamers of that company will have the opportunity of making Venice the terminal port of their voyages or mercantile operations.

THE LATE LORD MAYO.—The following letter, curiously illustrative of the firm and amiable character of the writer, was addressed by the late Lord Mayo to a friend who had written to congratulate him on his appointment of Governor-General of India:—"November 1, 1868. My dear H.,—Many thanks for your kind note. I did not accept this great office without long and anxious consideration. I relied more on the opinion of friends, who had long worked with me in affairs of magnitude and difficulty, than on any estimate I had myself formed of my fitness for it. I do not fear for the result, and leave in full expectation that I shall be able to obtain a success that will realise their expectations. Special information is easily gained; but the knowledge of what people at home who direct public opinion think and feel on great questions is only to be acquired by a long apprenticeship to political life. I do not pretend to say that I did not feel keenly the virulence of the attacks made upon me. I did not expect them. I was prepared for keen and hostile criticism; but I thought that my long public service would have saved me from personal abuse. However, I bear the authors no malice; for I know that if my health does not fail me, I will soon be able to show them they were wrong. Thanking you again for your good wishes, I remain faithfully yours, MAYO."

NON-PURCHASE INDIAN REGIMENTS.—A Parliamentary return has been issued, showing the number, rank and names of the officers of the non-purchase Indian regiments transferred to the Crown who have retired since the 1st day of November, 1871, and the sums they have severally received as an equivalent in lieu of any claim for bonus, together with the number of those who have applied to retire, but have not yet retired. The following are the particulars:—20th Hussars, Lieut.-Col. Warner, sum awarded £4,500, retired March 2, 1872; 20th Hussars, Lieut. Beattie, sum not fixed, not yet retired; 19th Hussars, Lieut. Taylor, sum not fixed, retired Feb. 23, 1872; 101st Foot, Major de Longueville, sum awarded £3,000, retired Jan. 9, 1872; 101st Foot, Captain Sewell, sum not fixed, not yet retired; 102nd Foot, Lieut. Tremenhore, sum awarded £855, retired Jan.

16, 1872; 102nd Foot, Lieut. Hamilton, sum not fixed, not yet retired; 103rd Foot, Ensign Burmester, sum awarded, £125, retired Dec. 22, 1871; 103rd Foot, Lieut. Showers, sum awarded £450, retired Feb. 16, 1872; 103rd Foot, Lieut. Wood, sum awarded £625, retired March 15, 1872; 104th Foot, Lieut. Tharp, sum awarded £471, retired Feb. 13, 1872; 104th Foot, Lieut. Huddleston, sum awarded, £429, retired March 8, 1872; 104th Foot, Captain Willes, sum awarded, £1,655, retired March 5, 1872; 106th Foot, Captain Gaitskell, sum not fixed, not yet retired. Number of retirements completed, 10; number in course of being completed, 4; total, 14.

CHARTERED BANK OF INDIA, AUSTRALIA, AND CHINA.—An adjourned general meeting of the shareholders was held on May 1 at the London Tavern, Mr. Andrew Cassels in the chair, who said: Gentlemen, the business which calls us together to-day is of a purely formal character, and will only detain us a very few minutes. It will be remembered that our annual meeting, held in this room on the 17th of last month, was adjourned to this day in order that we might announce to you the result of the poll demanded by the friends of Mr. Morrison. That result, decided by the scrutineers—Mr. A. Morrison and Mr. Hugh Oxenham—is as follows:—"The motion was, 'That Mr. Joseph R. Morrison, who now retires by rotation, be re-elected a director.'" Stated briefly, the result was—for the motion, 375; against it, 548; the majority of votes against the re-election of Mr. Morrison as a director being 173. I have therefore to declare that the motion for the re-election of Mr. Morrison has been negatived.—Mr. J. R. Morrison delivered a short speech, thanking his supporters, and said he had no alternative but to accept the decision to which the majority had come; and, although the result was certainly not such as he had wished, it was not one of which he was at all ashamed; for he felt confident that if any gentleman on the board had been subjected to the same ordeal through which he had passed (that was, of having his colleagues on the direction voting against him), he would also have met with a defeat; the more agreeable task then devolved upon him of thanking those gentlemen who had honoured him with their support.—The Chairman said they had not adopted this line of conduct without considerable reluctance and pain, for it was always an ungracious task to be obliged to oppose an old colleague; he would only add that an earnest desire to promote the interests of the bank superseded in their minds every other consideration. The meeting then terminated.

BRITISH-INDIAN SUBMARINE TELEGRAPH COMPANY.—An extraordinary general meeting of the company was held at the Terminus Hotel, Cannon-street, on May 1 (Mr. John Pender, M.P., in the chair), "for the purpose of considering, and, if so determined, of declaring the expediency of amalgamating this company with, or transferring its undertakings and property to, a new company, to be formed for acquiring the several undertakings and property of this company, the Marseilles, Algiers, and Malta Telegraph Company (Limited), the Anglo-Mediterranean Telegraph Company (Limited), and the Falmouth, Gibraltar, and Malta Telegraph Company (Limited), or some of them, and passing a special resolution or special resolutions providing for the dissolution of this company, and transfer of its undertakings and property, or the shares thereof, or for otherwise carrying into effect, as far as this company is concerned, the proposed amalgamation with or transfer to the new company, and for division in the meantime of the net profits of all the companies amongst the shareholders and stockholders thereof respectively in the proportions to be defined in the resolutions." The Chairman stated that they were all aware that this was an extraordinary meeting, called for a special purpose, their consent being asked to approve a scheme for amalgamating the different submarine cable companies connecting England with India. The question had been fully considered by the directors, their great desire being to carry the amalgamation out in a spirit of equity. There might be some who were not quite satisfied with the terms, but they might depend upon it that the best had been done; and the board recommended their views to the approval of the shareholders, being fully persuaded that they could not come before them with fairer or more equitable terms. A resolution confirmatory of the above having been read to the meeting by the solicitor to the company, was ultimately put and carried.

Imperial Parliament.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, TUESDAY, April 30.—THE SANSKRIT COLLEGE AT CALCUTTA.—Mr. G. DUFF said, in reply to Mr. FAWCETT, that the attention of the Government had been called to a letter from Mr. Cowell, Professor of Sanskrit at Cambridge, referring to the abolition of the Professorship of Hindoo Law at the Sanskrit College at Calcutta. No official information having reached the Government on the subject, he would ask the Government of India for an explanation.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, THURSDAY, May 2.—THE CONVICTS AT THE ANDAMAN ISLANDS.—Mr. SALT asked the Under-Secretary of State for India whether the statement was correct that Ahmed Oolah, who was convicted as a leader in the Wahabee conspiracy, about the year 1865, was in confinement at the Andaman Islands at the time of the assassination of Lord Mayo; that he had frequent opportunities of conversing with the other convicts; and that the Wahabee prisoners in the convict settlement had been able to hold regular communication with their friends in India.—MR. GRANT-DUFF: In reply to my hon. friend, I regret to say that I have no means of answering his questions categorically. The Acting Viceroy has, however, sent Mr. Campbell, a very experienced judicial officer, to the Andamans to make a full inquiry into their state, and when we receive his report, we shall, no doubt, be in a position to state which are true and which are false of the many rumours current.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, FRIDAY, May 3.—PUBLIC DOCUMENTS RELATING TO INDIA.—MR. DICKINSON asked the Under-Secretary of State for India whether the Secretary of State for India in Council would provide the Library of the House of Commons with copies of the printed Budget Estimates prepared by the Governor-General of India in Council, and printed copies of all Acts and Regulations passed by the various Indian Governments since and including the official year 1870, and of all existing rules regulating the appointment, salaries, pensions, and furlough of officers employed in the various branches of the Public Services or in India or in England; and also periodically, when and as the same are received from India, or as soon after as practicable, copies of all such printed Budget Estimates, Acts, regulations, rules, reports, and other printed public documents, not of a secret or confidential nature, as may, in the opinion of the Secretary of State for India, be necessary to enable members of Parliament to understand the administration of the Government of India.—MR. GRANT DUFF: We shall do with much pleasure what my hon. friend proposes.

THE OLD BANK OF BOMBAY.—A long discussion took place on the affairs of the Bank of Bombay raised by MR. GREGORY, who called attention to the report of the Commissioners appointed to inquire into its failure. Tracing the history of the Bank from its commencement, he maintained that the Government of Bombay, by its negligence to supervise the terms of the new Charter and the conduct of the Government Directors, had incurred a responsibility for that failure, and he moved that the case of the shareholders is one for the favourable consideration of the Government.—Colonel BARTELOTT seconded the motion, and condemned in strong language the laches of the Bombay Government.—MR. GRANT DUFF opposed the resolution on behalf of the Government. It would only raise false hopes in the shareholders, who had no legal rights which they could enforce in a Court of Law, and had no moral right to have their losses repaid to them out of the pockets of the people of India. He denied that the Bombay Government was responsible to its fellow-shareholders; it was only responsible to the Bengal Government and the Secretary of State for looking sharp after the large sum of Government money invested in the Bank. The Government of Bombay had acted indiscreetly, but it had more to say for itself than was generally thought.—MR. EASTWICK maintained that if the Government became a shareholder in an undertaking people would persist in assuming its responsibility. In this matter the Directors had been guilty of more than mismanagement; there had been something approaching to swindling. In order that the confidence of the people of India in banking operations might not be utterly destroyed, he recommended that the Government should find funds for the prosecution of the Directors, and should replace the sums invested on trust.—MR. C. DENISON was unable, from general considerations of justice and policy, to support the resolution, but he reproached in strong terms the gross mismanagement of the Directors.—MR. DICKINSON also opposed the motion, thinking that Parliament had no right to charge the Indian Exchequer for such a purpose.—MR. CANDLISH made some remarks, which were interrupted by an unavailing attempt to count him out; and the SOLICITOR-GENERAL argued that the Indian Government was no more responsible than the Home Government would be to the shareholders of the Bank of England if the Directors got them into difficulty.—MR. HENLEY, on the other hand, held that as Government connection had attracted capital to the Bank, and Government negligence had contributed to the catastrophe, the Government was responsible; and MR. M. CHAMBERS also spoke in favour of the motion.—Sir S. NORTHCOTE endorsed the defence of the Under-Secretary for India, and maintained with him that the Government had undertaken no responsibility towards its co-shareholders, and had given nothing in the shape of a guarantee. On the contrary, he asserted that the shareholders and the public knew perfectly well that the supervision exercised by the Government Directors could be little more than nominal. At the same time he admitted that the Government Directors had not always done their duty, and, personally, he doubted the expediency of Government connection with banks. As Parliament could do nothing more effectual than express sympathy with the sufferers, he deprecated a division.—MR. BOUVIER protested against the doctrine which, if not laid down in, was deducible from Mr. Grant Duff's speech, that the Indian Government should not be made responsible for any wrong if the Indian taxpayers would have in consequence to pay for it. The Government of Bombay, he contended, had incurred a previous liability by its malfeasance, and he quoted passages from the minutes of Lord Lawrence and Mr. Massey to this effect. On the conduct of the Directors Mr. Bouvier animadverted severely, and blamed the Government for not having prosecuted them.—MR. W. WILLIAMS argued against the responsibility of the Government.—MR. GLADSTONE showed cause for doubting whether Mr. Massey's opinion was as Mr. Bouvier had represented.—MR. CRAWFORD exculpated the commercial governors of the Bank; and MR. McCULLAGH TORRENS asserted that the Indian Government, having culpable knowledge of the insolvency of the Bank, was morally responsible for all the losses which occurred afterwards.—After some observations from MR. E. SMITH, the resolution was negatived by 116 to 78.

PETITIONS PRESENTED.—For redress of grievances:—From Captain T. Clarke, Bombay staff corps; from Capt. E. Venour, 40th Bengal infantry; and from Lieut. col. Bates, 16th Madras N.I. By MR. Sinclair Aytoun, from Major Ross, of the Bombay staff corps; Capt. Pictet, Madras army; and Capt. Harris, Madras staff corps; and by Col. French, from Col. R. Caulfield, Madras light cavalry. By Sir S. Child, from second Capt. C. Clifford Saxton, R.A., praying that on retirement he may receive the same amount of half-pay as if he had continued in the service of the East India Company.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS.

"HELP UNDER SUFFERING."—No diseases which afflict the human body are more irksome to bear or more difficult to cure than skin diseases, whether superficial sores or deep ulcerations. Holloway's Ointment has proved itself a remedy for these maladies; it clears off scurvy incrustations, heals up cracks and fissures, reduces unnatural heat, mitigates irritation and inflammation, and it at once assuages pain, cleans wounds, and works out a sound and lasting cure more certainly and more rapidly than any other application. In those affections, which are probably constitutional or chronic, debilitated habits, and constitutional ailments, Holloway's Pills should be taken to increase the salutary effects of this unguent.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S (Ex. Army Med. Staff)CHLORODYNE

IS THE ORIGINAL AND ONLY GENUINE.

CAUTION.—Vice-Chancellor Sir W. P. Wood stated that Dr. COLLIS BROWNE was undoubtedly the Inventor of CHLORODYNE: that the story of the Defendant, Freeman, being the Inventor was deliberately untrue, which he regretted had been sworn to. Eminent Hospital Physicians of London stated that Dr. J. Collis Browne was the discoverer of Chlorodyne; that they prescribe it largely, and mean no other than Dr. Browne's.—See Times, July 12, 1864.

The Public, therefore, are cautioned against using any other than

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.Remedial Uses and Action.

This INVALUABLE REMEDY produces quiet, refreshing sleep, relieves pain, calms the system, restores the deranged functions, and stimulates healthy action of the secretions of the body, without creating any of those unpleasant results attending the use of opium. Old and young may take it at all hours and times when requisite. Thousands of persons testify to its marvellous good effects and wonderful cures, while medical men extol its virtues most extensively, using it in great quantities in the following diseases:—

Diseases in which it is found eminently useful—Cholera, Dysentery, Diarrhoea, Colics, Coughs, Asthma, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Whooping Cough, Cramp, Hysteria, &c.

*Extracts from Medical Opinions.*The Right Hon. Earl Russell communicated to the College of Physicians and J. T. Davenport that he had received information to the effect that the only remedy of any service in Cholera was Chlorodyne.—See Lancet, Dec. 31, 1864.

From A. Montgomery, Esq., late Inspector of Hospitals, Bombay.—“Chlorodyne is a most valuable remedy in Neuralgia, Asthma, and Dysentery. To it I fairly owe my restoration to health, after eighteen months' severe suffering, and when other remedies had failed.”

Dr. Lowe, Medical Missionary in India, reports (Dec. 1865) that in nearly every case of Cholera in which Dr. J. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne was administered the patient recovered.

Extract from Medical Times, Jan. 12, 1866.—“Chlorodyne is prescribed by scores of orthodox medical practitioners. Of course it would not thus be singularly popular did it not ‘supply a want and fill a place.’”

Extract from the General Board of Health, London, as to its efficacy in Cholera.—“So strongly are we convinced of the immense value of this remedy, that we cannot too forcibly urge the necessity of adopting it in all cases.”

Beware of spurious and dangerous compounds sold as CHLORODYNE, from which frequent fatal results have followed.

See leading article, Pharmaceutical Journal, Aug. 1, 1869, which states that Dr. J. Collis Browne was the Inventor of Chlorodyne; that it is always right to use his preparation when Chlorodyne is ordered.CAUTION.—None genuine without the words “Dr. J. Collis Browne” on the Government stamp. Overwhelming medical testimony accompanies each bottle.

CAPTAIN H.R.H. THE DUKE OF EDINBURGH, K.G., IN 1867—1868.

Illustrated by a Photograph of H.R.H. the Duke of EDINBURGH; and by Chromo-Lithographs and Graphotypes from Sketches taken on the spot by O. W. BRIERLY. 8vo. 16s.

“It is written in a lively and spirited style, and, putting aside the interest it gains as the history of the hearty and loyal reception which the Prince everywhere received, it is a very readable volume of travel. . . . It is throughout interestingly written, and will well repay perusal.”—Standard.

“The book is full of adventures, and will be read with interest by all.”—Observer.

Summary and Review.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail are—from Bombay, April 22; Agra and Madras, April 20; Calcutta, April 19.

THE discussion on the Income-tax Bill for this year came off on the 17th April. Mr. Bullen Smith gave it an unwilling support, but Messrs. Stewart, Inglis, and Robinson spoke strongly against a measure which they deemed neither just nor necessary. Of the ten who voted on the Ministerial side, Sir R. Temple himself was almost the only one who defended the measure on its own merits. If Mr. Strachey saw nothing in it either unsound or impolitic, and General Norman agreed on the whole with the Finance Minister, the others, including both the Lords Napier, seemed to accept it as a necessary evil which could not be remedied in the absence of the new Viceroy. The long day's sitting ended of course in the passage of the Bill, after which the Extradition Bill also was discussed and passed.

At the sitting of the day before much legislative work was done. After the Bills for preventing the overcrowding of passengers in pilgrim ships, and for protecting patterns and designs, had been passed, Mr. Stephen's Criminal Procedure Bill underwent some further criticism in its final stage. One amendment proposed by Mr. Ellis, for the purpose of allowing natives of the Covenanted Service the same powers as their European comrades over European prisoners, received support from the Commander-in-Chief, Sir R. Temple, and the Acting Viceroy; but was thrown out by the majority mainly on the plea that it tended to reopen a question already settled. Lord Napier of Magdala then tried to get rid of another clause which would fall hard, he thought, on Europeans of other than the loafer class. He could not see why a magistrate of three or four years' standing should have power to imprison a European for three months, whereas a commanding officer could only do so for twenty-eight and a regimental court-martial for forty-two days. But his amendment also was thrown out, and after a little more discussion Mr. Stephen's Bill was passed nearly in its original form.

MR. FITZJAMES STEPHEN, late Law Member of the Viceroy's Council, left Bombay for England by the last steamer after three years of steady work in amending and simplifying the laws of British India. As specimens of the progress made by him in these directions, may be mentioned the Evidence Act, lately passed, which condenses into 167 sections all the pertinent principles contained in the 1,598 pages of "Taylor on Evidence." Two other Acts passed last year, the Punjab Land Revenue Bill and the Punjab Laws Bill, reduce to order and compactness a vast amount of rules and regulations which had been scattered over many volumes. Several Acts of the widest importance, such as the Hindu Wills Act, the Oaths Act, the Criminal Tribes Act, and the Native Marriage Act, have passed under his shaping hand, and owe their consummation mainly to the care he bestowed on them in their earlier stages. Some hundreds of old acts and regulations have under the same hand been done away or fused together into a dozen new, concise, and comprehensive enactments. It is reported in India that Mr. Stephen will shortly be raised to the Common Law Bench at home, when the Commission to which he has been appointed in concert with Mr. Charles Bowen, Q.C., shall have closed its labours.

THE last of the troops employed with General Brownlow's Column in Loshai-Land arrived at Goalundo on the 12th April. Nine hundred coolies of the Force were brought on to Calcutta by rail on the morning of the 15th. General Brownlow himself has been appointed President of the Court of Enquiry into the case of Major Lloyd Harris who was removed some time ago, from the Assam Commission. Colonel Dodgson and Lieutenant Colonel Needham are also placed on the Committee.

CHOLERA and small-pox seem to be unpleasantly rife, the latter in the Central Provinces, and the former in the district of Jaunpoor, where three hundred people are said to have been dying daily for some days before the mail left Bombay. The same disease has broken out nearer Calcutta, and in some parts of Southern India. Calcutta itself has been suffering much from an old plague revived, the Dengue Fever, which causes dreadful pains in the joints and covers the body with a rash like that of scarlet fever.

AT Madras a meeting of Uncovenanted Servants has been held, at which it was agreed to get up a large public meeting to protest against the recent despatch from England which would close the Uncovenanted Service to Europeans in India. It is said that the movement thus begun is extending throughout the country.

A SAD accident has occurred at Deesa, where two officers of the 108th Foot were mortally wounded by a private of the regiment.

It appears from the Bombay Gazette that the order lately issued against certain Commissariat officers, to which we referred last week, was published in the Official Gazette by mistake, and that none of the officers struck at in the order had been even afforded a chance of defending themselves.

WE hear that Mr. Saunders, the Resident at Hyderabad, has been prevented by stress of important work from coming home on furlough as he had intended. Mr. Kellner has been confirmed as Military Accountant General. Staff Surgeon-Major H. D.

Fowler is the new Medical Superintendent of the Calcutta Presidency Circle, in the place of Staff Surgeon-Major Thompson.

WE have heard a good deal lately of proposals for furnishing India with consultative councils, based on the principle of the immemorial Panchayat. The advantage of such councils as a guide and help to the Government on many questions affecting the people at large is obvious enough, and the day, we imagine, is not far off when Sir Bartle Frere's scheme will come up for trial, if only on financial grounds. Its successful working however will depend on the amount of deference which the Government may show in practice to the advice of these consultative bodies. At present the nearest approach in India to such an arrangement is the Viceroy's Legislative Council, and we do not find much readiness on the part of the Viceroy's Executive to act up to the often expressed wishes of their legislative colleagues, in the matter of the Income-tax for example. If the speeches made last year by Mr. Inglis and all the independent members of the Council had carried their due weight, Sir R. Temple would hardly have ventured to continue the Income-tax for another year in the face of a handsome surplus for the past twelvemonth. This year the legislative members pleaded, if not for the instant abolition of the tax, at any rate for a look at all the official documents bearing on the subject, before they could agree to renew the obnoxious impost for another year. Sir Richard however objected to their demand entirely on the plea that for this year it came too late, and also because papers which referred to a three per cent. tax reaching incomes of Rs. 500 a-year, would throw no light on the character of a one per cent. tax on incomes of Rs. 1,000. In this refusal he was supported by Lord Napier of Merchistoun, who pleaded that the income-tax was only to be renewed provisionally, and hinted that any inquiry into its working had better be deferred for some months, until his successor had mastered the financial condition of the country. Mr. G. Campbell also objected to producing papers at such a time, but plainly avowed his objection to the income-tax in its present form, as an instrument useful for meeting an occasional deficit. He was "strongly of opinion" that it should be converted somehow into a permanent source of revenue, or else dropped altogether.

To drop it altogether would, no doubt, be the wisest plan. At the present rate and level of assessment it is reckoned to embrace only 180,000 people, bringing in a total yield of half-a-million in aid of a revenue of about 49 millions. For the sake of a hundredth part of his revenue, Sir Richard would keep up an irritating blister which has already done us incalculable harm. He is so enamoured of it as a means for raising money in the future, that nothing will tempt him to part with it, although every native sees or thinks he can see through his little game. As the Times correspondent truly remarks, the natives are everywhere accusing the Government of keeping up the machinery for raising the tax, in order that they may turn it to account whenever they are in want of money. Let the assessment be never so light and limited now, they have no assurance that it will not at any moment be raised and extended once more.

A TELEGRAM of May 11 states that Lord Northbrook will leave Calcutta for the Hills on the 21st inst.

THE steamer Viceroy, Captain Taylor, from Calcutta, arrived at Madras two days after the cyclone, and left that place on May 7 for England. The four days' detention at Madras is accounted for by the confusion at that place after so many wrecks.

A CALCUTTA telegram of May 7 announces the departure of Lord Napier, the Acting Viceroy, on that date from Calcutta for England. On the same day Sir Philip Wodehouse was sworn in as Governor of Bombay.

THE telegraph informs us that the Flying Squadron sailed from Bombay on the 6th of this month. It appears from the Bombay papers that, in accordance with the changes proposed by Sir W. Mends, Director of Transports at the Admiralty, Bombay has at length been declared the future head-quarters of the naval force in the Indian seas. The naval and victualling stores at Trincomalee will therefore be removed to the Western Capital, and Trincomalee itself will probably be abandoned. India's contribution to the cost of the Indian squadron has also, we understand, been raised to £70,000 a year. It would be a more statesmanlike proceeding to restore to India her local navy as well as her local army; but it seems hopeless to look for either reform at present.

THE telegraph brings later accounts of the terrible cyclone which raged among the shipping at Madras, and caused a heavy flood at Vellore. It is now stated that thirteen Europeans lost their lives at Madras, and that the reported wreck of the Dupuy de Lome turns out to have been a mistake. On the other hand the number of victims to the Vellore floods has swollen from four hundred to a thousand. Forty tanks have also burst, twelve thousand persons are reported houseless, and three thousand destitute.

ACCORDING to a telegram from Rome, the Burmese Embassy, consisting of four persons, arrived there on its way to England in the beginning of this month. It was to be received in state by the King of Italy at Naples, after which it would pass through the chief cities of Italy, before coming on to England.

SIR WILLIAM MUIR appears to look with small favour on the new system of spelling Indian proper names. He has officially informed the Viceroy in Council, through his own Secretary, that he thinks the official adoption of Mr. Hunter's system would be "a grave mistake," introducing confusion and liability to error where little if any such now exists. The old system of spelling by sound was reimposed some five and twenty years ago by "that distinguished statesman," Mr. Thomason, with whose opinion his Honour entirely concurs. The scientific system he holds to be "quite unsuited for popular and administrative use." It discards, for instance, "certain combinations, such as oo and ee, which cannot possibly be mispronounced by an Englishman, for others which, being arbitrary in their use, are constantly liable to be pronounced variously." The word "Koonch," for instance, pronounces itself, but write it Kunch, and most people would make it rhyme with "bunch" and "crunch." Names like "Deeg" and "Beet," again, would be mispronounced by nine Englishmen out of ten if they were written Dig and Bit. Sir William further objects to the use of "diacritical points" as "embarrassing and liable to error." He owns that against his better judgment he allowed Mr. Hunter's system to be followed in compiling the Provincial Gazetteer, but he pleads against its substitution in the ordinary business of the North-West Provinces for the "well-known, long-established, and popular system now in force." There would be better reason for this protest if there were anything like a uniform method of spelling already in vogue. But how many Indian names are there which two Englishmen would spell alike on the principle of translating sounds from one language into another? Fewer people, we imagine, would mispronounce Karâchi than Kurrachee, which we have heard pronounced in three or four different ways. Is Amritsar more misleading than Umritsir, Banâras than Benares, Nilgiri than Neilgherry, or Audh than Oude? Ambâla is surely as near the mark as Umballa, Zamindar as Zumeendar, and Nawâb would anyhow fare better than Nabob. Our English vowels are the great stumbling-block to any scheme of transliteration, because we never feel certain of their proper sounds. We have but, put, and duty, altar, callous, and able, gold and nod, here, there, and set, wind and mind, round and wound, read and bread, aisle and wait, to say nothing of other combinations which puzzle the foreigner, and for which the average Briton would be unable to account. Some of our consonants also have uncertain sounds, according as the word comes from an old-English or a Latin source. On the whole, if an uniform system of spelling Indian names be desirable, especially in official documents, we are inclined to think that of Jones and Wilson more workmanlike than any based on Dr. Gilchrist's method.

IF Mr. Cowan had hanged his Kuka prisoners instead of blowing them away from guns, it is likely enough that the bulk of those who now blame him would have had little to say against such a method of punishing rebellion, although death by hanging is probably more cruel and certainly more protracted than death in the other form. The blowing away from a gun is the work of a moment, but the English mind is apt to shrink from the horror and disgust which such a process might inspire among the bystanders. What would our countrymen think however of the milder punishment suggested by the Oudh Ak- bhar, a native paper? According to this authority, "it was highly improper in Mr. Cowan to blow away so many men from guns all of a sudden." He ought to have contented himself, it seems, with "cutting off their ears and noses."

WITH reference to the question put last Saturday to Mr. G. Duff by Sir D. Wedderburn, we must hope with the former that the Bombay Government will be very careful in working the new income-tax applied "for local purposes" to the non-agricultural classes in Western India. It appears at any rate from the country papers that the imposition of the new tax has raised a general outcry among the people affected by it. Following as it has so close on the heels of the Census, they connect the two things together, regarding the latter as part of the procedure employed for raising the former. We are further told that hundreds of petitions against the new levy are pouring in, and that the discontent provoked by it is very general. It is strange what a charm this mode of raising money possesses for those who can best afford to pay the tax. We should have thought however that one income-tax at a time was more than enough to satisfy the official craving for excitement. Could not the Bombay Government have waited until Sir R. Temple had given up his favourite method of "getting at" the commercial classes?

THE shareholders of the Old Bank of Bombay were unfortunate in their attempt to gain a favourable hearing from the House of Commons. With Mr. Grant Duff and Sir Stafford Northcote both against them, the result was less surprising than it might seem to those who hoped that their prayer for compensation would be considered only with reference to the claims of ordinary justice. Mr. Gregory brought forward a strong case for mercy on behalf of his clients, but the Under-Secretary for India was so overcome with sympathy for the pockets of the Indian taxpayers, that he could see no reason for refilling those of the widows and orphans who had invested their money on the strength of what in India was generally considered a Government Guarantee. It may be true that the Indian Government had always "set its face like a flint" against the notion that it was in any way answerable for the safety of a Bank three of whose directors were appointed by itself. But the very fact of such an arrangement would seem to most people a pretty clear proof that the Bank was something very different from similar concerns of a more private character. And did not the Indian Government step in, at a critical moment, to prop up its tottering fortunes by a large subsidy, which only postponed and intensified the final catastrophe? It may be that the shareholders had no legal claim for indemnity on the Indian Government, but this is one of those cases for which something more than legal justice might fairly be pleaded; and Mr. Grant Duff might at least have spared his sneers at the widows and orphans who "came whining to Government" for redress of suffering caused in great part by the culpable recklessness of the Government's appointed agents. The measures which brought the Bank to ruin could hardly have been carried out if the three Government Directors had done their duty in spite of the remaining six.

WE are glad to see that Captain Dacey's project of a double-steamer for the Channel finds favour with so competent a judge of such things as Captain Taylor, whose interesting letter will be found in another page. We shall be very glad to hear his opinion on the best harbours for the Euphrates Valley Line.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

MONDAY, May 13, 1872.

A RAJAH'S VISIT TO ENGLAND.

IT is only a year and a-half since the promising young Rajah of Kolhapoor left these shores, after a few months' sojourn, to die at Florence a month afterwards on his way back to his own country. Our readers will remember the account we gave of his death, and of the funeral rites performed over his body on the banks of the Arno, at dead of night, in strict accordance with Hindu usage. Never since the remains of Shelley were burnt on the wild sea-shore near Lerici, had a like ceremony been witnessed on Italian ground. The young Maratha prince's premature death cut short a life of remarkable promise at the moment when it began to bear visible fruit. His memory however still lives in the hearts of many friends, one of whom, his old tutor Captain West, has now brought out a neatly printed edition of the Rajah's Diary, written during his visit to Europe in very fair English, which needed few corrections from the editor's pen. To this "somewhat meagre" yet not uninteresting record of a busy time, he has prefixed a pleasant little retrospect of the history of Kolhapoor with a brief account of the late Rajah's earlier years, and of the events that led him to cross the "Kala Pani" in search of the knowledge that only comes from travel.*

The little State of Kolhapoor is one of many that still survive the downfall of Maratha greatness, to show, "like rocks left on land by some great inundation"—as the Editor himself puts it—how far the power of Sivaji's countrymen once extended. It is a strange story, that sudden uprising of Mahrashtra in the seventeenth century from a sleep of more than three hundred years under the Mohammedan yoke. About fifty years after Sivaji's death in 1680, the two States of Sattara and Kolhapoor were the seats of two rival dynasties sprung from the great Maratha leader's two sons. In the middle of the eighteenth century Kolhapoor came into conflict with its English neighbours who objected to the piracies of the Maratha State. From time to time fresh quarrels arose from the same cause, until in 1812 the reigning Rajah gave up his chief port to the English, and renounced piracy in return for a guarantee of his possessions against all attack from without. His son's loyalty to us during the war with the Peshwah was repaid by a grant of some districts formerly belonging to Kolhapoor. By his brother's misrule British interference was again provoked on two or three occasions. The insurrection of 1844 during his son's minority again called for the coercive influence of British troops. Since then the presence of a regular Political Agent has done much for the better government of a country once famed for internal disorders. Even in 1857 Kolhapoor remained comparatively free from disturbance, in spite of intrigues fomented by the Rajah's brother.

The late Rajah was only sixteen when his uncle died in 1866. For the next few years he lived in a bungalow near the Residency, in charge of Captain West who overlooked his studies, and encouraged him in every manly accomplishment. He learned to play billiards, croquet, and cricket, took for a native plenty of exercise on horseback, and was particularly fond of shooting. Of an amiable but rather weak nature, he listened readily to good advice, was eager to stand well with the British Government, and showed a fortunate preference for the society of Europeans of both sexes. In due time he took his first lessons in public business, attending the courts of the Agency, and learning to decide simple causes by himself, until in 1870 he received one department of State into his own charge. In 1868 he attended Sir S. Fitzgerald's first Durbar, and two years afterwards he played a leading part in the greetings offered to the Duke of Edinburgh by the native princes of Western India. It was then that he made up his mind to visit England in spite of the hindrances which social and religious usages were sure to throw in his way.

His Diary, which begins with his arrival at Paris, if it does little more than jot down the journeyings and sightseeing of each day, contains not a few passages more or less likely to interest or amuse the reader. It is always amusing to note how things in our own country may have impressed themselves on a foreigner; and the Rajah of Kolhapoor, if he wrote sparingly, was not a fool. The diary makes no pretension to be more than it is—a plain, almost colourless record of what the writer saw day by day in a new country, among new acquaintances. It shows, among other things, what a deal of ground he went over, and what a number of sights he saw in the shortest possible time. One day, for instance, he takes his dancing lesson in the morning, goes in the afternoon to the Working Men's Exhibition, and ends the day at St. James's Theatre, "where I liked the play called Paul Pry very much." Two days afterwards he goes by rail to Windsor, explores Eton College, "a large and good building," drives and walks through Windsor park, and returns home, having "enjoyed this day very much." Two days later he drives to Wimbledon, "to see the shooting for prizes at twelve o'clock." After much wandering about the camp and talking to many people, he drives to Hampton Court, loses himself in the Maze, which he "liked very much," admires the garden, and returns home after dinner to an evening party at 10.30. Another day is divided between the Bank, which greatly astonishes him, the Suffolk-street Portrait Gallery, the General Post-office, where he "liked the way of sorting the letters and of sealing (that is, stamping) them," and the Gaiety Theatre, "a small but nice building," where he saw a play which he did not "like very much."

Another hard day's work comprised a run down to Oxford, the "Lions" of which were duly shown to the Rajah, a drive to Blenheim, "a very large palace," which "has got a large compound also," and the journey thence back to Oxford and London. His stay in London was varied by trips to places yet more distant, including Liverpool, Manchester, and the Scotch Highlands. The factories in Manchester "spoil the beauty of the town." At Liverpool he was "very much struck to see cases decided in this country in such a short time" as a minute or two a-piece. He "enjoyed immensely" a ball given in the Town-hall by the Mayor of Liverpool, at which he "danced with some ladies" and drank champagne with the Mayor and his guests. At the meeting of the British Association he "spoke a few words" with reference to Mr. G. Campbell's speech on the physical geography and people of India. At Inverness he danced the Lancers, admired the Highland costume, and "liked the Scotch reels very much." During his first day's shooting over the Scotch moors he was "very much surprised to see the dogs beating jungle like men," and finding out the dead birds "in a very astonishing way." He thought the "sceneries" round Loch Lomond "exceedingly beautiful and charming," and enjoyed his trip to the Lakes very much, having "never seen such pretty and charming scenery before."

In crossing the Channel to Ireland the Rajah suffered much "on account of its heaving." He came across "a great Shikaree" in Lord Powerscourt. Wherever he went in these islands his luncheon seems to have consisted of "champagne and grapes," and his evenings were usually spent either at the play, or in a ball-room. We are sorry to find that he did not appreciate the Two Roses at the Vaudeville. In general, however, he seems to have been very much pleased with everything and everybody, from the Prince of Wales to Sir Bartle Frere, from the Crystal Palace fireworks to the Holborn Circus. What particularly astonished him was to see "the simple and unpretending ways of talking of the Ministers—especially of Mr. Gladstone. They are very gentle in conversation. They have not got the pride of the Indian officers, though they are the leading men of the English Empire." We would fain hope that the Indian officers to whom he thus refers are not those of the old Indian Army. In former days at any rate the remark would have been more appropriate to the "Royals," who knew and cared to know little enough about the natives of the country in which for a time their lot was cast. It is natural however that Englishmen, living as masters in a foreign country, should assume towards the natives a somewhat higher tone than Englishmen at home would do to Indians whom they may receive as guests.

MR. COWAN AND THE KUKA EXECUTIONS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—With the greatest regret I have read in your Mail of the 6th inst. that for the execution of a dangerous gang of Kookas Mr. Cowan, the Deputy Commissioner, was dismissed, and his immediate superior, Mr. Forsyth, removed to a lower position. I greatly admire and highly appreciate your most able leader upon this subject. I am a native of India, served in the Punjab for several years under the English Government, at a most critical conjuncture, and continue to receive letters from Indian Princes and various other influential and experienced friends; and they in all rectitude and candour inform me, that had it not been for the prompt and energetic measures adopted by the above-named gentlemen the Punjab would have been in a flame and would have presented a dreadful scene of bloodshed and plunder from one end to the other. The whole unvarnished fact is this, that for the last ten years a great sensation has been prevailing throughout the Punjab in consequence of the detection of a conspiracy on the part of the Kookas sect to raise an insurrection in that part of the country. Several Kookas were convicted of cold-blooded murder on the clearest evidence, and sentenced to be hanged. The truculent Kookas are, beyond a shadow of doubt, by nature murderers, mutineers and traitors; as such they were taken in flagrante delicto, and for such offences the punishment of death is usually adjudged. The whole tribe directly or indirectly participated in the mutinous rising. If this be so, then the whole body might justly have been executed.

Secondly, all troops had been despatched to join the Delhi Camp of Exercise. There was only the raw police force to guard the district. The crisis did not admit of any leniency being shown to the sanguinary rebels. Things were at such a stage that either the Kookas must be executed, or else the lives of British officials and their families sacrificed. It is a source of much joy, satisfaction, and gratitude to the inhabitants of the Punjab that a timely deliverance has been vouchsafed them. Anyone who is well acquainted with the affairs of the Punjab will not doubt for a moment the necessity and the justice of the retribution which has befallen these blood-thirsty Kookas.

Thirdly, it was impossible for Mr. Cowan at the moment to select rebels for the various degrees of punishment, or to wait for a formal trial, and it must be borne in mind that if the prisoners had been reserved for ordinary trial, such leniency would have been attributed to the weakness of Government, and in all probability there would have been a rising of a large body of hot-headed Hindoos ready to fraternise with a clan who have undertaken to clear the land of cow-slayers, and who would have overpowered the guard set over the prisoners. The risk of an outbreak at the most critical point, namely Umritsar, the religious capital of the Sikhs, would have been extreme. Therefore, the immediate execution of the fanatical Kookas was almost unavoidable. In fact, if Mr. Cowan, through dread of responsibility, or any other reason, had attempted any other course than the one he actually pursued, the attempt would have been disastrous.

The necessity for inflicting such stern justice on so large a body of criminals is much to be lamented, but it was justice, nevertheless. It is to be hoped that the new Governor-general of India, who is a thorough master of Indian politics and the Home Government, after learning all the facts, and investigating the matter from the Alpha to the Omega, will reinstate Messrs. Forsyth and Cowan, officers who evinced indomitable courage, great energy, and moral resolution under circumstances of extraordinary trial and difficulty. It must be remembered that all the Punjab officials brought up in the school of the late lamented Sir Henry Lawrence and Lord Lawrence are strictly instructed to adhere rigidly to the policy of overawing by a prompt and stern initiative, and in the hours of difficulty to stop short at nothing but absolute, active, and positive loyalty. On the 1st August, 1857, at a station called Ujalla, near Lahore, the Deputy-Commissioner of that place, to use his own words in his report to Government, says, "Thus, within forty-eight hours from the date of the crime, there fell by the law nearly 500 men." He goes on to describe as follows:—"The remainder refused to come out of the bastion where they had been imprisoned temporarily a few hours before. Expecting a rush and resistance, preparations were made against escape; but little expectation was entertained of the real and awful fate which had fallen on the remainder of the mutineers, who had anticipated by a few short hours their fate. The doors were opened, and behold they were nearly all dead men! Unconsciously to all, the tragedy of Holwell's Black Hole had been re-enacted. No noise had been heard during the night, otherwise relief would have been given. Forty-five bodies dead from fright, exhaustion, and fatigue, but principally suffocation, were dragged into light, and consigned, in common with all the other bodies, into one common pit by the hands of the village sweepers." He concludes his despatch by stating—"The philanthropists of Exeter-hall may cry out, but with all their resolutions and orations they will never bring life back again to those dead. The annexed letters are appended, as a proof that no officer in the Punjab can do his duty without instant and warm recognition."

Sir John, now Lord Lawrence, writes to this gallant and promising officer, in his letter dated the 2nd August, 1857, "I congratulate you on your success against the 26th Native Infantry. You and your police acted with much energy and spirit, and deserve well of the State."

Sir Robert Montgomery wrote to the same gentleman in the following terms:—"All honour to you for what you have done, and right well you did it. There was no hesitation or delay, or drawing back. It will be a feather to your cap as long as you live." Lord Lawrence and Sir Robert Montgomery are both statesmen of acknowledged ability, talent, experience, and strict impartiality and justice at the same time tempered with mercy; truly Christian men with tender hearts and great benevolence. They would have been the first to inflict condign punishment upon that deputy commissioner, if, in their opinion, he had done wrong. Mr. Cowan, no doubt, acted upon the same precedent set to him. In India, particularly the Punjab, a newly-annexed kingdom, with its inhabitants naturally warlike and inclined to be turbulent upon any weakness on the part of the authorities, such prompt and speedy action and such terrible examples are most indispensably necessary to operate as a warning to the wavering mind.—Yours obediently, SYED ABDULLAH.

BENEVOLENCE AND HUMANITY.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—The Oudh Akhbar of the 12th ult. contains an article headed "The Influence of Benevolence and Humanity," of which the following is an abridged translation:—

The common people in India consider that the English nation never directs its thoughts to Indian affairs, unless it be for the purpose of advancing its own interests. That this idea is entirely erroneous is sufficiently proved by the fact that the claims of the titular Nawab Nazim of Bengal, ridiculous and unfounded though they are, were yet heard and discussed before the august tribunal of Parliament. It is a great pity that Government does not warn all grievance-mongers proceeding to England not to waste their money and labour in bringing before Parliament cases which have been already disposed of by the Governor-General in Council. The fact is that many Eurasians and Europeans, anxious to visit England, but without the means to do so, lie in wait for imbecile but wealthy princes, and endeavour to entrap them by holding out all sorts of brilliant hopes, and boasting of their own immense influence amongst the leading members of Parliament; and the hapless prince, whose experience of life has hitherto been confined to the routine of his own palace and the society of eunuchs and females of the worst type, at once snaps at the bait and starts for England, where he is at once pounced upon and taken possession of by a band of briefless barristers, solicitors in want of practice, and other needy philanthropists. These gentry continue to flatter and delude him, showing him in print how ill he has been used, and how warm an interest he is creating in the public mind; and thus he is led on from one folly to another until at last he involves himself in debt and troubles, and having spent all his ready cash he is deserted by his parasites, and left to extricate himself from his difficulties as best he may. He then becomes a nuisance to the Secretary of State for India, and is at last sent home at the public expense, having succeeded in bringing ruin and disgrace upon himself and all his family.

It is the duty of the Government to devise some means for preventing the abuses to which we allude. Public opinion in India is in favour of allowing Native Princes to visit England, so long as they are under the care and auspices of proper British officials; but unless they are so escorted, the visit is certain to end in their ruin. The scheme of sending young men from India to England at Government expense, for the purpose of studying for the Bar or for the Competitive Examinations has, with one exception, proved an utter failure. These young men return to India disappointed in prospects and corrupted in morals from the society in which they mix, which (especially the female portion) is not always of the most respectable character.

Yours obediently,

A PHILO-BENGALI.

LUCIFER MATCHES IN A MAGAZINE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—Are the Indian Council aware of the probable effects of the latest legislative experiment on the corpus vile of the British Indian Empire? I allude to the Marriage Bill. In vain did the only men of Indian experience protest in Council against casting this firebrand into the country. Probably if the authors of this Bill had tried to invent a measure which should awaken all the mistrust and suspicion as to the motives of the English which caused the revolt of 1857, they could not possibly have devised one so well calculated as this Bill to effect that end. It is like putting a box of fuses in a powder magazine. It merely requires some accident like the old order about the greased cartridges to set it on fire. You will say I am exaggerating. What does this Act do? It strikes at the root of the whole religious and social economy of both Hindoo and Mahometans. Your readers do not require to be reminded how property is affected by marriage in India. Under Hindoo law, over a great part of India a widow succeeds during her lifetime to the hereditary landed property of her late husband; and hereditary landed property is actually inalienable by the children. Under this new law a man (say a Hindoo), if he becomes attached to a Nautch girl, has only to go before the Civil Judge and say he is la mazhab, "without sect," and they can be married. I need not lengthen my letter by detailing the consequences, and showing you how this Bill cuts at the very root of all the most cherished institutions of the people of India.

It is useless to urge that the Bill is intended to relieve a particular sect of modern Hindoos from the difficulties raised by their abandonment of the orthodox rite. The people, generally, will not believe this any more than they believed that the religious tracts exhorting them all to be Christians, which were extensively circulated in 1856, did not emanate from the Government. They believe that we did intend to force them all to adopt Christianity, but were prevented by the outbreak. They believe this Bill is another attempt to effect the same end by an artful measure which will sap the foundations of society, break up the family tie so closely interwoven with religion, and break the ground for a forcible extension of Christianity by giving a premium to members of old families to declare themselves la mezhab, without religion; in other words, half converts.

I hear that the utmost possible consternation prevails among all classes of natives all over the country. Meetings have been held, and protests by the thousand got up; but it is too late. The Income-tax created the greatest annoyance, but it was child's play compared to the apprehension excited by this most ill-starred act of the legislature, forced into law by a few groove-running Englishmen, against the protest of such men as John Inglis, Sir R. Temple, and others, on the ground that because the law allows marriage to be contracted before the civil magistrate in England it should be the same in India.

If the legislature must legislate, cannot they expend their morbid activity in tinkering up old Stamp Acts or something, instead of aiming a blow at the very foundation of that closely interwoven fabric of social, domestic, and religious institutions which the natives, whether Hindoo or Mohamedan, value so highly that they are at all times ready to resist any encroachment upon it at the peril of their lives?

If the Secretary of State or the Home Government do not put their veto on this Bill, take my word for it, you may look out for squalls. Before passing a Bill like this, why did not the legislature take the trouble to send round to all the principal cities in India and ascertain the tone of public feeling? I suppose because there was no precedent for such a course.

Such sentiments as these are called the whinings of an alarmist. I must submit to it; but I cannot see a man running into a magazine with a lighted match without doing what little may be in my power to stop him.

The Finance Committee might as well suspend their operations and save their time.

THE CHANNEL FERRY.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—Engaged upon a work which was the aspiration of my early maritime career—a new edition of the "East India Directory" of the late Captain James Horsburgh—all available sources of information as to harbours, winds, and weather of the Mediterranean and Eastern Seas come under my scrutiny; and I submit that the Euphrates Valley Railway project has not been much looked at from a seaman's point of view. You were good enough some months ago to notice favourably my paper on the Harbours of India. Therein allusion is made to a very similar work—the Madras Railway—going from sea coast to sea coast with a harbour at neither end. And yet I remember the time when enthusiastic Bengalees and Madrases anticipated getting their English letters several days sooner by it. Engineers were going to make harbours at both ends; but as yet they have only learned how not to do it; and the Bombay-Calcutta Railway has now removed any necessity for making harbours to expedite the mail service.

The Euphrates Valley Railway scheme has a similar object in view; and, in common with many others, I anticipate that mails and passengers will have a through-line from England to India, not many years hence, if God permit. But, without doubt, until trains can cross our Channel and the Bosphorus, we must break-bulk at the Mediterranean and the Persian Gulf. Then comes the question, "At what Ports?" and here we have the nautical side of the question. "Our failures" make me rather sceptical of the ultimate success of many harbour-making schemes; which take no pains to ascertain the accessibility of a port, or the weather which their works will have to encounter, much less to consider whether there be not some fluvial or oceanic forces that will spoil their embryo harbours.

Mr. Robertson's Report on Indian Harbours (upon which you commented a few weeks ago) did not disappoint me; he writes cautiously, as one who knows his work and the responsibility, complaining of a lack of trustworthy data and evidence procurable out there. This lack was clearly foreseen by some officials at the India-office, who urged that a maritime surveyor should be associated with the harbour-engineer; but the military engineer, who came home expressly by the Viceroy's order to obtain the services of a harbour-engineer, could not conceive such an association to be necessary. Howbeit, the Indian Government (it was not the work of the India-office) got little enough for their money by the step they took. Mr. Robertson's views as to deepening the Paumben Pass coincide with mine, but Mr. Townsend's are entirely different. When two of the same cloth disagree as to the feasibility of a particular project, it is no wonder that the military engineer and the sailor are seldom able to—as the dear old Admiral (Mediterranean) Smyth once wrote to Captain Basil Hall—"row in the same boat without catching crabs."

And this brings me to what I want to say to-day about a project—the Channel Ferry—which stands in the fore-front of almost all schemes for bringing India nearer to England for mails and passengers. I was much pleased to see your notice of Captain Dicey's plan of the double steamer, somewhat similar in principle to the Ceylon outrigger-boats, and more so to those of the Feejee Islands. On the west coast of India, about Malwan and Vingorla, large outrigger fishing-boats are much used, the safest and most comfortable of all sea-going craft. I take for granted that none will dispute this, and that engineers will soon contrive to have one of Captain Dicey's double ferry-boats on the Channel, using the existing harbours without the expense of money and time that would be involved in attempts to make better and deeper ones.

The Jangar, a double canoe with platform, is used on all broad rivers of the Malabar coast, where horses, palankeens, and men are safely and comfortably carried across in all weathers. In the south-west monsoon, some of these long stretches of water have quite a rough sea on for such a tiny ferry-boat, but its buoyancy and safety are marvellous, and I venture to predict even less discomfort during the worst weather in one made from 300 to 400 feet long for the Strait of Dover. The inner wall-sides of the separate hulls will offer no opposition to progress but that of friction; and the interval between them furnishes space for most powerful paddles, the back-wash from which will tell most advantageously upon the inner side of either starboard or port rudder which may be in use, and make her answer helm more readily.

Commencing to-day about the Channel Ferry, I will, with your permission, next week say a few words about those Mediterranean and Persian Gulf harbours which are in my judgment best suited for the railway termini.—Faithfully yours,

A. D. TAYLOR,

Commander late Indian Navy.

THE BUDGET.

The Englishman remarks that though Sir Richard Temple has not the wit to turn to good the opportunities that fortune gives him, he has had the adroitness to take advantage of a most untoward accident in order to forward his own blind policy. We have good reason for believing that the late Viceroy had fully made up his mind to rid the country of this incubus. He had never liked the income-tax, though he was persuaded to regard it as a tolerable expedient for surmounting a serious financial crisis. But the mass of concurrent testimony as to the iniquitous working of the tax in practice had had on him that effect which it could not fail to have upon any honest man with a mind open to conviction and sufficient intelligence to appreciate the value of the facts before him. And we have little hesitation in saying that had he lived, Sir Richard Temple would have found its abandonment consistent with a surplus. But Sir Richard Temple has shrewdly calculated that, with the Duke of Argyll on his side, he need fear no opposition from a new Viceroy, and that even those members who condemn the tax will forbear to press their views rather than embarrass Lord Northbrook at the very commencement of his career.

The Indian Daily News admits that the financial statement was an ample collection of figures and facts no doubt, as an accountant would show them, to display balances correctly. Where the theme rose above a mere debtor and creditor elaboration, and touched on the higher ground of an economist's province, there was an absolute barrenness of any fresh proposition tending in any way to the removal of universally condemned measures for supplementing income. The only change, if change it can be called, is a proposal to raise the minimum of the incidence of the income-tax—to make the tax, as Sir Richard Temple said, "as it was always intended to be, a tax on classes in comparatively easy circumstances." The income-tax indeed came in for a good deal of eulogy. According to Sir Richard, it "with all its drawbacks had done right good service!" Further, the tax, "as a measure, is manifestly indispensable, because without it there would be a deficit in the budget"—a mild sort of woman's reason, the soundness of which will possibly become clearer as the figures are closely studied. Throughout the speech there was a subdued tone of exultation, at the soundness and strength of the position, though there were not wanting indications of a determination to find an excuse, however lame, for the perpetuation of the income-tax. There is a weakness in that portion of the financial statement where a distinction is drawn between "precarious or abnormal surplus" arising from an extraordinary advance in the price of opium and the consequent unexpected accretion of income, and between "the normal and of regular character savings in expenditure." Whilst disinclined to place reliance on the abnormal source of surplus, the Finance member has no hesitation in displaying the figures which declare an ample surplus from "normal regular character" sources. He shows how by economy, even with declared diminished receipts, expenditure has been provided for and a surplus left. In his exposition of the conditions and prospects of opium for the coming year, and the assumed price of Rs. 1,200 per chest for the budget estimate, Sir Richard, on the avowed determination of the Government not to sell more than 48,000 chests of the Bengal drug in the calendar year, initiates a period of high prices, if they had not already prevailed, and makes out a clear case of too low an estimate for this heading of revenue.

The Madras Mail declares that the alarm exhibited by Lord Mayo and his Council in the autumn of 1870, regarding the tremendous deficit that they foresaw to be inevitable, unless the income-tax were placed on a war-footing, and expenditure ruthlessly curtailed in all directions, has been, as the Press predicted would be the case, stultified by facts; and the official year that was branded during its mid-age with every term of opprobrium that official financialism could devise may well complain of having been defamed in a most cruel fashion. . . . While the Government of India were doing their best to damage their credit by announcements of impending bankruptcy; while the Viceroy in Council in fervid resolutions was taking the public into his confidence, and in piteous terms was entreating his subordinates of all grades not only to retrench, but also to communicate financial wrinkles to the Government, who thus publicly admitted their need of them, the state of affairs was most prosperous, and a surplus of grand proportions was accruing. The imposition of a 3½ per cent. income-tax is thus proved to have been quite unnecessary for the maintenance of financial equilibrium, and the Government of India have justified the censures that were evoked from all sides by their impulsive cries of alarm in the middle of the official year. But one good result, of a permanent description, may be attributed to that alarm, however much it compromised the dignity of Government. We refer, of course, to the Decentralisation Resolution of December, 1870, which entrusted to local Governments increased financial control in certain departments, by giving them a regular allotment of funds, to spend as they think best, and to supplement by local taxes, or to save and otherwise appropriate as may to them seem desirable. . . . The compulsory retention of the 1 per cent. income-tax we were not prepared for. The tax was clearly not required in 1871-2, but it is as clearly requisite in 1872-73. The question, however, again intrudes itself, is the game worth the candle; is the net return from this impost a sufficient set-off for the discontent that it excites, for the outrage that it does in fact commit on the sensitive Oriental? We do not object for a moment to pay the tax ourselves, for it is a mere flea-bite of direct taxation; but, we are convinced, at the same time, that the Government are ill-advised in adhering to a policy that is condemned even by the majority of their own subordinates. The income-tax in India is an anomaly, an impolitic illustration of the danger of Government by minorities; but it is better to endure the fiscal evils we have grown accustomed to than to risk the infliction of others of greater severity of which we have as yet no personal experience.

THE WHITE PARIAS.

The Madras Times thinks it cannot possibly be that the British public would submit to see their countrymen disqualified from holding office simply because they have white skins. We believe that the policy announced by the Duke of Argyll is not only most unfair to those who won India for England, but that it is most dangerous for the welfare of India itself. In every way it is dangerous. It is dangerous because it threatens to fill up offices of responsibility with men who do not possess the confidence of the natives of the country as Europeans do, and it is dangerous as creating a European population in India whose interests will be hostile to the Government. Whether the Government likes it or not, there is, and will be, a growing non-official European population in India, characterised by the energy that belongs to the race, and possessing all the Anglo-Saxon failings and virtues. Does the Duke of Argyll imagine that such a body of people can be politically outcast without danger? Does he think that men will quietly stand by and see their children deprived of all chance of a career, simply because they are of English blood, without action? Englishmen of all stations are loyal and patriotic, but they would be more or less than men if they failed to wage unceasing war against such monstrous injustice. The powers that be perhaps despise the hostility of such people. To do so would be in keeping with the folly that provokes it. But our rulers have happily never had any experience of what English disaffection could do in India; and they would be wise indeed to hark back from their present position, and take measures to prevent their ever having any such experience. They may depend upon it that nothing save the grossest injustice will ever create such disaffection; but it seems to us that the present policy need only be carried out to bring about a state of matters in which it will be impossible for the non-official European population to view the Government without bitter hatred. There are many Europeans here who, from want of means to go home, or want of connection there, are obliged to rear families of European children in India. For many of these children the public services offer the only available career, and it would be utter folly to expect men to remain contented while their children's bread is taken from them.

THE ART OF GETTING ON.

The Indian Observer thinks it is worth while for young men on their first landing in this country to lay well to heart the rules by which success is to be attained. Let them study the secret of great and successful work, analyse carefully the lives of the able Indian administrators, and deduce from them the golden rules of getting on in India. The first is to do if possible any other work than that allotted to you. Above all, let the youthful aspirant to an Indian reputation take care to provide himself with a hobby. The more disagreeable it is to other people, the better. The first notion to be got rid of is the absurd idea that one has any duty to perform. If one can do one's duty and acquire reputation at the same time, so much the better. But it is not enough to leave the beaten track, unless one can manage to advertise one self; and we can only say that no one has risen to eminence in this country without being a thorough master of the puff in all its forms. The "puff solitary" is the great path to name and fame. To be able to stand up and say to the world Athanasius contra mundum, is a truly proud position. Possibly the universe may be in the right, but it takes a long time for it to arrive at a consciousness of its own opinion. The Indian hobby-rider need not fear good society. Good society does not quite approve of Miss Olivia Warbut; but it fears her, and in its heart of hearts respects her, because she makes a noise. Her creed has something bizarre about it, which redeems it from the curse of vulgarity. Good society rather prefers Orson to Valentine if he be not a person of humdrum virtue. Good society leaves virtue and duty to Southey and Wordsworth to take care of. The great ally of the hobby-rider is the apathy of the Anglo-Indian world. He may always count upon success if he only perseveres. If he carefully sticks the hard corner of his scheme into other people's backs, they will move out of his way. There are, of course, certain drawbacks, as we before indicated, to the course which we have laid down for the young man who wishes to pave his way to success. It may not always be successful; it may be successful only for a time. It sometimes happens that conscientious work profits the workman as well as the employer, but not often. And it does sometimes happen that the leading lights of the world are eventually extinguished or dimmed. Men who have shone in their youth as administrators, philologists, exhibitors, reformers, pioneers of progress and civilisation, do sometimes come to be stigmatised by an ungrateful world as Hierophants of Humbug and Apostles of Unreason. But in the meantime they have their reward.

LABOUR IN JAILS.—We understand that the Government of Bengal, in the Judicial Department, has sanctioned a set of rules, regulating the employment of prisoners on different kinds of jail labour in all jails, in supercession of Rules No. 250 and 251 of the Jail Code. They are divided into three classes, viz., penal, hard, and light labour. Penal labour consists of the treadmill, stone breaking, oil pressing, lime and flour grinding, and soorkey making; hard labour of weaving gunny blanket, cloth, sattrajee, rug and carpet, masonry, compositors, carpenters, and blacksmiths, &c., &c.; light labour of tailoring, gardening, jail writer's work, barber, and miscellaneous duties. Those prisoners who are sentenced to three months and under are to perform the full term of their sentence on penal labour. Those sentenced to twelve months, half term on penal labour, and the other half on hard labour. Those sentenced to three years, full term on hard labour; and those sentenced to three years and above three-quarters on hard, and one quarter on light labour.—Indian Daily News.

THE NEW GOVERNOR OF MADRAS.—The conclusions we arrive at from Lord Hobart's writings are, first, that he is a really able man, of broad liberal views, who is a facile writer and probably a tolerable speaker, but who likes to deliver himself a trifle too pompously. Lord Hobart's horror of diplomacy is a little amusing to remark in connection with the fact that he is about to succeed Lord Napier. We can scarcely think that Lord Hobart is a man given to very narrow and exclusively puritanical views upon religious matters, when we find him so impartially liberal in his political ones. There is something in the diction he adopts—a lofty and dignified manner—which seems to us to commend him as a fit candidate for the high post he is about to occupy. There is nothing loose about his style, nothing tawdry, nothing mean or slipshod. If he errs, he errs on the right side for a Governor of a great Presidency. We certainly want a man who will maintain his position before the eyes of Hindus. The one fault of Lord Hobart as a writer is a glaring one. It lies on the surface. But the more we look deeply into his composition, the more we scrutinise the matter of these productions, we find ourselves holding a higher opinion of our coming ruler. As to his ability and large-heartedness of purpose, we think—judging at least from his writings—there can be no reasonable question. There is, however, a certain "dreaminess" about his politics observable in these compositions. If, however, he proves as practical in operation as his writings prove him to be exalted in conception, we shall soon have a Governor in our midst whose talents we may admire, and whose deeds we may respect.—Madras Times.

THE BUDGET STATEMENT.

Sir R. Temple concluded his speech as follows:—The Government savings banks of all kinds (including those at the Presidencies, in the districts, and in regiments) have now 35,600 depositors, and £1,126,772, or near 1½ million of deposits. The figures, if not absolutely large as yet, are annually increasing. The new district banks in the interior of the Bengal Presidency have, within the past year, increased from 49 to 92 in number, the number of depositors up to recent date being 2,300, and the deposits amounting to £40,374. These are only beginnings, but they will grow.

There are now 362 money order offices in British India; the number of orders issued were, in 1870-71, 242,700, amounting in value to £1,300,600, or one and one-third million. These figures are the highest yet attained. The arrangements for a money order system between India and England (so long delayed) are now nearly complete, and will, I hope, soon be announced.

The paper currency has been already adverted to in a former part of this exposition. It will suffice to add that some effect has been given to the arrangements promulgated last year for establishing currency agencies at the district treasuries in the interior, in addition to the previous existing offices of issue. Some twenty-seven of these agencies have been set on foot, and more are in contemplation. In all they have had consigned to them notes to the value of a quarter of a million sterling. This, too, is a commencement, and further development is hoped for. It is matter for regret that the new five-rupee notes have not yet been received from England.

The loan operations explained to-day have simplified the classification of the national debt of India, which may now be abstracted as follows:—There are ten and a half millions (£10,663,600), bearing 5½ per cent. interest, raised in the troublous times consequent on the war of the mutinies. This loan will not be repayable, under its conditions, until 1879, at which time there will accrue to Government an option of repaying. There is more than one million at 5 per cent. (£1,100,000). This is made up of debentures (for periods of ten and fifteen years) issued in 1867-68, to raise money for public works. There are sixteen millions (£16,033,650) at 4½ per cent.; this includes the large item to which I have just been referring, and which, after seven years, is to bear only 4 per cent. It also includes the loan received from Maharajah Holkar and some remnant of former loans. The next item consists of thirty-six and three-quarter millions (£36,778,775), bearing 4 per cent. interest. This is a consolidated head, comprising the loans raised up to 1832, commonly called "the sicca fours," the loans raised in 1842, and in subsequent years up to 1854, and the loans of 1869, one received from the Maharajah of Puttala, and the other raised in open market. There is a small item of £67,900 at 3½ per cent. Besides these rupee loans in India there are the loans raised in England bearing 4 and 5 per cent. interest (departmentally called the "sterling" loans, the amounts being expressed, and the interest payable, in pounds sterling). These now amount to 39 millions (£39,036,017), of which £22,200,000 bear interest at 5 per cent., and the rest, except a petty sum of £20,917, on which no interest is paid, bears interest at 4 per cent. They have been chiefly, though not entirely, raised at various times since the war of the mutinies in 1857. Thus, of the grand total of 104 millions, of "rupee" and "sterling" loans, no less than 54 millions already bear 4 per cent., and 16 millions now at 4½, of which the greater part will bear only 4 per cent. after brief terms of years. Thirty-four millions are bearing a higher rate, and we are only prevented from dealing with these with a view to reduction of interest by the obligatory conditions on which they were raised. The figures just given do not include the £6,299,700 East India stock, for the redemption of which a guarantee fund is accumulating.

Now, inasmuch as the 4 per cent. stock in England and India has during the year commanded higher prices than ever, generally as much as 98 and 99 for 100 pounds or rupees, and has sometimes reached, even slightly exceeded par, it would seem that the credit of the Government of India in the money market may be measured by a rate of something less than 4½ per cent. On the whole, the public credit of British India has never at any period been in a more satisfactory position than during the year just closed.

I shall finish this exposition by summarising its chief points. It has been shown, then—

That for 1870-71 there is an actual surplus of £1,482,990, or 1½ million of income over ordinary expenditure, chiefly owing to increment of opium receipts;

That, however, without this increment, there is still a moderate surplus owing to other and more normal causes;

That, for 1871-72, there is an estimated surplus of £2,700,000 or 2½ millions of income over ordinary expenditure, of which three-fourths are attributable to increase of opium receipts, and one-fourth to ordinary management of the finances;

That the ordinary expenditure has been reduced to a point lower than any which has been seen during the past five years;

That, for 1872-73, there is estimated an equilibrium between income and ordinary expenditure, supported by a small surplus of £287,000, or one-quarter of a million;

That the Income-tax Act for 1871-72 having expired on the 31st of March, 1872, its re-imposition is proposed for 1872-73, at the same rate as before, namely, a fraction above 1 per cent., but with the exemption of incomes between Rs. 750 and Rs. 1,000 per annum; causing the release of 60,000 taxpayers and a sacrifice of only £63,000 of revenue;

That the concession of increased financial control to the several local Governments, in respect to certain provincial services, is working well, apparently affording satisfaction to the local authorities, and fostering a spirit of economy in administration;

That in addition to the previously existing local funds, fresh provincial taxation has been imposed in the various provinces of India, probably amounting in the aggregate to £750,000 per annum;

That at the commencement of 1872-73 there remain upwards of 2½ millions in hand of money borrowed for public works extraordinary, after deducting expenditure and advances on these works up to date;

That it is proposed to meet 2½ millions of expenditure on these works during 1872-73, without borrowing either in England or India;

That the cash balances in India, estimated at 21½ millions on 31st March, 1872, are satisfactorily large, though not too high for the requirements of the country, present and prospective;

That the Indian Treasury is to meet 13 crores of bills to be drawn by the Secretary of State in England upon India during 1872-73;

That the rate of interest on 13½ millions of the national debt has been reduced from 5 per cent. to 4½ for seven years, and thereafter to 4 per cent., and that 2½ millions have been discharged;

That the investment of the specie reserve of the paper currency has been completed nearly up to the legal limit of six millions sterling;

That the establishment of district savings banks is gradually but surely extending in the interior of the country.

I must now conclude this exposition. In previous expositions I have dwelt on the principles which have guided our financial policy. There is now nothing to be added thereto. I can only say that, throughout the past year, those principles have been followed, and have on this occasion, with your Lordship's support, been firmly maintained. And certainly a retrospect of results should encourage us to persevere in our present course. For the ordinary finance is in a condition of surplus; expenditure is kept within limits; the treasury is full; and the State credit is high, higher perhaps than it has ever been. But, though something has been accomplished, still much remains for accomplishment in the way of fiscal and economic improvement. And that should serve as a further incentive for perseverance.

Miscellaneous.

CAPTAIN BEADON.—A correspondent at Loodianah writes to say that Captain Beadon, son of Sir Cecil Beadon, is the successor to Major Parsons as Deputy Commissioner, and not Captain Beecher.—Pioneer.

THE SEISTAN MISSION.—It is now understood that the Seistan Arbitration Mission has come to grief, its mediation being entirely frustrated by the position assumed by the Shah of Persia. General Pollock and Dr. Bellew will return through Persia.—Indian Public Opinion.

MISCARRIAGE OF MAILS.—All letters from Mooltan, Montgomery, and the Punjab frontier missed last mail to England, in consequence of the train from Mooltan being late at Lahore.

A NEW PAPER.—At a meeting of the Anjuman at Delhi, it was resolved that a vernacular newspaper should be started by the society, and be called the Mayo Memorial Gazette.

ROBILKAND.—Bareilly and Phillibheet are saddled with the maintenance of an extra police force for another period of six months. This is not for any riots at last Mohurram, but in consequence of the evil reputation they had gained for themselves aforesaid.

NAVAL.—Captain Beresford, of H.M.'s steam gun-boat Undaunted, four guns, received orders to proceed with his vessel on Thursday, April 18, from the Bengal Government Dockyard for a cruise in the Bay of Bengal and among the Andaman Islands.

EXPECTED ARRIVALS.—We learn that two clergymen are coming out to India for educational work. The Rev. E. Gulliver comes out to be Head-master of the Lahore High School, and the Rev. L. Phillips, B.A., to be an assistant-master at the Mussoorie School.

A CIVILIAN ABSCONDED.—Mr. J. F. Campbell, Deputy Magistrate of Hanskova, near Darjeeling, has absconded. Money is missing from the Hanskova Treasury, and a reward has been offered for his apprehension.

MAJOR PARSONS.—We are glad to hear that the medical men are of opinion that rest and change of scene will soon restore Major Parsons's tone of mind, impaired solely by too heavy and anxious work. Major Parsons will accordingly proceed at once to England on medical certificate.—Pioneer.

SUICIDE.—We regret to say that a case of suicide occurred at this station on Saturday last, the 6th inst., a man belonging to her Majesty's 20th Hussars having shot himself with his carbine. A verdict of temporary insanity was returned on enquiry into the case, and he was buried with the usual military honours on Sunday.—Mofussilite.

THE PRATT MEMORIAL.—The total subscriptions for the memorial in remembrance of the late Archdeacon Pratt reached on the evening of the 10th April the sum of rupees 24,977, of which rupees 22,451 have been paid. The Metropolitan, we perceive, heads the list with a second subscription of 1,000 rupees.

PORT BLAIR.—We learn that the superintendent of Port Blair has been requested by the Government of India to prepare a set of rules relating to the enlistment, pay, and leave of men of the free police in that settlement, on the understanding that the rules will not involve any increase of the aggregate of Imperial police charges.—Daily Examiner.

CAPTAIN LIOT'S (R.A.) Court-Martial at Agra, of which but very little has been heard, perhaps, out of military circles, but of which very much will have to be said when the causes and the result become generally known, has terminated. The proceedings have gone up through the "usual channel," and we await the G.O. with something like impatience. It is no use mentioning prevailing opinions in the meantime.—Delhi Gazette.

REPORT ON THE PROSPECTS OF THE CROPS.—In most tracts from which reports have been received, more or less rain or hail seems to have fallen during the fortnight ending the 11th April. The crops, however, where still unharvested, do not seem to have suffered, and in Mysore and parts of Bengal the rainfall has been beneficial. In other respects things have not changed since the last report. Prices in Bombay have slightly risen.—Gazette of India, April 13.

THE SANSKRIT COLLEGE, CALCUTTA.—His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, apprehending "that the Sanscrit College and School, Calcutta, have been of late years turned into a sectarian institution, where 'respectable Hindoos' (not sons of Pundits only) receive an ordinary education at a cheap rate, but at a great expense to Government," is of opinion that "this state of affairs must certainly be brought to an end." The Sanscrit College is therefore to be merged in the Presidency College, the propriety of the continuance of the School being held over for further consideration.—Pioneer.

A PANTHAY EMBASSY AT CALCUTTA.—An embassy of Panthays from Tali-foo in Yunan has arrived in Calcutta to solicit the assistance of the British against the Chinese. We can hardly be expected to abet rebellion, unless we want another batch of "claims for indirect damages" advanced against us. The Panthays are Mahomedan rebels, and in a desultory kind of way have been amusing Chinese armies in Yunan and about Momein for some years. There is a good opening here for an adventurous foreigner of warlike tendencies.—Pioneer.

BOY MURDER.—The news of a curious circumstance reaches us from Peshawur. In a village near that station a number of boys held a mock tribunal, and tried one of their number on an imaginary charge. The offender was duly tried by one of the lads who represented the "Commissioner Sahib," and was condemned to death by hanging. The sentence was carried out with all the formalities usual upon such an occasion. One boy, representing the "Doctor Sahib," then felt the dead boy's pulse, but pronounced him still alive, and ordered the body to be left hanging. In the meantime the villagers became aware of the circumstance, but were too late to save the poor boy's life; for he was cold and stiff, having been suspended for some time.—Indian Public Opinion.

MR. FITZJAMES STEPHEN.—It is said that the Hon. Fitzjames Stephen will be raised to the Common Law Bench at home immediately upon the termination of the labours of the Commission to which, conjointly with Mr. Charles Bowen, Q.C., he has just been appointed.—Ibid.

THE MAYO MEMORIAL.—His Highness the Nawab of Rampore has subscribed the handsome sum of Rs. 1,500 towards the North-West Provinces Mayo Memorial Fund, and we believe that his Highness intends presenting the Calcutta Fund with a similar donation.—Pioneer.—The city of Mirzapore is raising a very handsome subscription to perpetuate the memory of Lord Mayo, with which sum, it is rumoured, a local library will be established. We discredit the rumour. Mirzapore may be relied on for the gratification of provincial before district patriotism. And this surrender will be the more graceful that the liberality of her citizens might well entitle them to indulge their local ambition.—Mr. C. W. Carpenter, C.S., has taken charge of the Mayo Memorial Fund, North-Western Provinces, in consequence of Mr. G. W. Allen leaving Allahabad for the present.

MORE PANICS.—Writing on the late panic mania, the Indian Observer says:—"More lately an official in the North-Western Provinces has done his best to throw another province into confusion, by announcing that a Mahomedan rising was concerted to take place on a day named, and sending information to all the neighbouring officials. The most astounding results appear to have been caused by this communication, if what we hear be true. One Zillah Judge is said to have regularly gone to cutcherry armed with a revolver, which he solemnly laid before him on his desk as he took his seat in Court. Another official, who was on tour at the time, rode about the country armed with a pistol, and wrote to the District Superintendent of Police asking for muskets and cartridges. In one zillah the European inhabitants were called into the station on a fixed day, under pretext of a Volunteer review, whilst the officer in charge of a native regiment there prepared to send away the women and children to a place of safety. In a neighbouring sub-division, all the Europeans met at a planter's house on the fixed date, and on their arrival there found to their astonishment that they could not raise powder enough to fire one round with all the fire-arms they had collected."

Madras.

COLONEL MACAULAY.—Colonel Macaulay, Commandant 37th Native Infantry, had a severe fall from his horse, but the injuries sustained by him were comparatively slight.

PUBLIC WORKS DEPARTMENT.—The Government of India have sanctioned the abolition of the appointment of Consulting Engineer for the Madras Irrigation and Canal Company, and the revival of that of Under-Secretary in the Public Works Department of that presidency, the arrangement resulting in an annual saving of 14,826 rupees.

POST-OFFICE.—We hear that the office of Postmaster-General has been offered to several Madras civilians, among whom is Mr. Stokes, Assistant Secretary to Government, and has by them been "declined with thanks." We do not wonder at this, for the Postal Department offers no prizes equal to those which a talented civilian may win in his own proper service.—Madras Times.

MADRASSEES FOR ENGLAND.—A batch of educated and intelligent Madrassees are about to start for England. We read in the Mail that "Mr. Vencataswamy Naidoo, Mr. P. Vencatachelly Chetty, Mr. P. Vencatakristnamah Naidoo, and Mr. C. Sabapathiah, will leave Madras in a few days for England. The two first named gentlemen go on a visit of pleasure, and will return to Madras in about six months. Mr. Vencatakristnamah Naidoo, a teacher of the London Mission School, will study for the Bar; and Mr. Sabapathiah, who is a pleader at Cuddapah, may also remain in England to be called to the Bar."

MR. HARRINGTON.—Mr. W. S. Harrington, executive engineer, who is known as one of the boldest riders in Madras, met with a serious accident the other morning. While riding with some friends near the Cenotaph, the horse he rode suddenly reared, and threw Mr. Harrington, who fell on his head. He was stunned for the moment, but speedily recovered and made his way home. He had hardly arrived there, however, before he fell down insensible; and since that time he has suffered from severe convulsive attacks, indicating a serious concussion of the brain. We have since heard that Mr. Harrington is going on well, and that there is now a fair prospect of his recovery.—Madras Times.

BISHOP CORRIE'S GRAMMAR SCHOOL.—The distribution of prizes to the pupils of Bishop Corrie's Grammar School took place yesterday evening. The Hon. the Governor presided, and there was a very large attendance of the friends and supporters of the institution. Among those who were present were the Lord Bishop of Madras, the Venerable the Archdeacon, the Rev. Mr. Millar, the Rev. Mr. Cooper, Miss Gell, Miss Gorton, the Rev. Mr. Schaffter, Mrs. Schaffter, the Rev. Mr. Burton, Mr. Thom, the Rev. Mr. Walker, &c. The proceedings, which were very interesting, were begun with prayer by the Venerable the Archdeacon. The pupils after this sang a couple of songs, and then the Rev. Mr. Dubois read the Committee's report.—Madras Times, April 20.

ARCHAEOLOGICAL.—We (Madras Mail) noticed a short time ago an interesting report by Mr. Grahame on some archæological discoveries in the Ganjam District. Mr. Burgess, of Bombay, to whom some copies of the photographs were sent, has written to inform our Government that the inscription on the Jogada Naugam rock is (as was correctly surmised by Mr. Harris) a copy of the celebrated Asoka Edict, and Mr. Ramkrishna G. Bhandarker has discovered some valuable points in it, throwing light on the difficulties attending the translation of the transcripts from the Girnar and other copies. Mr. Burgess is anxious to get copies of photographs of any further corrections. He also calls attention to the method of taking paper casts described in the Appendix to the "Report on Archaic Architecture" published by the India Museum in 1869.

THE LATE "FRACAS" IN HYDERABAD.—Mr. Stewart, the Manager of the Hyderabad Stud Farm, gives the following account of his late fracas with natives, in which he was compelled to take life. The affair commenced, it appears, by his bandy-drivers refusing to fulfil an agreement, and beginning to unyoke their cattle. Mr. Stewart resisted, the bandy-drivers called for assistance, and a mob of thirty or forty rushed to the attack with sticks and stones. Very soon Mr. Stewart was seriously injured, his head being cut open in two places, and his ankle crushed, so he made for his bandy, took a rifle out, and fired two shots over the heads of the mob. Instead of this terrifying it encouraged them, and with a cry "He has got no more shots now" they came on again. Mr. Stewart then loaded one barrel, and dropped the foremost man, the next man he killed with the butt, and then again made a rush to covert. At this juncture his syce made his way to him, and handed him a hog-spear, and with this Mr. Stewart defended himself until his friend arrived, revolver in hand, and put his assailants to flight.

SERIOUS ACCIDENT TO A COFFEE-PLANTER.—The report we published yesterday of the doings of an infuriated bison, or wild buffalo, on the Asambu Hills in South Travancore, has been confirmed by another correspondent, who gives a few additional particulars. He writes:—"A rather serious accident occurred on this range a few days ago; Mr. A. Grant, a coffee planter on these hills, was tossed and gored by a bison. He had shot the animal the previous evening, and was looking at it the next morning, supposing it to be dead, when it jumped on its feet and charged him. He did not see soon enough what it was about, his attention being occupied with a dead Sambur lying near, so that he was unable to get out of the way. The bison put both its horns into him, happily only in the leg, and carried him twenty yards, when it dropped down dead. The wounds were dressed by an apothecary from the neighbouring town of Nagercoil. Dr. Thomas, the well-known and skilful surgeon, also came up to see him from Palanacottah, and a dresser has been left to look after him. He has been brought to the Mahendragheri Coffee Estate. There does not seem to be much imminent danger to life, but it seems doubtful whether a leg that has had two bison horns through it will ever be quite what it was. Mr. Alexander Grant is the keenest shikari on these Asambu hills, but unfortunately he is exceedingly near-sighted. He has over and over again been engaged in hunting expeditions, and has almost always been remarkably successful, even against the larger and fiercer game. This is his first accident."—Madras Times, April 20.

DAFOOREE.—The estate of Dapoorie, near Poona, once the residence of the Governors of Bombay, which was sold for the sum of 3,50,000 rupees by the Government during the share mania, has been re-sold to a Parsee merchant of Bombay for the sum of 30,000 rupees.

MAHABLESHWAR.—His Highness Ramchunder Row Appa Sahib, the Chief of Jumkunder, has decided on the erection of a temple at Mahableshwar at his own expense. The entire cost of the building will, it is said, amount to upwards of 22,000 rupees.

A SCHOOL FOR FEMALE TEACHERS IN AHMEDABAD.—The Bombay Summachar states that a Hindoo merchant of Ahmedabad has expressed his desire to Mr. Borradaile, the Acting Collector of Ahmedabad, to lay at his disposal a sum of 10,000 rupees for opening a school at that station for preparing native female teachers in Guzeratee.

BARODA RAILWAY EXTENSIONS.—At a meeting of the Chiefs of Kattywar, lately held at Rajkote at the instance of the Political Agent, it was resolved that the proposed extension of the Baroda line to Rajkote should be commenced as soon as possible. Twenty lakhs are to be made over to the company for this purpose.

ANOTHER COTTON GIN.—We learn that an ingenious gentleman of Broach, the manager of the Broach Mills, Mr. Bridge, has invented another cotton gin, which he believes will supersede all other gins in simplicity of construction, certainty of action, quality of work, and diminution of motive power required.—Bombay Gazette.

ILLNESS OF MR. MANNING.—We regret to hear that Mr. J. R. Manning, Chief Resident Engineer of the G. I. P. Railway, is so seriously ill that his medical attendants advised him to leave for England by last mail. From the nature of Mr. Manning's illness, it is not likely that he can return to India.—Times of India.

MR. SASSOON'S KNIGHTHOOD.—We (Madras Times) are glad to see that the Honourable Mr. Sassoon of Bombay has been made a knight. He well deserves the honour that has been bestowed upon him, for he has ever been ready to do what he could to forward the interests of the place in which he has resided. Nobody can grudge an honour bestowed upon such a man.

MEKRAK.—Hoosein Khan, the Persian raider in Mekran, has returned to Charbar, after an interview with Ebrahim Khan. On arrival he agreed to return all goods he had seized from British traders, and promised compensation for other losses. The traders have now left Charbar for Guadar, where they will stay till tranquillity is restored.

BOMBAY AND BARODA RAILWAY.—The statement made the other day by a vernacular paper that arrangements were being made to extend the B. B. and C. I. Railway from Wudwan to Rajkote is at all events premature. All that has yet been done, or is likely to be done for some time to come, is to talk about surveying the country through which at some future time a line may run to Rajkote.—Times of India.

THE BOMBAY BUDGET.—The Bombay Budget was published on the 17th April in the local Government Gazette. In obedience to special instructions from the Secretary of State, there will be no discussion of the Budget by the Legislative Council this year, the estimates framed by the Executive Government being simply published for general information.

KURRACHEE.—Dr. Lumsdaine, the Sanitary Commissioner, who arrived here the other day from Bombay, inspected the town and cantonment, and we are glad to learn that he expressed himself highly pleased with the sanitary condition of Kurrachee. The doctor also proceeded to Hyderabad, where he had a look at the place; he leaves for Bombay in the Dalhousie.—Sindian, April 13.

THE SHIKARPOOR JUDGESHIP.—It is currently rumoured that Major R. R. Wallace, the Judge of the Court of Small Causes, will be appointed to the Shikarpoor Judgeship. We should not be surprised if the rumour turns out to be true, for a better qualified and more experienced officer than Major Wallace to fill the post will not be found in this province.—Sindian, April 13.

MR. RUSTOMJEE JEEJEEBHAY.—We learn that a meeting of a few leading Parsee gentlemen was held on the 16th April, at the residence of the Hon. Byramjee Jeejeebhoy, on the invitation of Mr. Framjee Nusserwanjee and the Hon. Mr. Byramjee, to take steps to perpetuate the memory of the late Mr. Rustomjee Jamsetjee Jeejeebhoy. Mr. Byramjee and the other gentlemen connected with this movement are engaged in a good work.

DANGER OF LOADING CHILDREN WITH ORNAMENTS.—A Hindoo named Annajee Ambajee reported to the police on Wednesday that his daughter, a girl of about ten years of age, had been enticed away from his house by a man named Pandoo Balloo, who took her on the Bellasis Railway Overbridge and threatened to cut her throat with a knife if she would not give up her gold and silver ornaments, worth about Rs. 42, which she was then wearing. The girl being alarmed, gave up the ornaments, and Pandoo then ran away. The police are on the look out for the offender.—Bombay Gazette, April 22.

HAIL IN SIND.—We find from official reports furnished by the Collector of Shikarpoor to the Commissioner in Sind, that in the Obarah talooka on the 30th March at 1 o'clock P.M. the wind blew very hard, and rain fell, accompanied by hail. No apprehension, however, is entertained with respect to crops. In the Shikarpoor talooka, on the 29th March, at about 9 o'clock P.M., and on the 30th at 1 P.M., rain fell in small showers, accompanied by hail, in Dehs Darrapoore and Dhora Toodkee of Shah Gur, but no apprehensions are entertained with respect to crops. In the Lubdurya talooka, on the 30th March at 12 o'clock A.M., rain fell, accompanied by hail; the crops are pronounced safe.—Sindian, April 13.

VIOLENT STORM AT POONA.—A very violent storm passed over Poona last evening, between five and seven o'clock. Heavy rain fell, and the lightning was terrific. The storm finished up with the most remarkable peal of thunder that we ever heard: it followed immediately on the lightning flash, and consisted of three distinct claps, like three successive discharges of cannon. We fear that we may hear of injury by the lightning. We have already heard that the telegraph line has been interrupted on the Sholapoor line. The heat previous to the storm was excessive. The climate has been very agreeably changed by the storm; and we trust it has exercised a favourable effect on the public health of the station.—Deccan Herald, April 15.

MURDER OF A HINDOO LAD FOR THE SAKE OF HIS ORNAMENTS.—We observe that on the 5th April a boy of the Coonbee caste, aged about fifteen years, was murdered somewhere near Surat, for the sake of his ornaments, worth about fifteen rupees. Four men of the Dhod caste, who were concerned in the perpetration of the crime, were arrested by the police. They were charged before Mr. Ollivant, full-power magistrate of Surat, with murder. One of the accused was acquitted by the magistrate, while the remaining three were committed to take their trial before the Sessions Court. The other day they were tried before Mr. Newnam, Acting Session Judge of Surat. They were convicted, and two of them were sentenced to be hanged, and the third, a Government servant, was charged with the concealment of the offence, and was sentenced to two years' rigorous imprisonment.

MURDER OF TWO OFFICERS BY A PRIVATE OF THE 108th FOOT.—(DEESA, April 18).—Yesterday morning as Captain Laurie was leaving his house to go to parade, about 5 A.M., he was fired at by a private soldier of his own company, who it appears was lying concealed behind a hedge. The shot missed its object. Captain Laurie must then have turned and gone in a different direction to get out of the man's way, when a second shot was fired which took effect in his leg and brought him to the ground. The murderer must then have approached him and deliberately fired several shots at him while lying on the ground, which all took effect. The Adjutant (Lieut. Munro), who lived close by, alarmed by the firing, came out of his house, but there being a thick and impenetrable hedge between him and the scene of action he could render no immediate assistance. He mounted his horse and (the murderer by this time having left Captain Laurie) galloped to the barrack guard for assistance; he however only went a few yards, for seeing another officer he called out to him to send him help from the guard room. He then turned back, and was almost immediately dropped by a shot fired by the same man. The shot entered his right side, and lodged in the left ribs, passing right through his body. He never spoke after falling from his horse, and must have died almost immediately. The murderer, a man named John Butler, then blew his own brains out. Captain Laurie, who was most fearfully injured, having no less than six different wounds, lingered till one o'clock, when he expired. Both officers were buried the same evening with the usual military honours. The whole affair did not occupy two minutes, the man having in that time fired eleven shots.—Times of India Correspondent.—It appears that Butler had remained absent from tattoo roll-call on the night of the 16th instant; and, on search being made for him, it was found that he had taken his rifle and twenty rounds of ball-cartridge with him. The search thereupon was prosecuted more vigorously than ever, but no clue could be obtained as to Butler's whereabouts. It appears he must have been lying hid all night in Captain Laurie's compound, awaiting his unsuspecting victim. Why Butler should have entertained such deadly animosity towards Captain Laurie, who was so greatly beloved in the regiment, we have not heard; but Butler was a notoriously bad character, and always in trouble.—Times of India.—According to another correspondent Lieutenant Munro was buried on the evening of the 17th, the day on which he met his death. Captain Laurie died at half-past three on the same day. It was at first intended to amputate his leg, but the operation was not performed, as the other wounds, for which surgical skill could do nothing, were only too clearly mortal.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

DEFALCATIONS IN THE EXECUTIVE COMMISSARIAT OFFICE, BOMBAY.

Bombay Castle, April 8.—No. 275.—It has been brought to the notice of H.E. in Council that grave irregularities in matters of account have prevailed in the Executive Commissariat Office in Bombay for some years past. The successive officers have habitually rendered false cash accounts. They have kept large cash balances in hand, in opposition to express orders; and have concealed the fact, by excluding large sums (received on Government's account) from the cash account rendered to the military accountant, and by keeping a separate account of these sums, of which the account department had no knowledge.

H.E. in Council attributes no fraudulent motive to the officers: but, whether they were culpably ignorant of the falsity of the accounts and statements to which they put their names, or whether they persuaded themselves that some seeming convenience justified such fictions, or whether any sacrificed his own duty to the desire to avoid exposure of his predecessors, the fact remains that, month by month, for above eight years past, they have signed false certificates of having no cash balance in hand, whilst, in opposition to express standing orders, they had large balances, which on one occasion amounted to as much as Rs. 99,000.

The Commissary General and the Controller of Military Accounts, in a joint report on this subject, say:—"No amount of instruction can obviate irregularities such as those brought to notice, which have arisen, not from any defect in the rules affecting the duties of commissariat officers, but from carelessness on the part of those concerned, and total disregard of the regulations with which they must have been well acquainted. The most effective remedial measure we can suggest is that the officers of the department should each and severally be made to understand that Government have taken such serious notice of the irregularities and neglect of duty as should prevent any neglect on their part in future."

This being the judgment of the head of the department, and H.E. in Council being satisfied of its justice, comment on the facts above stated is unnecessary.

The living officers who have been thus guilty are:—Col. A. W. Lucas, Major L. M. Davies, Major M. W. Willoughby, Major C. F. Keays, Major G. S. Mignon, and Capt. A. Phelps.

Misconduct in the foregoing respect has, of course, led to many further errors and irregularities; and one of these especially demands notice.

Whilst Major G. S. Mignon was in charge of the office, a bag containing Rs. 9,304 was stolen from the chest in which the irregular balances of cash were kept. The following is recorded by Captain Mignon himself:—

"The head accountant is to blame for not having actually seen the money placed in the chest as usual; but excuses himself in that he was extremely busy at the moment in drafting a letter under my instructions; he is, nevertheless, responsible for his omission; but there is not a shadow of suspicion resting against him in the matter. I have ordered him to make good the deficiency in the chest, which will be done in a day or two."

Thus Major Mignon made his accountant, whose pay was Rs. 200 a month, pay a fine of nearly four years' salary, because, whilst occupied in work under Major Mignon's direction, he overlooked a usual precaution. Yet slight reflection would have shown to Major Mignon that his own misconduct in keeping such large sums in hand had alone made such a theft possible; and this misconduct was not an oversight like the accountant's error, but a persistent disregard of orders concealed by such means as have been already stated.

The acceptance of the preposterous penalty without remonstrance, and its prompt discharge, point to a common interest to prevent any knowledge outside the department of the existing abuses.

What further notice should be taken of Major Mignon's conduct of his duties in this and in certain other cases now under inquiry will be considered when that officer returns from furlough.

With regard to the other officers named above, the Commissary General has been instructed to report his deliberate opinion of the degree of blame attaching to each officer concerned in grave irregularities as regards certain other matters: and, therefore, until H.E. in Council has before him that report, showing how any and each of these officers is affected thereby, H.E. in Council defers passing a final judgment respecting them.

SANITARIA.—MATHERAN.—It is notified that there are at Matheran six furnished quarters for the convenience of sick officers who may be sent for change of air. Officers not on medical certificate and civilians will be permitted to occupy these quarters on conditions of their being vacated when required for the accommodation of sick officers. The scale of rents is as follows:—

		For each set of Quarters.
		Monthly.	Quarterly.
Subaltern	...	Rs. 15 0 0	Rs. 0 8 0
Captain	...	20 0 0	0 12 0
Field officer	...	45 0 0	1 8 0
Non-military	...	60 0 0	2 0 0

H.E. the Governor general in Council, having resolved to place the military works at all the chief stations occupied by troops of the Bengal Presidency directly under the control of the inspector general of military works, acting under the immediate orders of the Government of India in the P.W.D., has authorised a rearrangement of circles of superintendence and executive division. This rearrangement will be held to have had effect as far as possible from April 1, and will be subject to revision after a year.

2. The officers named below for the several charges will take up these duties as soon as possible. In some cases it may not be possible to do so immediately, and in such cases the Local Governments concerned are requested to allow present arrangements to continue in force till the new organisation can be established.

3. The upper subordinates are not named in this notification. Their names and postings will be published hereafter, and meanwhile they will as soon as possible take up the duties under the orders of the inspector general of military works, present arrangements continuing until this can be carried out.

4. The work under the inspector general is divided into two main classes, maintenance and construction, and circles have been formed for each. The maintenance charges are ordinary permanent public works charges, and those for construction are extra, depending upon the special work of new construction in hand. This construction work will be under the supervision of a chief engineer. The details of a rearrangement are notified below, and the officers named are transferred to the establishment of the Inspector general of Military Works under the direct control of the Government of India, and posted as indicated:—

THE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN FINANCE.

On Friday, the 3rd inst., Messrs. Harrison and Gay's examination was resumed on the expenditure for the Civil and Criminal Courts of India. The police of the presidencies occupied first attention. The expenditure for the police of Calcutta was £21,000; Bombay, £17,000, against £20,000 Madras. At Madras the establishment of a new police force with military attributes in 1866 had proved an effective substitute for twelve regiments of the native army which had been disbanded.

Mr. Fawcett questioned the fact, and said that although the Madras army was reduced by twelve regiments as stated, yet the army had been so reinforced with Europeans that it was now as large as ever.

The Chairman (Mr. Ayrton) said the committee had better not be drawn into the general question of army cost, as the subject before them was civil and not military expenditure. It was quite unadvisable to go out of the rota. Mr. Fawcett acquiesced, and

The next matter examined into was the marine expenditure. The total expense of the marine establishment it appeared was set down in the budget of 1870-71 at £475,072, or, inclusive of the home charges, £759,700. The total charge in 1856-57 was £709,700. The general expenditure for 1870-71 happened to agree with that of 1856-57; but notwithstanding great changes in the establishment had taken place. The Burmese flotillas and the Indian navy had been abolished; a new flotilla had been introduced on the Indus, and the Bengal marine system been remodelled. The cost of the dockyards was now about £45,000. Great changes had been quite recently effected in the port of Calcutta, but the accounts connected with the alterations and improvements were not at hand.

When the committee came to inquire into the cost of ships of war and flotillas it was ascertained that there were several anomalies. For instance, first it appeared that there was an unnecessary charge for keeping up State yachts used exclusively by lieutenant-governors, but who might more economically go upon their tours by taking passages in ordinary vessels, if bent on indulging their "travelling propensities." The object of the Indus Flotilla was, it appears, to facilitate the communication between Bombay, Kurrachee, and the Punjab; but it was asked by Mr. J. B. Smith whether a State flotilla was necessary when the communication could be kept up more economically by means of the flotilla of the P. and O. Company. The reply was that the route of the company's flotilla was more limited than that of the Government vessels. With regard to one of the ships doing "local duty" so-called, it was explained that it was for the service of the consul at Bagdad; but it was not made clear that it was necessary to keep up a ship of war merely to carry the consul. A similar objection was raised to putting a ship at the service of the Commissioner of Scinde. The inquiry next proceeded as to the expenditure on ships of war in Bombay harbour, the Persian Gulf, &c., which were the substitutes for the old Indian Navy. This subject has been previously fully discussed, but was now renewed for the sake of getting at better accounts than had been presented before.

The Chairman asked what might be the benefit accruing from supplanting one Indian Navy by another selected from the fleets of the Royal Navy? Mr. Harrison could not tell; he could answer another question. The ironclads for the protection of the Bombay harbour were manned at the cost of the Bombay Government; the men did not all belong to the Royal Navy. The officers, however, were nominated by the Admiralty. This point, it should here be mentioned, was settled at a previous meeting of the committee, in answer to questions put by Sir J. Elphinstone, the explanation being the same as the above. The chairman, alluding once more to the absence of the necessary accounts to verify statements, some further questions put to Mr. Harrison and Mr. Gay concerning the financial gain or loss that may have accrued on the abolition of the old Indian Navy resulted in its being ascertained that the witnesses could give no exact information on the matter. However, from certain items of expenditure called over for 1870-71, it appeared that the saving effected must have been small, seeing that the present cost of the marine establishment of Bombay was, on the whole, almost the same as it was before the abolition of the Indian Navy.

Towards the conclusion of the short sitting, after considerable inquiry and repeated cross-examinations of the witnesses had taken place, Mr. Ayrton said so little had been explained regarding the marine expenses of Bombay in detail, that the disposal of the large sum of £241,000 for 1870-71 against £275,600 in 1856-57 could not be ascertained without a balance-sheet. [This was promised by the witnesses, and also other accounts.]

On Friday Messrs. Harrison and Gay's examination was resumed, touching the police establishment and marine establishments. Nothing materially important was elicited with respect to the police system. It appeared that throughout India there is a large force of semi-military and armed native police. There is now also a railway police force, for which the railway companies are charged three-fourths the cost, and Government the other one-fourth. The police acts specifically on Dacoitism, and probably has contributed to the now almost complete extinction of Thuggism. The entire police force is under the management of the Government. It does not appear to be an overpaid body. The European commissioners, superintendents, and inspectors are moderately-paid officials. Bengal pays, in comparison with the other Presidencies, for more police covering a given area; owing to the fact that there is a large establishment of revenue police officers, the collectorates or districts are more numerous subdivided in Bengal than in Madras or Bombay, and to each collectorate there is a police establishment for the protection of the revenue. It had once been under consideration to fortify the police stations of the Presidencies, &c., but the idea had been abandoned. The whole police system of India went under revision in 1861, much to the benefit (it appeared) of the political, social, and commercial interests of the country.

The next subject taken up was the cost of education in all India, and, although nothing anomalous in the system was proved, yet some interesting information was given relating to the growth of popular education in India, to which we propose to return next week. The last subject dealt with at Friday's sitting was the ecclesiastical establishment of India.

Miscellaneous.

EXPORT OF BULLION.—The following are the latest exports of Bullion to India per the steamers of the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company:—From Southampton, per Candia, April 25, Gold, Bombay, £16,810; Ceylon, £500; Madras, £704.

MR. GASPAR, a successful candidate at the Indian Civil Service competition, who was afterwards disqualified on medical grounds, has been refused by the Court of Queen's Bench a mandamus to oblige the Civil Service Commissioners to grant him another medical examination. The applicant complained that between the first examination, when he passed, and the second, when he was rejected, he spent two years in study for the service.

THE DYCE SOMBRE CASE.—Judgment was given on Saturday by the Judicial Committee in the case of General Forrester, M.P., v. the Government of India, relating to a sum of about half a million sterling. General Forrester had married the widow of Mr. Dyce Sombre, who claimed under the estate of his mother, the Begum Sombre. There were two appeals, the Badshapore case and the arms suit. In the former the appeal was dismissed, and in the latter allowed. Each party was to pay its own costs.

LAND MORTGAGE BANK OF INDIA.—The directors of the Land Mortgage Bank of India have issued their report. They state that the improvement in the bank's position has been of a decided character, although in some respects it has fallen short of their anticipations. Satisfactory progress has been made with the tea estates, and the increase of the reserve fund to £20,000 is regarded as highly favourable. No further call is or will be necessary, and all financial requirements to the end of the current year have been fully provided for.

THE LUCKNOW PRIZE.—It is now fourteen years since Lucknow was taken, or retaken, and those who were at the capture have not yet received the third instalment of prize money. This prize, like the "Delhi" prize, was to be paid in three instalments. Something could be said about the "Delhi" prize, but let it rest; the three instalments promised, if not exactly the sum due, were paid; surely, however, we may ask, why do not our soldiers get the remaining few shillings of the "Lucknow" prize, which would be a great boon to some of them. It is a disgrace to any department that its officials should look with placid satisfaction at the accumulation of dead men's shares.—Broad Arrow.

STATE OF THE INDIAN EXCHANGES.—The question of the Indian exchanges is now discussed with much interest, owing to the belief that we are on the eve of receiving remittances of gold and silver from India. At present, the exchanges are not sufficiently low to admit of such remittances on commercial grounds, but there is every prospect that the Government of India will have to remit to this country to the amount of the drafts which the India Council have been in the habit of selling in London. So far, this year, there has been remitted to India about one million a-month in specie, and £1,200,000 in Council Bills. There is now no movement of specie thither, and, of the £600,000 in Council Bills offered last week, only £2,500 were sold. Should this state of things continue, it would seem that the India Government may have to remit to London at the rate, temporarily, of 1½ million a month.

RIFLE SHOOTING—A NEW TARGET.—As many of the readers of the Mail are interested in rifle shooting, they will hail with some satisfaction, at least on the score of humanity, a perfect and harmless substitute for pigeon shooting; namely the artificial or Gyro pigeon, invented by Mr. G. G. Bussey. A public trial of the invention was made on Tuesday last at the Museum of Fire Arms, Peckham. The Gyro pigeon consists of a piece of metal shaped somewhat like the revolving part of the screw of a steamer, and designed to act on the principle of an Archimedian screw. This is attached to a little instrument which causes it to rise and gyrate through the air. Like a pigeon, its course is eccentric, while it often rises a hundred feet, returning home like the Australian boomerang.

rang. The rifle shooter takes up his position 15 feet from the trap, and at a given signal the bird whizzes into the air, offering a fair mark, not too difficult, though it involves considerable skill in the hitting. From the thorough success of the trial on Tuesday, and the good shots made, Gyro-matches may fairly be looked upon among future fixtures, for although thorough sportsmen may prefer the slaughter of real pigeons for the sake of "Le Sport," officers and soldiers practising with the rifle may just as well become good shots with the Gyro pigeon or the target as with live pigeons.

UNEQUAL MEASURE.—On Monday we said that the Indian Government will have to account for the different measure of censure passed upon Mr. Cowan and Mr. Forsyth in regard to the execution of the Kookas. Mr. Cowan is very properly dismissed, while Mr. Forsyth is merely transferred from one commissionership to another. Mr. Kinnaird's inquiry last evening was not satisfied, but we hope he will, in due time, persevere. Mr. Cowan, the deputy-commissioner, executed forty-nine Kookas, and Mr. Forsyth, his superior officer, on arriving and taking command slew sixteen more. The Indian Government holds these executions to have been unnecessary; they were, therefore, criminal. It is suggested that the different measure meted out by the Indian Government is accounted for by the fact that Mr. Forsyth is a member of the "covenanted" service. Plain English people have no notion of the strength of the caste spirit among Anglo-Indians. Not long ago a traveller in India was told by some covenanted officials that they were very sorry they "couldn't know" his distinguished college friend in the Indian Education Department because he was "uncovenanted," and we are informed that on board the P. and O. steamers the ladies of covenanted officers display a truly Brahminical adherence to this unworthy spirit of caste.—Echo.

DEATH OF GENERAL PENNEFATHER.—General Sir John Lysaght Pennefather, G.C.B., Governor of Chelsea Hospital, died at his official residence on Thursday morning. The gallant General, in the early part of his military career, saw much service in India, for which he was made a Companion of the Bath, and afterwards an aide-de-camp to the Queen. He was with Sir Charles Napier through the Scinde campaign, commanded the infantry brigade at the battle of Meeanee, when he was shot through the body, and was present at the destruction of the fort of Imaumghar. When the Crimean war broke out, in 1854, he was placed in charge of a brigade in the 2nd Division. At the battle of Alma his horse was twice wounded. He was with the army during the siege of Sebastopol, and had a horse killed under him at the battle of Inkerman, and aided in the repulse of the powerful sortie on the 26th October. For his distinguished service he was made Colonel of the 46th Regiment in 1851, in 1855 a Knight Commander of the Order of the Bath, a Grand Officer of the Legion of Honour, a Commander of the Sardinian Order of St. Maurice and St. Lazarus, and in 1867 was created a Grand Cross of the Order of the Bath. For some years he was chief of the Northern district; in 1856-7 the forces at Malta were placed under his control; and from 1860 to 1865 he commanded the troops at Aldershot. On the death of Field-Marshal Sir Alexander Woodford, in September, 1870, he was appointed Governor of Chelsea Hospital. The late General obtained his first commission as ensign in January, 1818; became Lieutenant February 20, 1823; Captain, November 5, 1825; Major, March 22, 1831; Lieutenant Colonel, October 18, 1839; Colonel, June 19, 1846; Major-General, June 20, 1854; Lieutenant-General, November 12, 1860; General, May 9, 1868; and Colonel, 22nd Foot, February 13, 1860.

CLAIMS OF ENGINEER AND ARTILLERY OFFICERS.—The extraordinary delay which has occurred in the issue of the warrant for improving the position and prospects of Engineer and Artillery officers has, not unnaturally, given rise to all sorts of sinister doubts and speculations. We believe we may state confidently for the information and comfort of those who take the blackest view of the affair that the delay is not to be attributed to the Machiavellian operations of the opponents of the measure, but simply and solely to the difficulty which has arisen in connection with the satisfaction of the claims of the Engineer officers. If we are not mistaken, the Artillery warrant has been ready for signature and issue for some time; but a true military feeling points to the necessity of the two warrants stepping off together with the left foot, and marching past rigidly dressed in line. The feeling is based, no doubt, upon sound principles. At the same time it must be admitted that the satisfaction with which the announcement of Mr. Cardwell's important concessions has been welcomed has been somewhat marred by this delay in their realisation. It is unfortunate that the Engineers could not more promptly make up their minds what their legitimate claims really amounted to. Considering the years that they have been urging those claims, it might be thought that they have had time enough to come to a decision upon the subject. If, however, it be true, as we have been informed, that the delay has been occasioned in part by a blunder of the actuaries, which was unfavourable to the Engineer subalterns, then our remonstrances must be directed elsewhere. But, in any case, it remains matter for regret that a good measure should, from one cause or another, have been so long postponed. We understand that it is intended to place the Engineers on a level as regards promotion, &c., with the Artillery, and to readjust the ranks as may be necessary three years hence.

This will necessitate the immediate promotion of several subalterns of Engineers, and we are very glad to hear it. Few men work harder or more zealously at their profession, and few men deserve promotion more. We trust that the warrants and accompanying gazettes will appear very shortly.—Pall Mall Gazette.

THE CYCLONE AT MADRAS.—The following lately appeared in the Times:—"Sir,—The lamentable loss of life and property which is telegraphed as having occurred at Madras on the night of the 1st inst. will, it is hoped, have the effect of directing the attention of the India Office to the want of any shelter for vessels on the treacherous Coromandel coast. It is now four years since a committee appointed by the Madras Government (and on which I served) reported that in their opinion a breakwater at Madras could and should be constructed, and they recommended that an engineer from England should be sent out for the purpose of corroborating or controverting their conclusions. Mr. Robertson, C.E., was accordingly deputed to report on what are facetiously termed the "harbours" of India; and I saw the other day that he had written to the Government of India that if such and such conditions were true of the surf and currents of Madras, then a breakwater could be made for about the sum estimated by the Government Committee, and the safety of the shipping frequenting the Madras Roads would thereby be secured. But Mr. Robertson does not say why he did not, by personal and careful inspection, satisfy himself that nature has thrown no insuperable engineering difficulties in the way of the construction of a harbour of refuge at Madras. My object is not, however, to throw the least discredit on Mr. Robertson, but simply to call attention to the fact that while engineers are 'reporting' and Governments 'considering,' the tribute of life and property due by man's neglect is being regularly collected by the storms in the Bay of Bengal. Twice a year, in May and November, the change of the monsoon involves the greatest risk to all craft trading along the inhospitable eastern coast of India, and neither at Madras nor anywhere else is there any port to which vessels can run for shelter. I know that India is a long way off, and that in the turmoil of home politics its claims have small chance of being listened to. But I appeal to you, Sir, to help those who cannot well help themselves. It surely is time that about the oldest settlement in India should have some attempt made to render its anchorage safe in all weathers, or that, at least, we should be authoritatively informed that British engineering skill is powerless to cope with the dangers inseparable from the exposed coast of Madras. I may mention that for the defence of Madras in a time of war the proposed breakwater commended itself to our best military authorities, while the revenue from the shipping taking advantage of its shelter was, on a moderate calculation, estimated to yield sufficient to provide for keeping the harbour, and to give besides a return of at least 5 per cent. on the money invested. I trust, Sir, that you will find space for the insertion of this letter, and that it will meet the eyes of some of those with whom it rests to solve the too-long delayed question of providing a safe harbour for the not unimportant city of Madras.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant, A MADRASSEE.—London."

Imperial Parliament.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, TUESDAY, May 7.—THE KOOKA INSURRECTION.—Mr. KINNAIRD asked the Under-Secretary of State for India if he had any objection to lay upon the table of the House the papers relating to the late Kooka insurrection in India; and if he had any objection to state to the House the grounds of Mr. Cowan's dismissal from the Civil Service of India, and of Mr. Forsyth's removal to another province.—Mr. GRANT DUFF: I will lay the Kooka papers on the table after they are complete. Mr. Cowan has, I presume, been dismissed, and Mr. Forsyth removed, for their conduct in the Kooka affair, but the despatches explaining the decision of the Government of India have not reached us, and cannot reach us for some time, the telegraph anticipating the mail by nearly a month.

PERSIA.—Mr. EASTWICK asked the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether, in the nomination of a successor to Mr. Alison, the recommendation of the Diplomatic Committee of last year would be taken into consideration in whichever Department of State the Persian Mission might be.—Lord ENFIELD: Lord Granville is not prepared to restrict the choice of a representative of her Majesty at the Court of Persia to any particular class of public servants; that choice, when occasion arises, must be determined by various considerations; and the general interests of the Empire will, Lord Granville considers, be more safely provided for by leaving that choice in the hands of the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs. With these views, Lord Granville has submitted for her Majesty's approval the name of a gentleman who has been for many years conversant with the country, politics, and affairs of Persia.

COMMISSIONS IN THE ARMY.—Colonel BRISE asked the Secretary of State for War whether candidates for commissions in the army whose names were on the list previous to the Royal Warrant of July last, but who had not passed any examinations, would have any precedence over those candidates whose names might be sent in at any time previous to the competitive examinations; and if there was to be selection for competitive examinations, upon what principle the selection would be made.—Mr. CARDWELL: No precedence will be given to any one in the competitive examinations, except as the result of proficiency. There will be no selection, but everything will be free, in the same manner as in the competition at Woolwich.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, THURSDAY, May 9.—INDIAN COUNCILS DRAFTS.—Mr. M'ARTHUR asked the Under-Secretary for India whether the Secretary of State for India in Council had authorised an arrangement withdrawing for four months, without notice, the fortnightly issue in London of council's drafts on the Indian Presidencies, hitherto depended upon by merchants in their trade operations; and, if so, why public competition had not been invited in order that the best means might be secured, and the merchants made aware of the intended change in financing decided upon by the Indian Government authorities.—Mr. GRANT DUFF said the Secretary of State in Council had authorised nothing of the kind, and that tenders would be received as usual, according to advertisement.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, FRIDAY, May 10.—IMMIGRATION TO BRITISH GUIANA.—Mr. GRANT DUFF said, in reply to Sir C. WINGFIELD, that the attention of the Government had been called to the report of the commissioners appointed to inquire into the treatment of immigrants in British Guiana, wherein irregularities in the recruiting of coolies in India were brought to notice. The Secretary of State was in communication with the Government of India and the Colonial-office on the subject.

LOCAL TAXATION IN INDIA.—Mr. GRANT DUFF stated, in answer to Sir D. WEDDERBURN, that the Bombay Government had for local purposes imposed a tax on incomes of £5 a-year and upwards. The impost was laid on merely for temporary purposes, and would be worked with the greatest care.

EDUCATIONAL SERVICE IN INDIA.—Mr. GRANT DUFF told Sir STAFFORD NORTHCOTE that the Government had under consideration the question of granting retiring pensions to officers in the educational service in India.

INDIAN FIELD OFFICERS.—Mr. G. DUFF explained to Col. BARTLELOT that the Government of India had submitted a scheme having for its object the reduction of a number of unemployed officers, but there was no desire to dispense with the services of such efficient officers as might be at present employed.

A MILITARY GRIEVANCE.—Colonel NORTH gave notice that on the 7th of June he would bring under the consideration of the House the claims for compensation of five batteries of Royal Horse Artillery which had been sent from India early in 1871 under circumstances which involved them in great pecuniary loss.

ALBERT AND EUROPEAN LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANIES (INQUIRY) BILL.—In answer to Sir J. GRAY, Mr. CAVE said it would be advisable to postpone the further progress of this Bill until the amendments which it was proposed to insert in the Government Bill had been placed upon the paper.

THE INDIAN BUDGET.

The Times remarks that there is no real approach to representative institutions in India, but some commercial members sit at the Council Board, and not one of these was found to say a word for Sir Richard Temple's proposal to continue the income-tax. Nor did the civilian members, who know the people and their feelings thoroughly, venture to sustain Sir Richard Temple's extraordinary statement, that the exemptions proposed in the present Budget would remove "whatever remnant of complaint may still exist." The irritation in the native mind will not be removed by Sir Richard Temple's assurance that the burden, with all its vexatious incidents of assessment and collection, brings, after all, but a trifling sum into the Exchequer. From 1860 to the present time, it is stated that this tax, in its varying forms, has yielded about £13,500,000, or an average of a little more than one million sterling per annum. Is this a result for the sake of which an impost that excites the passions, and alarms the cupidity of every native should be maintained?

The absorbing interest of Sir Richard Temple's Budget, both for India and for England, is centred in his proposal to maintain the income-tax. That impost, which was levied two years ago on all incomes exceeding £50 a year, was only levied last year on incomes over £75—a change which reduced the number of contributors from 480,000 to 240,000, and diminished the receipts by £150,000. This year the further exemption of incomes under £100 will lower the number of contributors to 180,000, and subtract £63,000 from the receipts. The rate of charge remains at two pice in the rupee, or a little over one per cent.; but the natives, knowing how readily the rate was raised two years ago to 3½ per cent. and how easily the scale of exemptions may be lowered, will not believe that a tax involving so much trouble in assessment and collection, and causing the Government so much odium, is retained merely to bring in half a million a year. This is little more than one per cent. on the revenues of the Indian Government, and the natives are justified in supposing that it is not for such a trifling sum machinery so elaborate and so costly is retained. Sir Richard Temple hardly disguised his belief that the tax should be held in reserve, which is just what the natives dread. This policy of keeping ready the machinery of taxation may suit an European State, where the people are not unaccustomed to fluctuations in the demands of Government, but it is absolutely at variance with all the habits of the Conservative Asiatic.

THE BOMBAY INCOME-TAX.

The Telegraph observes that Mr. Grant Duff's answer to Sir David Wedderburn on Friday night affords tolerably convincing proof that the local administration of India have bettered the instruction imparted by the Supreme Government's example. Three years ago taxation became the order of the day. Not only did the highest authority decree that all the Indian world should be taxed, but every petty municipality raised revenue by various modes, and chiefly by octroi duties. The ryot paid land tax, beside that a local cess, and in addition tolls and duties on his produce when he carried it to market. But what is now done in Bombay? The local Government actually levies income-tax from everybody who receives fifty rupees—that is, five pounds per annum! The plea is that the agricultural interest has hitherto borne the bulk of the burden. But if that were true, it does not justify the levy of a tax on such paltry incomes. In Bombay itself the grain, which is the coolie's staple food, pays octroi; the copper imported to feed a flourishing local industry is also burdened with a duty; timber and glue and sugar also figure in the local tariff. The addition of a tax on incomes as low as fifty rupees forms a heavy burden, since it reaches the great bulk of the labouring classes. It is an example of that mania for taxation which is epidemic among Indian Governments, bidding fair to undermine the foundations of British rule. A certain independence has been accorded to the local administrations; but if they use it to spread the plague of taxes, the remedy will be worse than the disease. Imagine an income-tax which should touch the Dorsetshire labourer! That is the equivalent of this Bombay law.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.

For the cure of debility, biliousness, liver and stomach complaints, this inappreciable medicine is so well known in every part of the world, and the cures performed by its use are so wonderful, that it now stands pre-eminent above all other remedies, more particularly for the cure of bilious and liver complaints, disorders of the stomach, dropsy, and a debilitated constitution. In these diseases the beneficial effects of the Pills are so permanent that the whole system is renewed, the organs of digestion strengthened, and a free respiration promoted. They expel from the secretory organs and the circulation the morbid matters which produce inflammation, pain, fever, debility, and physical decay, thus annihilating by their purifying properties the virulence of the most painful and devastating diseases.

Summary and Review.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail are—from Bombay, April 29; Agra and Madras, April 27; Calcutta, April 26.

ON Friday, the 26th April, Lord Northbrook landed at Bombay under the usual salutes from the men-of-war in harbour. A picturesque crowd of Europeans and natives dressed in all kinds of costumes, including the simple waistcloth, greeted his arrival and reception by the Governor and his Commander-in-Chief. After an introduction to two or three native chiefs, and a fresh salute from shore, his Lordship drove off through long lines of soldiers and inquiring natives to the Government House. A ball in the evening given by Sir S. Fitzgerald was followed by a visit next day to the Crawford Markets, which, in his Lordship's opinion, surpassed anything he had seen in London. After going over the Elphinstone Estate works and admiring the new public buildings, he drove in the evening to hear the Band and get heartily cheered by a number of enthusiastic Parsees. A state dinner finished that day's work. On Monday, the 28th, he was to unveil the Statue of the Queen, which the late Gaikwar of Baroda presented to the city of Bombay. The ceremony was to be as grand as troops in full dress and a royal squadron in harbour could make it. One element of display however would be lacking, for the present Gaikwar had somehow found himself unable to attend.

THE Flying Squadron, consisting of six fine war-steamers, an unusual sight for the people of Bombay, anchored in the harbour a few days before Lord Northbrook's arrival. The officers were specially invited to the ball at Government House, and some of them "assisted" at the State dinner. On the 30th they were all asked to meet Sir S. Fitzgerald at a ball given by the members of the Bombay Club. Lord Northbrook by that time was far on his way to Allahabad. Even the crews of the vessels have been hospitably entertained by the citizens. It was understood that, instead of visiting Ceylon and Eastern India, the Squadron would return from Bombay to the Cape by way of the Mauritius.

THE Madras Government have succeeded in getting the sanction of the Supreme Government to an outlay of Rs. 120,000 for a Camp of Exercise next cold weather at Bangalore. There is some talk of a similar camp for the Bombay Presidency, somewhere between Mhow and Ahmednuggar, but as yet the subject has not emerged from the region of mere talk.

MR. ARBUTHNOT, acting Governor of Madras, has been trying to soothe down the alarm and indignation caused in that presidency by the India Office Despatch regarding the Uncovenanted Service. He declares that, in excluding all but "natives" from the chance of entering that service through the old local inlets, the Duke of Argyll could not mean to exclude any one born and domiciled in the country, whether European or Eurasian. All that his Grace meant to do was to bar the way to those young men who, despairing of success in competition, go out to India to pick up what employments they can from the local governments. It may be so, but we cannot say that any such meaning could be gathered from the Despatch; and even thus its terms are only made a little less hard than before. Why should objection be taken to young men trying their fortunes in India, and what better guarantee is there in the India Office than in Calcutta or Madras, for the impartial distribution of patronage?

MR. COCKERELL has resigned his seat in the Viceroy's Legislative Council. Mr. Paul, Officiating Advocate-General, has been appointed to the Bengal Council. On Mr. Mansfield's approaching retirement from the Executive Council of Bombay, he will be succeeded by Mr. Alex. Rogers, whose place of Revenue Commissioner will be taken by Mr. Lestock Reid. Mr. Tarrant of the Madras Bar has been appointed Acting Clerk of the Crown and Crown Prosecutor at Madras, much to the indignation, it seems, of the Madras Bar, to which he has only lately belonged, and where indeed he has never held a brief.

"AN Intercepted Letter" published in the Times of India contains some curious revelations, for the truth of which the editor of that journal is ready to vouch. It seems that about the middle of March the head of the Patna Police received from his colleague at Ghazipore a letter declaring that the latter had reason to believe in the existence of a deep-laid Mohammedan plot to massacre all Europeans on the night of the 18th March. The plot, he learned, had been concocted by the Suni Mussulmans, who threatened to destroy all the Wahabis also if they refused to join in it. This letter was shown to the Commissioner of Patna, who laughed at what he considered a foolish figment, declaring that the Mohammedans of Patna had never been more peacefully disposed than at that moment. Unluckily other letters of the same tenour had been sent out to other stations from the Police Office at Ghazipore. A general panic seems to have been the result. Police officers warned their subordinates, and called on the military authorities to provide against the threatened danger. Sir Henry Tombs however, who was then commanding at Allahabad, declined to make any move until he had consulted the Commissioner of Patna. The latter gave him much the same answer that he had given to the head of the Patna Police. According to the letter-writer, the Commissioner Sahib was so enraged at these absurd rumours, that he "burst his garments." The matter being reported to the Lieutenant-Governors of Bengal and the North-West Provinces, they gave the police-officers a sharp scolding for their credulity. Meanwhile however the panic had spread from Ghazipore to Calcutta and from Allahabad to Simlah. Ladies began to pack up their goods, and some of the women and children in out-stations set off for places guarded by Europeans. The best of the joke was that the Mohammedans themselves were frightened by the stir they had unwittingly caused, and looked on the precautions taken against them as mere excuses for some dreadful revenge to be taken by the Sahib log for the murders of Mr. Norman and Lord Mayo. The idea of forcing the Wahabis to join their orthodox brethren in a plot against the English reaches the height of absurdity; but our laughter is checked by strong misgivings of the mischief which the frequent recurrence of these panics must produce in a country like India, and by the satire which this one seems to suggest on the efficiency of our Indian police.

A NATIVE newspaper tells a story which, if true, might help to account for the slow progress made by Indian railways towards paying their expenses. It appears that a native travelling from Lahore to Umballa wanted three tickets, for himself, his brother, and an old woman of their party. He was told, however, that each traveller must get his own ticket. He pleaded for leave to take one for the woman also, who could not be expected to show herself in public; but the clerk was inexorable. This however was not all. On giving him the ticket the clerk refused to give him any change for his money, and bade him get it from the banker outside, who charged three pice discount in the rupee. So the poor man took his three rupees outside, losing a penny or so upon them; he then took a ticket for himself, his brother followed his example, and they got a third man to take a ticket for the old woman. Railway officials are apt to play strange freaks on helpless people, especially in India where the white man feels himself the master; but if the writer of this story has not been labouring under some gross illusion, we can understand why so many Indian railways still pay so small a dividend out of their actual receipts.

ACCORDING to the Census returns of last February the population of Bombay amounts to 646,636 souls, or not many thousands more than the number recorded twenty years ago. As the actual increase for years past has been very great, so also must have been the inaccuracy either of the former or the latter reckoning. At first sight the miscalculation would seem attributable wholly to the earlier period; but the Bombay Guardian gives a reason for extending it to the later also. The natives, we are told, "have a superstitious dread of answering questions about their families, and will understate the number for fear lest some member be taken away by death." From what we have elsewhere heard however, we guess that the superstition has another if not more rational side to it. Numbers of natives looked upon the Census as a prelude to new taxation. A prudent fear for their pockets might therefore account for many omissions in the late returns.

WITH reference to the knighthood conferred on Mr. A. D. Sassoon of Bombay, some of the Bombay journals bring forward the name of another eminent citizen, whom they not without reason consider worthy of the same honour. Mr. Cowasjee Jehangeer Readymoney has long been famous in his own country for his princely charities, some of which have lately been noticed in these columns. He is said to have expended twenty lakhs of rupees—£200,000—in building or endowing asylums, hospitals, dispensaries, schools, and colleges, besides the sums he has contributed to every subscription-list got up for charitable purposes. So great a benefactor deserves well of the State.

THE income-tax is not the only fiscal blunder which Anglo-Indian statesmen have to remedy, if they care for the interests of sound economy as well as those of the taxpaying millions. Our valued correspondent, "T.," has more than once drawn attention to the cruel absurdity of levying too large an excise duty on so prime a necessary of life in India as salt. In his last letter on this subject—published in the Mail of April 29—he appealed with special force to the difference between the consumption of salt in native States like Bhurtpore, and the consumption in our own territories. If it be true that more salt per head is consumed in countries where the tax is lighter, than in Upper India where the tax comes to about £9 a ton, what better argument can be offered against the retention of the present rates of duty, which not only encourage smuggling and press unfairly on the poorest classes, but tend directly to injure the health of man and beast within the limits of the Indian customs line? It is not a question, as our correspondent rightly shows, between an excise and a customs duty, but between a high rate of duty which defeats its own object and a low rate which would bring in quite as much to the Exchequer, if not eventually more, at the least possible pressure on the health and comfort of all who pay it. Even in the interests of trade a lower duty would work best, whether by encouraging the home manufacture or inviting larger imports from Liverpool. Now is the time, while India's cash balances are about twice as high as they need be, to reduce the duty to the lowest figure consistent with her financial requirements. A rupee a maund all over India would probably in the long run pay better than the three rupees now levied from the Punjab to Central India, while the gain in health and comfort to millions of poor people living on a few rupees a month would be incalculable.

SIR RICHARD TEMPLE in his Budget Speech seems to have at length discovered for himself that the Indian Revenues are less elastic than he and many other people were wont to deem them. Seeing that in fifteen years they have risen from thirty to fifty millions, a much greater proportional increase than that of our own revenue, we might, at first glance, be tempted to question the soundness of his conclusion. But elasticity has its limits which, in India's case have no doubt been reached already, to say nothing of the difference between taxing one's own countrymen and the inhabitants of a conquered realm. In truth, if we insist on making India pay out of yearly revenue for public works which are elsewhere defrayed by loans, we must look out betimes for new sources of income to replace or eke out some of the old. A writer in the Times of Thursday last proposes to substitute for the condemned Income-tax one or more of the following—a Tobacco-tax, a Succession Duty, a tax on Marriage Expenses, a Licence Duty on Servants, an Inhabited House Duty, and a Sugar Tax. The last-named, we imagine, condemns itself in view of the revenue already reaped on salt from "the mass of the population." To call sugar a "luxury" in a land where it serves as food for beasts as well as men is to our thinking a strange misnomer. We might as well call salt a luxury. As for a House Duty, the dwellers in towns have that already for local purposes, and already pay directly or indirectly more than enough to the Imperial Treasury. A small duty on servants, beyond a certain number, might bring in a fair revenue from the wealthier classes, if it could be collected easily and without extortion. Of a tax on weddings, we can only say that we dislike the look of it, for many reasons. The tax would not keep down the extravagance usual on such occasions, but would simply transfer a fraction of the outlay from one object to another, while it would seem to the natives a piece of wanton meddling with their dearest social and religious habits. A small tobacco-tax would bring in a considerable revenue, but here again we are met by the hardship of taxing another article of universal consumption which in India can hardly be called a luxury. Something however might perhaps be made of it, if the duty on the cheaper kinds of home grown tobacco were so low as to make no sensible difference in the amount consumed. The Succession Duty again sounds well enough, if the principle of it could only be applied without oppression to a people whose laws of property and inheritance differ so widely from our own. But there lies the rub.

A CURIOUS paper on cholera and its relation to sun-spots was read the other day before the Historical Society by Mr. B. G. Jenkins of the Inner Temple. The author maintained among other things the existence of seven distinct cholera-nests, all lying on or near the Tropic of Cancer at equal distances from each other. Of these the most important is that in the delta of the Ganges, two others being to the east of China and the north of Mecca. From these seven centres as many atmospheric streams, each 1,400 miles broad, flow, said the lecturer, in a north-westerly or a south-westerly direction, not always at the same time nor with the same intensity. The cholera outbreak of 1817 was quoted in proof of this double course, and the manner of its progress compared with that of last year's outbreak in Russia, with its pause last winter and its renewed march a few weeks ago through Poland. Europe in short is considered liable to attacks from two great sources, India and Arabia, the northern part of Europe coming under the ravages of the Indian, and the southern and western under that of the Arabian stream. A long array of alleged facts was brought up in support of this theory, which is not more improbable than most of those now in vogue. As for the origin of this dreadful scourge, Mr. Jenkins maintains, in flat opposition to modern theorists, that "cosmic influence lies at the origin of cholera—that cholera is intimately connected with auroral displays and with solar disturbances." Like the sun-spots it is said to have shown regular cycles of rise and fall, the cycles being exactly the same as those of the solar phenomena. He is not however "prepared to say that sun-spots originate cholera." They may both be effects of some other cause, such as the action of the other planets upon the earth and upon the sun. Each planet, in coming to and going from perihelion, "produces a violent action upon the sun and has a violent sympathetic action produced within itself—internally manifested by earthquakes, and externally by auroral displays and volcanic eruptions." So much for Mr. Jenkins's theory, in illustration of which the author at any rate displayed no little mastery of facts connected with the history of the disease. As for its soundness, we must leave him to fight that question out with those who have specially studied the needful data.

AFTER a long contention between the Duke of Argyll and Mr. Lowe, the former has succeeded in carrying his nominee into the post left vacant by the death of Sir George Jameson. The new Auditor of Accounts to the India Office is Sir Charles Jackson, formerly a Judge of the Calcutta High Court, and afterwards Head of the Commission for enquiring into the causes that brought about the failure of the old Bank of Bombay. From the way in which Sir Charles conducted that enquiry, and from his previous labours at home in connection with the affairs of the Brighton Railway, we think that the India Office may be congratulated on its new choice.

THE KHELAT SIRDARS.—A correspondent from Sind, who certainly ought to be well informed, assures us we are mistaken in supposing that the Khelet Sirdars are dissatisfied with the result of the late Jacobabad conference. On the contrary, the Sirdars present consented freely to the whole of Sir W. Merewether's proposals, without in any way expressing the smallest disappointment or displeasure.—Pioneer.

COURT-MARTIAL.—At an European general court-martial, assembled at Camp Nusseerabad, on Friday, March 15, 1872, No. 1,159, Private James Mains, 59th regiment, was arraigned on the following charges:—First charge: Having, between Neemuch and Nusseerabad, between Oct. 7, 1871, and Feb. 7, 1872, made away with the following article of his clothing, viz., one greatcoat, valued at Rs. 12-3-9. Second charge: Having, between Neemuch and Nusseerabad, between Oct. 7, 1871, and Feb. 7, 1872, lost by neglect the following article of his clothing, viz., one greatcoat, valued at Rs. 12-3-9. Third charge: Having, between Neemuch and Nusseerabad, between Oct. 7, 1871, and Feb. 7, 1872, sold the following article of his clothing, viz., one greatcoat, valued at Rs. 12-3-9. Fourth charge: Insubordination, in having, at Nusseerabad, on Feb. 8, disobeyed the lawful command of No. 288, Provost serg. Michael Casey, superior officer, by not marching away under escort from outside the verandah of the orderly-room of the 59th regiment when twice ordered to do so by the said Provost serg. Casey. Fifth charge: Insubordination, accompanied with personal violence, in having, at the time and place stated in the preceding charge, used violence against No. 288, Provost serg. Casey, of the 59th regiment, by striking him on both arms with his handcuffs, the said Provost serg. Casey being his superior officer, and being in the execution of his office. Sixth charge: Insubordination, in having, at Nusseerabad, on Feb. 8, when a prisoner undergoing sentence of a district court-martial in the regimental cells, used insubordinate language towards Major William Hamilton Thompson, of the 59th regiment, his superior officer, then visiting the aforesaid cells, in substance and to the effect following, that is to say, "who the hell am I to make a complaint to, if not to you?" The above being in breach of the Articles of War. Finding: The court find that the prisoner is not guilty of the first charge. Guilty of the second charge; the court, however, finds that the value of the greatcoat is Rs. 12-3-4, and not Rs. 12-3-9, as set forth in the charge. Not guilty of the third charge. Guilty of the fourth charge. Guilty of the fifth charge. Guilty of the sixth charge. Sentence: The court sentence the prisoner, No. 1,159, Private J. Mains, 59th regt., to suffer penal servitude for the term of seven years. To be put under stoppages of pay until he shall have made good the following article, viz., one greatcoat, of the value of twelve rupees three annas and four pies, and, in addition, to forfeit all right to good conduct pay and to pension on discharge, whether in respect of past or future service. The court do further sentence him to be discharged with ignominy from her Majesty's service.—Signed, R. Lacy, Lieut. col. 59th regiment, President.—Nusseerabad, March 18, 1872. (Approved and confirmed, but I remit two years of the penal servitude awarded by the court.—Signed, A. SPENCER, Lieut. gen. C. in C., Bombay.) The prisoner will be sent to the Presidency at the proper season under the charge of an escort, and will be handed over to the civil power under the orders of the Brigadier general commanding the Bombay district, in view to the sentence of penal servitude being carried into effect.

LIFE OF SIR HENRY LAWRENCE.

A COMPLETE biography of the late Sir Henry Lawrence was a want which his admirers have long been waiting to see supplied. Sir John Kaye's appreciative sketch of his old friend whetted more than it appeased the general appetite for such a portrait as Sir Herbert Edwardes had undertaken to present of his former chief. Sir Herbert's untimely death however at the end of 1868 left the picture but half finished. It remained for Mr. Herman Merivale to complete the task; and the result of their joint labours has just been issued to the world in two portly volumes, for the latter of which Mr. Merivale alone is answerable.* If he had not done his share of the work so ably, we might have had stronger reasons for regretting that somebody who knew both India and Sir H. Lawrence had not been entrusted with the duty of completing Sir H. Edwardes's designs. The latter, as Mr. Merivale reminds us, "had the subject by heart and could shape his work accordingly." He himself however had "the advantage of the regular advice and superintendence of members of Sir Henry's family, and (occasionally) of that of other distinguished men familiar with his career;" and if he found only an undigested mass of materials bequeathed by Sir H. Edwardes to his literary successor, it was something at any rate to have them ready to his hands, while to him will belong all the credit of having turned them to such good account.

In the first volume Sir Herbert Edwardes conducts us, in his light and somewhat jaunty way, through the earlier stages of his hero's career, down to the middle of his sojourn at Khatmandú. The Horatian maxim, Fortes creantur fortibus et bonis, seems to have been strikingly verified in the children of the tough old warrior who weathered all kinds of dangers from field and flood and his own daring, during twenty-five years of ill-requited service in India, and long survived the twofold crisis of a dreadful gale and an abscess bursting in his liver; events which fell together on a memorable voyage to Ireland in 1816. The sons of Colonel Lawrence were to prove regular chips of the hard old block, but not a little also did they owe to their excellent mother, whose sweet nature and wise counsels moulded their young lives, and left clear traces in their future conduct.

*"Life of Sir Henry Lawrence." By the late Sir Herbert Edwardes, K.C.B., and Herman Merivale, C.B. Smith, Elder, and Co. 1872.

As a boy, Henry Lawrence was more remarkable for fearless integrity and sweet though quick temper than for brilliant scholarship. We have some pleasant glimpses into his life at home and at Addiscombe, where he fell like a young demon upon a cadet of twice his size whom he had caught meddling with letters in his desk. Quick at resenting a wrong done to himself or others, the rough Irish lad was quite as ready to acknowledge his own fault and atone for any hasty rudeness on his part. He insisted on getting at a reason for ever process he was required to learn. For the games of his schoolfellows and the amusements of a later age he seems to have had little relish; but his moral courage and self-control were great even then, his kind acts unnumbered, and his force of character fully recognised by those who knew him best. Among these perhaps was Mr. Hudleston, an East India Director, who rallied Henry's sister Letitia on her dislike to parting with him. "You foolish thing," he said, "Henry will distinguish himself. All your brothers will do well, I think; but Henry has such steadiness and resolution that you'll see him come back a general. He will be Sir Henry Lawrence before he dies." This may have been an instance of the true word spoken in jest, but his biographer quotes the passage without comment; and Mr. Hudleston, as an old friend of the family, may well have had good reason for meaning what he said.

Fitted out by his good "Aunt Angel," Henry sailed for India in the autumn of 1822. At Dum-Dum, the Indian Woolwich, he at once devoted himself to drill and professional studies. His chief amusement was chess. From the first he took the greatest pride in his profession, but his reading embraced a wider field. His strong religious instincts drew him into the circle of which the Rev. George Craufurd was the conspicuous centre. A year later Lawrence went off with his company to play his allotted part in the first Burmese War. The tremendous hardships endured by our troops "in an unexplored country and pestilential climate" told at length on the sturdy young adjutant of artillery, who went home on sick leave in 1826 to try and shake off the dreadful Arracan fever and receive a loving welcome from all his home friends. In 1829 Lawrence went out again with health improved and a heart already given away to his cousin Honoria, his wife to be. A sister and his brother John bore him company.

The next few years of his life were spent in quiet study, until in 1833 his brother George succeeded in getting him an appointment on the Revenue Survey in the North-West Provinces. For five years he worked hard as a Surveyor, gaining that closer acquaintance with the natives of the country which he afterwards turned to such useful account. For eight months out of twelve he "pitched his tents among the people, under their trees, and by their streams." His labours in this field gave more pleasure to his superiors than to some of his comrades, who grumbled loudly at his "confounded zeal," which gave them twice as much to do as they had done before.

In 1835 the Lawrences lost their stouthearted father. Henry's grief was partly assuaged by the prospect of an early marriage with his long-loved cousin. In 1837 they met at last and were married in Calcutta. Fitter helpmates on life's journey than this pair have never perhaps existed. How well Mrs. Lawrence loved, how clearly she appreciated her husband may be seen from some of her letters in the first volume, letters remarkable for womanly grace, wifely self-surrender, and ripe breadth of culture. In the midst of his new happiness, of his survey work, and his plans for the improvement of the public services, Brevet-Captain Lawrence in 1838 learned that his troop of Horse Artillery was summoned to join the Army of the Indus about to march on Kabul. His first child had scarcely been born when he received the long-desired permission to take the field with his own troop. The retreat of the Persians from Herat however caused a reduction of the Bengal force, and Lawrence's troop stood fast at Ferozepore. At this juncture he found a good friend in Mr., afterwards Sir Frederic Currie, who got him appointed assistant to Sir George Clerk, at that time Political Agent in Loodiana. "I have helped to put your foot in the stirrup," said his friend. "It rests with you to put yourself into the saddle."

For the next three years Lawrence had civil charge of the Ferozepore district which had but lately fallen into British hands. Besides rebuilding the town, repairing the fort, collecting revenue, and trying causes, he had to look after the troops passing through Ferozepore, supply their wants, and forward all letters to the army in Kabul. The fruits of his growing acquaintance with the native chiefs around him were published anonymously in the Delhi Gazette under the guise of a story called "The Adventurer in the Punjab." In another contribution to the same journal, his "Anticipatory Chapters of Indian History," he foreshadowed in June 1841 the very catastrophe which befel our troops in Kabul that same winter. Before the year's end Lawrence was on his way at Clerk's bidding to Peshawur, where a fitting helpmate was needed for Major Mackeson in the work cut out for him by the surrounding danger. In the few dark weeks that elapsed between Wild's first effort to relieve Jellalabad and Pollock's arrival at Peshawur, Lawrence did the best he could in aid of our disheartened soldiers, and in trying to spur up our wavering Sikh allies. But his best efforts could not work a miracle, and some months had still to elapse before Pollock could take up the movement in which Wild had failed.

At last however Pollock forced the Khyber, and Lawrence, who had been wonderfully active in forwarding supplies to the front, helped also to his great delight in bringing guns to bear on the defenders of the dreaded pass. Always eager for the fray, he was made still happier when, some weeks afterwards, Pollock begged him to come and take charge of his unruly Sikh contingent at Jellalabad. The part he had meanwhile been playing at Peshawar was neither easy nor agreeable. In spite of all his persuasions and remonstrances, our Sikh allies, who had helped to clear the Khyber, had grown weary of the duties entrusted to them, and bore themselves more and more insolently towards the English officers and their agents. In those few weeks Lawrence declared he had eaten more dirt than he would get out of his mouth in the next seven years. Their tone however changed at the prospect of winning a new province from the Afghans, and, sped by Lawrence's exertions, a body of Sikhs marched to Jellalabad, whither in due time he was allowed to follow them.

During the halt at that place he saw his brother George, one of the Kabul prisoners, whom Akbar had sent to treat with Pollock for the surrender of all the captives in his hands. His noble offer to go back in his brother's stead, an offer backed up by his noble wife, was by the brother just as nobly refused. At length he himself with five hundred Sikhs had the supreme delight of sharing Pollock's advance to Kabul. Captain Lawrence and his Lahore Contingent were thanked by the English General for their good services at Tezeen and throughout the campaign; and Colonel Richmond reported the effect produced at Tezeen by "a fire of round-shot from Lieutenant Douglas's nine-pounder, ably directed by that officer and by Captain Lawrence." Soon after the triumphal gathering of Nott's and Pollock's heroes at Ferozepore, Lawrence found himself rewarded with the post of Superintendent of the Dhera Dhoon, the lovely valley between the Himalayas and the Sewalik Hills. This post however being claimed for the Covenanted Civil Service, he took up his abode at Umballa as Assistant to the Envoy at Lahore. On Clerk's promotion to the Government of the North-West Provinces, Lawrence, it was hoped, would take his old master's place on the frontier. But the coveted post fell to another, and Lawrence had to console himself with the political charge of Kythul. Erelong however, in September 1843, a new prospect was opened out before him by Lord Ellenborough's offer of the vacant Residency in Nepál; an appointment involving light labour in a pleasant climate, the two things of which at that time he stood most in need. And here for the present we must leave him, studying the tangled web of Nepalese politics, but carefully eschewing all active interference therein.

THE NATIVE MARRIAGE ACT.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—The sensational letter of your anonymous correspondent "—" on the subject of the recently-passed Native Marriage Act will impose upon no one who knows the facts of the case; but as such persons are few in England, permit me to expose his unjustifiable misrepresentations.

1. He affirms that the Act "strikes at the root of the whole religious and social economy of both Hindoo and Mahometans," and for proof he thinks the following sufficient. "Under Hindoo law, over a great part of India a widow succeeds during her life-time to the hereditary landed property of her late husband; and hereditary landed property is actually inalienable by the children. Under this new law a man (say a Hindoo), if he becomes attached to a Nautch girl, has only to go before the Civil Judge and say he is la mazhab, 'without sect,' and they can be married."

A more grotesquely false representation of the provisions of the Act could scarcely have been given. Not one word occurs in them to imply that the parties marrying are "without sect," and it need scarcely be added that the Arabic phrase la mazhab has no place in an English Act. The theological declaration which is really required from the bridegroom and bride is as follows:—"I do not profess the Christian, Jewish, Hindu, Mahometan, Parsi, Buddhist, Sikh, or Jaina religion." These religions have already the guarantee of the State for the validity of their marriages; the intention of the present Act is simply to secure the same guarantee to the members of all other sects and persuasions who are willing to comply with its conditions; and all India knows that the Act was originally devised to meet the conscientious views of one special body of Indian Dissenters (whose members, by the way, are not given to marrying Nautch girls).

Nor is the easy process of uttering two words "before the Civil Judge" the all-sufficient preliminary to the marriage. The Act requires that one of the parties must give notice in writing to the Registrar before whom it is to be solemnised, and that that functionary "must be the Registrar of a district within which one at least of the parties to the marriage has resided for fourteen days before such notice is given." (Sec. 3, clause 4.) Fourteen days after the notice has been given, the marriage may be solemnised, unless it has been objected to as contravening either of the four requisite conditions, viz.:—(1) Both parties must be unmarried; (2) the bridegroom and bride must have completed the respective ages of eighteen and fourteen; (3) if either party be under twenty-one years of age, he or she must have the signed written consent of parent or guardian (except in the case of a widow); and (4) the parties must not be within certain prohibited degrees of consanguinity or affinity. Ample provisions are made for the hearing of any objections raised upon these points before the Civil Courts, pending which suits the marriage is of course delayed (Sections 6, 7, 8, 10). Thus much for the dangerous facility which this Act is supposed to afford to hasty or imprudent marriages. Further, the parties who have once married under this Act are prohibited from subsequent bigamy under severe penalties, "whatever may be the religion which he or she professed at the time of such second marriage" (Sect. 16). It will, therefore, avail them nothing to relapse into a polygamous faith for licentious reasons. Now is it likely that any man wishing to play fast and loose with his religion, or stimulated by mere infatuation for an adventuress, should put himself under such stringent regulations as these? How the Act would tempt the young Mahometans the writer does not even attempt to show; wisely enough, seeing that they already possess facilities for hasty marriages which they would entirely lose under Mr. Stephen's Act.

2. The writer then goes on to say that "the people, generally, will not believe" that this Act was intended for the relief of the Brahmos, but regard it as "an artful measure," designed to "break the ground for a forcible extension of Christianity by giving a premium to members of old families to declare themselves la mazhab [again! do "the people, generally," talk Arabic throughout all India?] without religion; in other words, half converts." Truly it must be indeed "an artful measure" for the "forcible extension of Christianity" which begins by requiring the declaration "I do not profess the Christian religion;" while the "premium" offered to tempt a man from a polygamous faith is the binding him, under strict penalty, to monogamy! "I hear," continues our alarmist, "that the utmost possible consternation prevails among all classes of natives all over the country. Meetings have been held, and protests by the thousand got up; but it is too late." As "—" has not thought proper to mention who he is, nor from whom he received his information, we may suspend our belief in it until more definite authorities reveal where the "protests by the thousand" were got up, and on what occasions the utmost possible consternation was expressed by "all classes of natives all over the country." Concerning the proceedings in Council the writer makes the curious blunder of saying that the Act was "forced into law by a few groove-running Englishmen, against the protest of such men as John Inglis, Sir R. Temple, and others." Sir R. Temple spoke in favour of the measure, and especially combated Mr. Inglis's arguments against it. (So, too, did both the Lords Napier, and Lord Mayo's very last speech in Council was a warm defence of the Act as a long-delayed measure of justice, to which the Government stood pledged.) But accuracy of statement is evidently not "—"s forte.

Having thus attempted to defend the Marriage Act from your correspondent's unfounded aspersions, it will be proper to add that there is nevertheless one phase of it which will undoubtedly affect the prospects of Hinduism, viz., it will relieve those persons who have already lost faith therein from the temptation to conform outwardly for the sake of securing a lawful marriage. I do not see that we have any need to be ashamed of this result. If it were our duty to assist the majority to coerce the minority in those matters where Hindu faith interferes with human freedom, we ought not to have saved the Hindu widows from the flames, nor the human victims of Orissa from being cut up to manure the grain crops, nor (under the Lex Loci) the outcasts from loss of property. But we have done all these things as defenders of the weak and promoters of justice between man and man; and the present Act is but another step in furtherance of those sacred ends. If every measure that has been passed by the Indian Government were equally defensible, it would be well indeed both for the rulers and the ruled.—I am, Sir, yours, &c., S. D. COLLET.

A TOBACCO-TAX AND SUCCESSION DUTY FOR INDIA.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—I am glad to observe that in the Times of May 16 the question of a tobacco-tax and succession duty for India has been reopened.

The Duke of Argyll appears to have decided against these taxes solely on the Report of the Hon. John Strachey, a member of the Governor-general's Council; there has been no public discussion. Outram's motto, "audi alteram partem," has been ignored.

The Hon. George Campbell, at present Governor of Bengal, pointed out twelve years ago that two millions sterling might easily be levied in India annually by a moderate duty on tobacco.

Is it impossible to bring these two statesmen to London for a month to discuss before the Financial Committee of the House of Commons the propriety of imposing a tobacco-tax? Delegates from each of the Presidencies, from the North-West Provinces, from the Punjab, from Oudh, and from the Central Provinces might accompany them.

The crudeness and instability of our measures in India are owing to the absence of public discussion. There can be no good reason for keeping our financial policy a secret.

In my letter of the 3rd March last year I pointed out that a succession duty or nuzzuranah would be in accordance with native customs, and the imposition of such a duty and of a tobacco-tax would enable Government to abolish the income-tax and reduce that on salt.—Your obedient servant, T.

CIVIL ENGINEERING COLLEGE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—I shall be glad through your paper to draw attention to a subject of much interest and importance to many—the high terms charged for students at the Indian Civil Engineering

College. £150 a-year is a large sum to parents with small incomes. That success in competitive examinations should be the only means of obtaining an appointment is, no doubt, right and wise; but it is hard that a young man who has talent and industry, and who has received an education which gives him every reason to hope for that success, should be debarred from offering himself as candidate for admission to the College, in consequence of the inability of his family to meet the expenses. Such is the case with my son, and with others whose only guardian is, like myself,

THE BURMESE EMBASSY.

The Rangoon Mail says that the Burmese Embassy has long been talked of. So many exaggerated reports have arisen as to its objects, its personnel, and as to who inspired the King with the brilliant ideas and so many of those reports have turned out false that the opinion had become prevalent that there was to be no embassy at all, and that this was but another of the thousand and one abortive royal schemes proposed by his Majesty of the Golden Foot. But the Embassy has started and has arrived among us, on its way as it thinks to the Court of England, under the auspices of our distinguished townsman Mr. Edmund Jones, of the Exchange Hall. And which of his officials is it that the King of Burmah has selected to represent his dignity, his honour, and his majesty, before the Queen of England and Empress of India? When we learn the answer to this question we are forced on to another query, are his peculiar qualifications meant as a fair and fitting sample of his master's mingled good and bad characteristics, or is this but another instance of the practice so constantly used by the Burmese in their relations with us, viz., always to couple with any courtesy towards our Government some insult whose significant meaning is apparently only to their own people? It is not to the purpose to inquire whether this Burman official deserved the disgrace which was attached to him, or not. But to European notions it is a strange compliment to a friendly sovereign to send to him as a special ambassador an official whom it has been found necessary to punish by the degradation of imprisonment in the common jail with irons on his legs. The imprisonment and the disgrace we do know however were considered at the time to be well deserved by the British representative, who congratulated himself very heartily that "that the Ken Woodonk has been disgraced at last," adding that "villainy such as his generally meets with his own reward." With such ambassadors it is beyond doubt that its Majesty will succeed in convincing the Government of Great Britain that he is too august a sovereign to be left to be dealt with by the Viceroy and Government of India, and that he should be at once admitted to direct relations with her Majesty in regard to all diplomatic and political matters between the two Governments.

THE CONDITION OF HYDERABAD.

The Pioneer remarks that the turbulent subjects of the Nizam of Hyderabad are again bringing themselves into notoriety. Under the firm hand of Sir Salar Jung, the country for the last two years has been comparatively quiet; but the difficulties of his administration remain, and are two-fold, or rather they may be grouped into two classes—the difficulties arising from the jealousy of his peers, and those, the more ordinary impediments of all Indian Governments, which are created by the character of the population. The first of these Sir Salar Jung by luck, determination, and the help of the British Subsidiary Force has encountered, and, if he has not suppressed them, has kept so far below the surface that only those acquainted with the secret history of the Nizam's capital are aware of their prevalence. But the other difficulties, those of civilising the Nizam's subjects, are two patent for any measure of tact to conceal. The population of the Nizamut, beyond the immediate precincts of the capital and the direct supervision of Sir Salar Jung, is as lawless as that of the Belooch border. But while the subjects of the Khelat chief content themselves with promiscuous warfare, every man constituting himself his neighbour's worst enemy, those of the Nizam of Hyderabad superadd to their intertribal differences a preferential dislike to the British. The Subsidiary force, the railway—in short, the British presence, however demonstrated—is eminently odious to the brawling brigands who infest the dominions. A few years ago the person of a British traveller was not secure, indeed he was marked, if not for death, for inhuman treatment, and the annals of Secunderabad supply numerous instances of the brutality of the armed loafers of Hyderabad. But somehow there came a change over the scene when Sir Salar Jung came upon it. His reputation was soon established, and has not, even in the eulogies of his friends, been exaggerated. But his power has perhaps been overrated. Sir Salar Jung is undoubtedly the autocrat of Hyderabad, but his gudakes does not rest upon the firm basis of a national support; it is poised on swords, well balanced it may be, but poised on swords nevertheless, and those swords are in British hands. The Behilla and the Arab know this as well as do Sir Salar Jung's fellow-nobles, but they are wanting in that worldly wisdom, or that better part of valour, which persuades the Sirdars to acquiesce in the arrangement. The nobles bite their thumbs at the Minister, but keep the law on their side; the loafers make themselves criminal by overt dissatisfaction. The glamour of British prestige is—and we do not regret it—now fading away, and the real shape and features of our rule are being unveiled to the country. We gain by faithful representation in that we gain the support of all good men, but we lose by losing the worship of the ignorant. They do not see that our administration is veining the country, that the threads of gold are creeping through the gross rock on all sides. They have become familiar with Englishmen, and they see that the immense gulf which they had supposed to exist between them and us does not exist, and with the knowledge comes insolence. In every corner of India the effects of our generous acceptance of egalite are showing themselves. In many places their effects are disagreeable, and in Hyderabad as disagreeable as anywhere. There, in the Nizam's dominions, intercourse with the British has created hatred, and the country is almost as unsafe for European travellers as it was ten years ago. Of late there have been several outrages on unoffending Englishmen, and armed escorts have now to be provided for travellers by Sir Salar Jung. Force is the only argument which these turbulent Yaconins understand, and Sir Salar Jung, to do him justice, always argues to the point. But even he cannot work absolute miracles in Hyderabad; and if we persist in "civilising" the Dominions and in exciting hatred against us, we ought to be prepared to back up our schemes, should the work before him exceed his powers. That any general manifestation of dislike to our presence is imminent, or even in the near future, we disbelieve; but at the same time we consider that any reduction of our forces in that territory would at this moment be most impolitic. Indeed, we would rather advocate their increase. Sir Salar Jung's work has much increased, and we consider that very large additions might be made to the armed frontier police, with advantage to ourselves and justice to the Minister and his successors. For the present Minister cannot live for ever, and the comfortable security which we feel in the presence of Sir Salar Jung in that far away Mahomedan State cannot necessarily be transferred to his successor. There may be another Sir Salar Jung in Hyderabad waiting to take his place, but it is improbable. Should anything unfortunately precipitate the death of the present Minister, troubles will assuredly arise in the dominions of the Nizam.

PRISON DISCIPLINE.

The Friend of India thinks it is indispensable that wherever there is a prison like Alipore—productive, reformatory, as well as punitive—that there shall be in connection with it another, say, like the Presidency Jail where the punishment is of a much sterner kind, where no terms are held with a man who gives the least indication of saying "I won't." The one system cannot be dispensed with, however desirable the other may be, and perhaps Dr. Mouat did to some extent forget the punitive in the productive and reformatory. But his prison management nevertheless is a work worthy of the life of a man. In order to test the problem of prison labour as an instrument of Punishment, profit and reformation, nothing better could be desired than Alipore Jail. It has not quite a look of punishment, but it is punishment. If a man has a sense of industry few punishments could be harder than to know that he is working from morning to night to produce what he will not enjoy. If he has no such feeling, then he will leave the jail as poor as he came into it, and his punishment will have been hard work simply, but he comes out able to earn a livelihood. If he stole aforesaid, and steals again, the fault the first time might be in circumstances; the second time it will be his own. Is it nothing to send out a large number of prisoners every year skilled workmen, able in most cases to read and write, and acquainted with the general principles of the religion common to us all? Granting that punishment is the first object of prison life, surely the next object is not to send men out bitterer and more determined rascals than when they came in. Punish a criminal for his crime, yet leave him some spark of the elasticity of spirit which is as necessary for a return to a life of honesty as food is to our physical existence. Destroy a man's elasticity of spirit, deprive him of hope, and you have done for him all that you can do to prevent him from ever again becoming a honest man. It may be said that these principles, however applicable they may be to Western life, are not suited to the East. We think that Dr. Mouat has shown that they are suited to the East. That his system requires modification we have not the slightest doubt. Perhaps, indeed, so far as prison principles are concerned every Governor ought to originate his own system, because unless he does in some measure originate it he never perfectly comprehends it so as to reduce it to living action. An active Governor with strong force of character never would adopt Dr. Mouat's plan, nor anybody else's plan in its entirety. Dr. Mouat had an opportunity such as few men ever had before of reducing his theories to practice. He had difficulties, and overcame them—opposition and either convinced or defeated it—a field of operations equalled in extent in the world. His power was immense. But he had also to exercise immense tact and discretion and policy till the wheels of his extensive machinery were set agoing. When they began to work, reasonable men, even of the opposition, were willing to give them fair play. They ran so smoothly, and fitted in so well to the purpose, that even rival engineers were willing to admit that they deserved fair play, and they got it. When other pilots came to the helm, the system began to be disputed. It was natural. No two men of strong character ever can work exactly in the same way. Each man must have his own way within certain limits of rules. But let Dr. Mouat take comfort, his work in Bengal will not easily be effaced. Part of it may, and even in its effacement tend to the more effective carrying out and perfecting of his system. The system itself will endure. Severer punishment may be necessary, stricter discipline may be necessary, but prison labour as an instrument of punishment, profit, and reformation will remain.

THE INCOME-TAX BILL.

The following passages from the debate on the Income-tax Bill, on April 17, will show the main drift of opinion in the Council:—The Hon. Mr. Inglis said he would vote against the Bill. He did so because he was convinced that the imposition of the income-tax was altogether unnecessary, either on financial or other grounds. Now, their experience of Sir Richard Temple's past Budgets would, he thought, fully justify them in not placing too much confidence in his figures. In 1870-71 the hon. gentleman estimated for a deficit, and put on the income-tax, and the result was a surplus of a million and a half. In 1871-72 he again estimated for a small deficit, and the result was again a surplus. The hon. gentleman again comes before them for the third time with a small deficit. Experience proved that he had again committed a similar error, and that this year, ushered in with a small deficit, would close with a large surplus. He begged to say that he denied that any change in the tax with regard to the raising of the limit of exempted incomes would do away with bribery and corruption. He allowed that the alterations contemplated would relieve a vast number of poor people from very serious suffering, and perhaps oppression and extortion would be reduced. But he maintained that whatever might be the limit, bribery and corruption would always attend the levy of an income-tax in India. He said this from his own knowledge of how utterly impossible it was for a district officer to make assessments unaided by native energy. The hon. gentleman here read short extracts from letters from the Collector of Cawnpore, the Collector of Ghazepore, the Collector of Mynpore, the Collector of Goruckpore, &c., which showed, in Mr. Inglis's opinion, very clearly the difficulties which beset the district officer in making assessments. He thought that so much attention had been paid to the charges of bribery and corruption that other objections of a graver nature had been allowed to drop out of sight. He would therefore notice a few of them. The first was that this tax was, from its inquisitorial character, the tax that was the most disliked. All natives disliked to make known the amount or sources of their incomes. This feeling was strong among the natives. The feeling was so strong that they had known of no native States on this side of India imposing a tax like this. Secondly, assessments under this tax were founded on information thoroughly untrustworthy. The assessments on the mass of the people were pure guesses, and were based upon no reliable data. The result was that the tax pressed very heavily on some, and others escaped. Thirdly, the levy of this tax on the interest of public debt was regarded by every native as a direct breach of faith on the part of Government. He would say that this had most seriously damaged their credit in this country. Lastly, the tax had produced a great change of feeling on the part of the people towards district officers. To prove this the hon. gentleman read two extracts from the letters of collectors, which went to show that the income-tax was a mistake financially and a mistake politically, and that the district officers, who were before liked and respected by the people, were now regarded with a feeling of distrust. The Hon. Mr. Inglis concluded by affirming that an income-tax was, of all taxes that could be devised, the most disliked by the people.

His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal said he certainly did not mean to commit himself to an opinion with regard to an income-tax. He was quite sure that the view adverse to the income-tax could not have been put better than it had just been by the hon. member to his right (the Hon. Mr. Inglis). The fact of the matter was this—there was a great deal to be said on both sides of the subject. The tax was no doubt open to most of the objections which the hon. member had pointed out. There was no doubt a great deal of imposition, and extortion, and error in the mode of assessment. On the other hand, his view was that for many great purposes money must be raised, and if they dispensed with this tax they must find some other mode of taxation to put in its place.

General the Hon. H. W. Norman said he was no friend to an income-tax in India, and he would have been very glad if it were possible not to impose it during the ensuing year. An income-tax appeared to him very unsuited to India. It certainly opened a large door to frauds of every kind, and there would be abundant frauds committed by subordinate officials. They had also heard various other evils detailed, and most forcibly, by the Hon. Mr. Inglis. The question might be asked—"If the income-tax produces only one per cent., why do you retain a tax which is undoubtedly very unpopular, which is strongly opposed within these walls, and which must take up much of the valuable time of our officials?" The answer to this had been given by Sir R. Temple, and the plea of necessity must therefore hold good.

The Hon. Mr. Stephen said: My Lord,—I will not occupy the Council more than one minute. I shall vote for the Bill, on the ground that Sir Richard Temple's estimate is correct, and that there would be a deficit without the income-tax. The proof of that proposition I shall leave in the hands of Sir Richard Temple. Assuming it is true, and bearing in mind the provisional character of this Government and the fact that we have to provide for the finances of the current year, I now think it clear that we can neither diminish expenditure, nor increase income to the extent required by any other means except by the revival of the income-tax, and I have not heard anybody attempt to show the contrary.

The Hon. Mr. Strachey said he had so often on previous occasions in this Council said everything that he had to say on the question of the income-tax, that he considered it quite unnecessary, at this late hour, to take up the time of the Council with any statement of his opinion on the subject. He would merely say that for his part, he had always believed that the abuses of which they had heard so much were not necessary consequences of the tax, but that they arose from other causes. Personally he had always maintained that there were existing burdens far worse than the income-tax, and financial defects in their system, the removal of which was much more urgent than the removal of the income-tax; but he did not think that at the present moment the merits or demerits of the income-tax was really a question that was at issue. Considering the altogether unexceptionable circumstances at the present time, it appeared to him that it was quite impossible that the Government should come to any other conclusion than this—that the temporary retention of the income-tax for another year was inevitable.

Miscellaneous.

A CASE OF POISONING.—The following almost comes up to that amiable individual, Miss Christina Edmonds:—"A Mahomedan at Hoshiarpore, to satisfy his malice against some neighbours, distributed poisoned sweetmeats to three of their children, one of whom died in great agony a few hours after. The man has been sentenced to transportation for life." He ought to have been hanged.

THE OPIUM CROP.—A letter from Ghazipore in the columns of the Allahabad paper says that the opium crop has not been so good as was anticipated, the westerly winds during the latter part of March having dried up the sap, and decreased considerably the quantity of the drug. The officers connected with the department are of opinion that the yield this year will not be more than that of last year.

ULWAR.—The finances of Ulwar again exhibit a surplus. The amount is four lakhs of rupees, and the Political Agent and Council of Administration have some right to be proud. The Maharajah still holds aloof from participation in the management of the State, and some sections of his subjects have it that he has actually turned Mussulman! That report needs "confirmation."—Delhi Gazette.

MISSION WORK AT SHAHJAHANPORE.—From the last report of mission work in the city and district of Shahjahanpore we learn that during 1871 twelve persons were baptised, raising the number of the Christian community to 306. In the 17 schools under the care of the Rev. J. S. Johnson and the Rev. P. M. Buck there were 751 scholars. The Panabpur Christian village is, we are glad to know, thriving, the community being now in great part self-supporting.—Pioneer.

ACCIDENT ON THE HOOGHLY.—On Thursday, at 2 P.M., a cargo-boat crossing the Hooghly from Mirbahar Ghat to Howrah Ghat, laden with thirty-three bags of betel-nuts and seven bags of cotton, suddenly struck, when close to the ghat, upon some sunken piles which were covered by the water. Her bottom planking was torn completely out, and she immediately filled and went down. No lives were lost, and the whole of her cargo was recovered by the river-police.—Englishman.

DR. AITCHISON.—Indian Public Opinion says—"The Government, in selecting Dr. Aitchison, Civil Surgeon of Rawalpindi, for the Joint-Commissionership of Leh, seems to have made an excellent selection. The professional honours gained by that gentleman in England are higher than those of any other medical man in the Punjab. His fame as a botanist and an untiring Civil Surgeon can only be exceeded by the high standard of efficiency which he has always aimed at in the management of jails. A physician is, perhaps, on the whole, the best man to send to Leh, and we can think of no worthier successor or locum tenens to Dr. Cayley than Dr. Aitchison, whose departure from Rawalpindi will be regretted by everyone, especially the poor, to whom he has devoted himself most disinterestedly."

SUPERSTITION.—A vernacular paper states that in order to avert the unpropitious effects of the "Aurora Borealis," which recently became visible at Jeypore, the Maharajah has sanctioned Rs. 1,800 to be spent in the performance of the hom sacrifice and a feast to Brahmins.

GENERAL ABBOTT.—We recently noted that General Abbott had been requested to remain in his appointment and had consented to do so. We very much regret to announce that the General has determined after all to leave for England at the end of the current month. —Indian Public Opinion.

THE "DENGUE" AT CALCUTTA.—The terrible prevalence of dengue fever in Calcutta will be well understood by our readers when they hear that the Cathedral Mission College has been closed for the last two days owing to its ravages. The Principal and Professors have been attacked, and to such an extent has the attendance of the students been affected that the college has been closed till Monday. —Indian Mirror.

A WOMAN DEVoured BY JACKALS.—Last Thursday night an aged woman of the mehter caste was devoured alive by jackals at Goosery. It appears from enquiries made by the police that she had in the early part of the night retired to bed in sound and perfect health, but on the following morning her body was found by the neighbours lying near the door of her house, which was a thatched one, mangled, and a portion evidently devoured by jackals, as she had some valuables buried inside her house which were found by the police untouched. —Englishman.

A "LIVELY" TOWN TO LIVE IN.—Leopards and tigers appear to be getting too near neighbours to be pleasant. Our establishment, when we are late in going to press, spend the night on the premises, having lately been alarmed by tigers prowling near their houses after dark. On the 15th instant information was brought to our inspector of police that a leopard had committed havoc amongst the dogs and goats close to Karaingunge, which is on the opposite side of the river. He immediately went over, and after much trouble found that the animal had taken shelter in a cane jungle, in a village situated to the south of Karaingunge, and despatched it with two shots. It was a good sized male leopard. We hear there are several more annoying the villagers greatly. —Bengal Times.

DEATH OF A MAN-EATER.—A supplement to the Central Provinces Gazette announces the death, "to the great relief of all concerned," of a man-eating tiger in the Seroncha talooka. This animal had caused at least half-a-dozen villages to be deserted, and its ravages have been carried on in this district to some extent; and although only five people have been killed and wounded, yet the dread that its presence created was such as to cause immense panic, so much so as to prevent the people going into the jungles or cultivating their fields, and its timely destruction on the 14th March, by a gun set with a trigger spring, has prevented three villages belonging to the Upper Godavery district being deserted. It was noticed that this animal's traces were to be seen each day up to the place along the road where its last victim, a poor Brinjara, was killed, and it was decided to set the gun on the very same spot, and there the tiger, an immense brute, met its death, having been shot through the heart."

FEVER AT BANGALORE.—We are sorry to learn that fever is prevalent to a great extent among the natives of the pettah and cantonment. Report says that it is similar to the famine fever of 1865, whilst in other cases the symptoms are like those of the dengue fever. —Bangalore Herald, April 23.

TOBACCO GROWING.—The Superintendent of the Government Farms has reported to the Madras Government that tobacco of good quality cannot be grown on the Government Farms, and suggests that further experiments be postponed. Good tobacco is grown in other parts of Madras, and why not at the Government Farms? —Englishman.

CIVIL.—We (Madras Mail) hear that Mr. H. F. Sullivan will succeed Mr. Garston as Collector of South Arcot; that Mr. W. S. Foster, Sub-Collector of Bellary, will become Acting Collector of the Godavery district; that Mr. G. D. Irvine will become Acting Sub-Collector of Bellary; and that Mr. H. W. Bliss will continue to act as Sub-Collector of Madura, in succession to the late Mr. J. E. Arbuthnot.

WANT OF WATER AT BANGALORE.—Want of water seems to be the cry of the town, from one end to the other. The people at the pettah suffer greatly, and the dhobies are at their wits' end to find out means to wash people's clothes. As a good round sum has been sanctioned by the Supreme Government towards developing the Bangalore water scheme, we think that the necessities of the native inhabitants of the pettah should not be forgotten. —Bangalore Herald, April 23.

A WHALE FOR THE MEDICAL COLLEGE, MADRAS.—Professor Furnell, whilst he was on tour with his Excellency Lord Napier at Negapatam, saw the vertebrae of a whale, and heard from Mr. Cadell, the collector, that other ten vertebrae and two lower jaw bones of the animal had been found. As these specimens would be a valuable addition to the comparative anatomy museum, Dr. Furnell requested the Principal of the Medical College to solicit Government to permit them to be placed in the museum, and to sanction the necessary outlay for their conveyance to Madras. The Government have complied with the suggestion.

ARTISTIC BUTCHERY IN THE MOFUSSIL.—A butcher had a cow to kill, and as usual he wished to know what parts the several residents might be pleased to order. Being a man of very few words (in the pen and ink way) our butcher, instead of bringing a list marked with sirloin, rib, &c., simply brought round his cow and marked each sahib's order with chalks of colours on the part selected! The cow that had come out as respectable a looking cow as need be, went home to execution in the garb of a harlequin, a living directory of the neighbourhood. —Madras Times.

THE MADRAS WATER WORKS.—At half-past six on Saturday morning H. E. the Governor, the Hon. R. S. Ellis, Mr. J. C. Loch, Major Bowen, Mr. Lee, Mr. Woolly, and a few other gentlemen assembled near Harris's bridge to test the pipes in connection with the Water Works project. It was found that the water at the 30-inch trunk had a head of 23-53 feet. The water that was drawn was a little cloudy, and had a slight taste of the composition of the pipes, but it seemed to be approved of by the natives who were present. Time, doubtless, will effect a change for the better in the quality of the water, and make it universally liked. We learn that next Wednesday the water will be turned into the pipes leading into the Park, and that the tanks there will be filled. —Madras Athenaeum.

NEW GENERAL POST OFFICE AT MADRAS.—The Consulting Architect to Government has submitted revised plans and an estimate amounting to Rs. 1,92,872 for the new General Post Office. The building was originally designed for a site on the beach, but eventually the site opposite the General Hospital was selected. The change of site necessitated shortening the building. This has been effected by reducing the central hall from 132 to 120 feet, increasing the breadth from fifty to fifty-five feet, and so preserving the same superficial area; with the increase of span, the consulting architect has adopted a different form of roof. In point of style and materials the building will harmonize with the new Central Railway Station. —Madras Times.

A SAFE PLACE OF CONCEALMENT FOR A BRANDY BOTTLE.—In South India numerous spectacles are given by Roman Catholics, especially near large Roman Catholic towns on the Coromandel Coast. We have heard a good deal about these pageants, which certainly, in some instances, might be fitly called Extravaganzas. Wax images, ridiculous as specimens of art, receive the weeping adoration of thousands of natives yearly. There is a capital story told about the reverence which native Roman Catholics pay to even the most absurd of such images. A gentleman several years ago visited a Roman Catholic missionary, and when he arrived at the worthy priest's house he was terribly wearied out, and asked for a little brandy. The priest walked gravely up to a large draped figure of the Blessed Virgin, and from under the folds of her garment produced a bottle, remarking to his visitor that were he to put liquor in any other place his servant would certainly steal it! He therefore was obliged to protect his property under the shadow of so venerable an ægis as a lay-figure's petticoat! —Madras Times.

LAW.—Mr. Tarrant has been nominated by the Chief Justice to act as Clerk of the Crown and Crown Prosecutor during the absence of Mr. Mayne, and the nomination has been confirmed by Government.

THE MARRIAGE BILL.—Last evening, in Patcheappah's Hall, at 5.30 o'clock, a meeting of the Hindu inhabitants of Madras was held, for the purpose of considering the propriety of submitting a memorial to his Grace the Duke of Argyll against the Marriage Bill recently passed in the Imperial Legislative Council, and for discussing and adopting the necessary rules for the conduct of the Madras Native Association. The meeting consisted of about two-hundred persons. The following resolutions were passed at the meeting:—Resolution I.—That a memorial be immediately sent to the Secretary of State against the Marriage Act recently passed by the Imperial Legislative Council, and that a telegraphic message be sent at once to him requesting his suspension of assent to the Act till the receipt of the memorial. Resolution II.—That a sub-committee be formed for the purpose of preparing the said memorial. Resolution III.—That a Sheriff's meeting be convened, for the purpose of adopting the said memorial.—Madras Times, April 24.

GIFTS TO LORD AND LADY NAPIER.—We have had an inspection of a handsomely manufactured solid silver drinking cup, bearing on one side the following inscription:—"Presented to Lady Napier by the teachers and girls of the Civil Orphan Asylum as a token of their deep gratitude." On the opposite side is a sketch of the Asylum itself as it faces the Poonamalle-road. The entire work about the exterior of the cup, while being elaborate, is neat, and is descriptive of the products of the East, consisting of plaitain, jack, cocoa-nut, and nutmeg trees. The inkstand, which is intended for Lord Napier, is a massive and very substantially executed one. Between the ink-holders is a solid silver wafer or stamp-box, on one side of which is a corresponding inscription to the one exhibited on the drinking cup to her Ladyship, and on the reverse is described his Lordship's coat of arms. These specimens of Demetrius's handiwork reflect great credit on the firm of Messrs. Alves and Co., the well known jewellers in Popham's Broadway. The cost of these two articles, we believe, amounts to Rs. 300.—Madras Athenæum.

ROBBERY AT BOLARUM.—An extensive and daring robbery occurred in Bolaram a few nights ago in the house of Major Mayne, Superintending Engineer and Secretary to the Resident P.W.D. The thief or thieves (they are as yet undetected) broke into this gentleman's premises during the night and made away with Rs. 4,000 in cash, all his wife's jewellery, and a number of very valuable Indian shawls, lately purchased in the Berars for presentation in England. One would think that it would not be difficult to get to the bottom of such a robbery, as from its nature no stranger could have committed it; but then I am afraid our comparatively raw police are sadly deficient in the detective element, although it ought not to be so, as there is plenty of opportunity about here of exercising this talent. Only a fortnight ago an aged Brahmin was found brutally murdered on the Hoossain Saugor Tank Bund; his tongue had been torn out, and he was otherwise horribly mutilated. The motive which led to the committal of the foul deed is not yet known. Some suspected persons have been taken into custody, and the case is under the investigation of the police.—Madras Times Correspondent.

THE CHIEF OF VINCHUR'S CLOCK.—It will be in the recollection of our readers that his Highness the Chief of Vinchur gave a clock to Poona in honour of his Highness the Duke of Edinburgh's visit. It was arranged at the time that it should be fixed in the Boodwar Palace building. The clock is now almost set up, and, as the hands have been placed, we believe that it will be in full working order by the end of this week. The place chosen for the erection of the clock is a very conspicuous one, and it will be a great boon to the city. The Chief of Vinchur deserves the hearty thanks of the people of Poona for his liberality. Let every one show him that his gift has helped to make them more punctual to his engagements.—Deccan Herald, April 22.

JUDGE MANOCKJEE CURSETJEE.—We hear that Mr. Manockjee Cursetjee, second judge of the Small Cause Court, has forwarded an application to Government, praying that he might be allowed to remain on the Bench for a year or two more, as in his opinion he is mentally and physically quite able to perform the duties of his office.

THE RESULT OF THE SERIOUS CHARGES AGAINST AN ATTORNEY OF THE HIGH COURT.—At the High Court on Thursday, Mr. Edward Elliott, who was ordered to answer certain charges affecting his character as an attorney, did not appear, and Chief-Justice Westropp, after detailing the delinquencies of which Mr. Elliott had been guilty, ordered Mr. Elliott's name to be struck off the list of attorneys of the High Court, and remarked that during his experience at the Supreme Court and the High Court no attorney had been struck off the roll except on his own application or at his own desire.

WIDOW OF MEER MAHOMED KHAN.—On the recommendation of the Bombay Government, the Government of India has accorded its sanction to (1) the continuance for life, under certain limitations, to the widow of his Highness the late Meer Mahomed Khan, of Talpoor, of the estate situated on the banks of the river Indus, granted to the late Meer under a sunnud No. 6, dated 2nd June, 1863; and (2) to the payment to her of an allowance of Rs. 210 per mensem for repairs to buildings, lighting of mosques, and maintenance of pleasure-grounds.—Indian Daily News.

AN "INTERESTING EVENT" IN A RAILWAY CARRIAGE.—A Bohosawul correspondent of the Deccan Herald writes:—"A rather surprising incident occurred here the other night, a no less startling event than an accouchement in a third class carriage. It seems that a few minutes before the train had started an unfortunate native woman was delivered of a child, and no one would have been a bit the wiser had not the other native women in the carriage created a shindy which attracted the attention of the station master, who, with that rare humanity which characterises the European railway official in India, would have her out volens volens; the distracted husband appealed. No go. Out she must come, and she did."

THE MAYO MEMORIAL AND THE CIVIL SERVICE.

A preliminary meeting was held at the Admiralty, Somerset House, on Wednesday evening last, in the room of Mr. Willis, Deputy Comptroller of Navy Pay, for the purpose of constituting a committee to take the necessary steps for promoting the presentation of a contribution from the Civil Service in aid of the Mayo Memorial Fund. Many of the gentlemen named in the following list were present, and the remainder have intimated their willingness to act, and it is hoped that in a few days the committee will be rendered complete by the addition of gentlemen from the departments not at present represented on it, but which have been communicated with, though at too late a period to allow of a definitive selection being received from them. The committee, as now constituted, consists of the following gentlemen:—

Admiralty.—H. Ancell, C. J. Cox, E. H. Hay, W. Willis, T. Wolley.
 Audit Office.—F. A. Hawker.
 Colonial Office.—W. Robinson.
 Commissioner of Works.—G. E. Goodyear.
 Customs.—A. Baker, H. C. Brown, H. W. Dobell, J. E. Horan, S. Seldon, J. Smith.

 Post Office.—T. W. Angell, W. H. Ashurst, T. Boucher, G. Chetwynd, F. I. Scudamore, c.b., A. C. Thompson.
 Registrar-General's.—W. Clode, Dr. W. Farr, F.R.S.
 War Office.—R. Thompson, W. H. White.
 Woods and Forests.—J. F. Redgrave.

The meeting on Wednesday may be described as almost purely formal in its character. The chair was occupied by Mr. Willis, who, on rising, referred to the object for which the meeting was held.

After a formal motion for the constitution of the committee had been duly carried, and, upon the motion of Mr. A. C. Thompson, seconded by Mr. Hawker, a resolution had been carried requesting Mr. F. I. Scudamore, c.b., to accept the post of chairman, Lord Henniker entered the room.

After a few moments' conversation with Mr. Willis, his Lordship gave the meeting an account of what the general committee was doing. It was the desire, he pointed out, of the late Lord Mayo to build a house at Palmerstown, and this wish the committee were desirous of carrying out, as well as of complying with another desire of the late Earl's, the purchase of about 800 acres of the adjoining estate of Cardiffstown. In addition to this the committee proposed that a bust of Lord Mayo should be placed in Westminster Abbey; but there was some slight difficulty in carrying this proposal into execution, in consequence of there being no good likeness of the late Governor-General of India. In carrying out these objects the general committee would be happy to co-operate in every way with the Civil Service Committee.

Mr. Willis thanked Lord Henniker in the name of the meeting for his courtesy in attending, and his Lordship then retired.

It was then proposed that a sub-committee should be elected; and after a short discussion, the following gentlemen were chosen and consented to act:—Messrs. Cox, Hawker, Robinson, Seldon, Cousins, Chetwynd, Clode, and R. Thompson. It will be seen that these represent most of the principal offices, and it is hoped that a gentleman from the Treasury will be added to the list in the course of a day or two.

Mr. W. Turley Mainprize, of the Admiralty, and Mr. G. W. Bennett, of the Customs, were then appointed joint honorary secretaries; and after a slight discussion as to the mode in which subscriptions should be collected, Mr. Hawker, of the Audit Office, was unanimously appointed treasurer.

An arrangement was made for the sub-committee to hold its first meeting on Tuesday next; and the proceedings terminated with the usual vote of thanks to the chairman.

THE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN FINANCE.

On Friday, the 10th inst., Messrs. Harrison and Gay's examination was resumed, touching the police and marine establishments. Nothing materially important was elicited with regard to the police system. It appeared that throughout India there is a large force of semi-military and armed native police. There is now also a railway police-force, for which the railway companies are charged three-fourths the cost, and Government the other one-fourth. The police acts specifically on Dacoitism, and probably has contributed to the now almost complete extinction of Thuggism. The entire police-force is under the management of the Government. It does not appear to be an overpaid body. The European commissioners, superintendents, and inspectors are moderately-paid officials. Bengal pays, in comparison with the other Presidencies, for more police covering a given area; owing to the fact that there is a large establishment of revenue police-officers, the collectorates or districts being more numerous subdivided in Bengal than in Madras or Bombay, and to each collectorate there is a police establishment for the protection of the revenue. It had once been under consideration to fortify the police stations of the Presidencies, &c., but the idea has been abandoned. The whole police system of India went under revision in 1861, much to the benefit (it appeared) of the political, social, and commercial interests of the country.

The next subject taken up was the cost of education in all India, and, although nothing anomalous in the system was proved, yet some interesting information was given relating to the growth of popular education in India.

The cost of the educational establishment has risen from £207,818 for all India in 1856-7 to £624,690 in 1870-71. The charges for universities was £10,700 in 1870, being the aggregate charge for the three universities of Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay, all of which have been established since 1857. These universities are purely examining bodies. The Calcutta University costs £4,587, the greater part of which sum is paid to examiners. The return is almost equivalent to the expenditure; it is received in the shape of fees levied on the students of the colleges. In the other presidencies the universities are not so productive. The Madras College costs £3,369, of which about half is recouped from students' and candidates' fees. The Bombay University costs about as much as the Calcutta one, but its receipts did not appear. On the superintendence of the collegiate establishments the expenditure was not particularly heavy, the amount in 1870-71 was nearly £131,000. The expenditure had doubled in fifteen years. The increase attested the advance of education all over India. In Oude, where there was no Government educational establishment previous to the mutiny, there is now an expenditure of upwards of £6,000. It includes the cost of salaries of one director of public instruction, two inspectors, and ten deputy-inspectors. The average salary of a chief superintendent or director is £3,000; that is the salary of the chief instructor of the Calcutta University. The provinces which have most benefited from State education were Oude, the Central Provinces, Bengal, and the North-West Provinces. The outlay on colleges and schools may be calculated or ascertained by reference to the subjoined figures. Bengal, nine Government colleges (cost not stated); North-West Provinces, four colleges, annual cost, £8,946. Bombay, 1856, fourteen colleges or English high-class schools; 1870, twelve high-class English schools, forty-six middle-class English schools, and 110 lower-class schools. The expenditure in the higher class schools for this presidency in 1856 was £56,559, and in 1870 £64,568; the increase of cost showed the increase in the number of the schools. Bengal has now 142 higher-class English schools. Much was said in the course of the inquiry into education on the subject of "grants in aid." This was a popular way of the Government assisting schools in India, native, municipal, and missionary.

Grants in aid had been largely increased in the last few days. The advance in education in many districts depends upon the amount the Government grants in aid. The grants are more in favour of Madras than any other presidency. A local cess for education was recently introduced into the Bombay provinces, but it is, as we understood, an unpopular tax, not calculated to produce the best educational results. The upper classes of the people of India are disposed to join the Government in educating by means of the higher-class schools; English or vernacular. But it is the people in the mass who avail themselves of State education, because it is free.

The next subject investigated was the Ecclesiastical Establishment. Nothing came out showing unnecessary charges or extravagance. But the ecclesiastical system limits the soldiery and Europeans of the Indian station towns to a State Church, when many would prefer sectarian teaching. As it is, however, there are Roman Catholic and Presbyterian and Protestant ministers employed on the voluntary principle. Adjourned over the Whitsuntide holidays to Tuesday, May 28.

THE KUKA EXECUTIONS.

The following important letter appeared in the Times of Tuesday last:—

"1, Clarendon-road, South Kensington, W.

"My dear Mr. Kinnaird,—I have learnt with deep regret the decision passed by the Government of India in regard to Mr. Forsyth and Mr. Cowan—removing the former from the Punjab to another province, and dismissing the latter from the service.

"It is not for me to criticise the acts of the Government of India, who are in possession of more information than we possess here, and have doubtless conscientiously decided in accordance with what they consider to be the interests of the Government and the country; but, as the matter is one in regard to which wide differences of opinion do and will exist, while it is one fraught in my opinion with the most important issues, I do not hesitate to express my opinion, as I have been asked to do so.

"My belief, then, is, that the action of Government is calculated to produce very injurious results as regards both the officers of Government and the people of the Punjab. As regards the former, all the information that reaches me tends to prove that a severe blow has been given to all chance of vigorous or independent action in future, when emergencies may arise. The whole service appears to have been astonished and appalled by the mode in which the officers have been dealt with, and, unless some decided action be taken to show that public opinion does not approve the measure dealt out to them, I fear the mischief will prove irreparable. When mysterious events fraught with danger occur, a panic almost invariably follows, quite unreasonable in its extent, and sometimes in its character. But I fear the British public do not as yet at all apprehend how critical is our position in India. When the Mutinies of 1857 occurred and took us, it may be said, quite by surprise, the warnings of sagacious men like Sir Henry Lawrence, General Jacob, and others remaining unheeded, we had a sample of the inflammable material with which we have to deal in that grand and marvellous country; and if the next outbreak be on the part of the people, led by fanatics like the Kookas, it will be even more terrible. That there is a vast amount of discontent spreading from year to year, owing to the unsympathising character of our Administration, and the absence of all really effective endeavours to ascertain the feelings and wants of the native community, or to give them a voice in the regulation of their affairs, none can possibly doubt who knows anything of the people, or is in the habit of going among them; and if, when overt, unprovoked outrages occur, our officers are deterred from independent and vigorous action, the most disastrous results may be looked for.

"The evil results are likely in this case, I think, to be aggravated by a regard to the character and circumstances of the two officers who have suffered. Mr. Cowan, though by no means a brilliant man, is a most painstaking and conscientious one, as well as a man of benevolent disposition, as spontaneously testified in the columns of the Times by his former superior, Mr. Ford; and as he is a married man with a family, and is a member of the Uncovenanted Service, he has nothing whatever to fall back upon, and must be utterly ruined, unless he be helped in some way. Mr. Forsyth, on the other hand, is one of our most distinguished officers. He is not a man of impulse, but cool, collected, and courageous, and when deputed to the Court of St. Petersburg, on a very delicate mission, he earned the highest commendation from Lord Clarendon for the tact and judgment he evinced. He had been encouraged in every way by Lord Mayo to look for advancement. But all this appears to be at an end, and he has been practically disgraced in the eyes of the whole European and native public by being removed from the Punjab to another province.

"So much for the effect upon our own officers. As regards our native subjects and feudatories, the effect will, I fear, be, if possible, even worse. I understand that a feeling in favour of the action taken by our officers on the occurrence of the outbreak has been virtually unanimous throughout the native community, or such part of it as is competent to express an opinion on the subject. I believe that on learning the decisions of Government exceeding surprise must have been created in the minds of the loyal, while all fanatics and disloyally inclined persons must, without doubt, be emboldened and encouraged. And what is perhaps of even more importance to us, the native chiefs who have gallantly come forward to help us—more especially the Maharaja of Puttiala—cannot but feel chagrined and even offended at the result. I annex some extracts on this subject from letters addressed to a member of his household by a Government officer in the Punjab, whom I believe to be better acquainted with the language and feelings of the people than any other single officer; and for the future the feeling of our feudatories when called on to assist our officers must naturally be one of uncertainty whether their action on critical occasions will prove acceptable to Government.

"I do not pretend to judge whether the execution of the Kookas was or was not, under the circumstances, the most judicious course to adopt; but when it has been deliberately adopted by conscientious, painstaking men, with the hearty approval of all on the spot, the policy of visiting it with condign punishment is a very different question. And if the Government by their decision have acted, as I believe they have acted, in entire opposition to the opinions of the Punjab community, European and native, they have, in my opinion, incurred a very serious responsibility—a grave view of the subject, which cannot, I think, be materially affected by any further information that the Indian Government can send us.

"When the entire correspondence which has passed in India is published all will, of course, be in a much better position than at present for forming a complete and decided judgment on all points. That correspondence must, I presume, be shortly received. But whether it is or is not expedient to wait for this is a point on which you must be the judge.

"One more remark only I would add—viz., that to compare the case of India with that of Jamaica or any country similarly situated must be futile. The issues in the two cases are wholly dissimilar, and that may very well be necessary for our safety in India which would be unreasonably severe in a place where the same dangers cannot threaten us, and where we can without detriment act on the same principles which should guide us in dealing with our own countrymen.

"I remain, My dear Mr. Kinnaird, yours very sincerely.

"May 11."

"D. F. McLEOD.

EXTRACTS OF LETTERS FROM INDIA.

"No decision has yet been come to by the Government of India regarding Forsyth's and Cowan's proceedings, but public opinion here has quite come round in their favour, accepting the necessity of all that was done. Every effort should be made at home at once to prevent a wrong judgment being passed. While at Puttiala for the three days' thanksgiving fête I had many opportunities of talking to the Maharajah. He assured me we shall yet rue Mr. Cowan's suspension, which he called a 'political blunder.' He said Lord Mayo's (not the Punjab) Government was first responsible; that had it not been for Cowan's spirited action we should have had a very serious affair to deal with; that we imagine these Kookas have hidden their heads, whereas in reality they are at least 100,000 strong, and this he had the best reason for believing. After then making some remarks on the recent assassination by Mahomedans, he went on to speak of the disaffected generally. They would now work, he said, 'on the Fenian plan,' using these words with much emphasis, and saying, 'Many European lives will be sacrificed. Your Government should be most vigilant in suppressing with sharp and decisive action every hostile movement, or we should never get out of this mess caused by one act of Government of India—viz., the punishment of Mr. Cowan for doing his duty to his country.' He said all this when we were alone together, confidentially, and I think it note-worthy in the extreme. This chief is himself a Sikh chief, and may be said to be the most influential of them all. On another occasion he said, 'You English fancy these Kookas are a contemptible lot. I believe that there are at least 100,000 of them scattered about—quite enough to give you a lot of trouble. But they will conceal from you for some time that they are Kookas. You must not allow them to lift up their heads.' I am deeply interested in the event, and long to see Government get out of the mess they have got themselves into. I want everyone at home to know the truth, and what is said and thought here. It ought to open the eyes of those at home to the deep discontent there is, and enable them to judge whether this is a time for hesitating to support the action of officers. Do not hesitate to assure — that the Kooka outbreak is not the contemptible thing they imagine, but only a beginning."

Miscellaneous.

EXPORT OF BULLION.—The following are the latest exports of Bullion to India per the steamers of the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company:—From Southampton, per Delta, May 9, Gold, Bombay, £6,000; Ceylon, £60; Madras, £783. The prices of silver have ranged as follows:—Bar, 5s. 0½d. per oz. standard; Mexican dollars: Old, 5s. 2d., per oz.; new, 4s. 11½d. per oz.; 5 francs, 4s. 11d. per oz.

APPEAL FROM INDIA.—Wise v. Rajendro Coombar Roy.—This was the fifth day of hearing of this appeal from Bengal, which involved a boundary question as to land thrown up by the river Puddah, one of the mouths of the Ganges. Sir J. Colville, on the conclusion of the long argument, conferred with their lordships, and afterwards proceeded to give a lengthened judgment. He reviewed the facts, and said their lordships would advise her Majesty that the appeal be allowed, and that the judgment of the High Court be reversed.

BILLS ON INDIA.—Tenders for £600,000 in bills on India were received on Wednesday, the 15th inst., at the Bank of England. The amounts allotted were—to Calcutta, £528,800; to Bombay, £58,000; and to Madras, £13,200. The minimum price was fixed at 1s. 10½d. on all the Presidencies. Tenders on Calcutta and Madras, at 1s. 10½d. will receive about 56 per cent.; and on Bombay at that price in full. The average rate on Calcutta was 1s. 10½d., on Bombay, 1s. 10½d., and on Madras 1s. 10½d.

MILITARY.—From what we hear Dr. Mouat may retire, but his papers are not in. Lieutenant-General C. Hamilton, c.b., Bengal Infantry, becomes a General, and Major-General Sir N. B. Chamberlain, k.c.b., k.c.s.l., Bengal Infantry, a Lieutenant-General, with seniority from May 16, consequent upon the death of General J. Garnault, Madras Infantry, who died at Torquay on Wednesday.—Colonel H. R. Gall, c.b., half-pay, late 14th Hussars, has been appointed Assistant Quartermaster-General of the eastern district, vice Colonel Mayne, deceased. Colonel Gall served with the 14th Hussars throughout the Punjab Campaign, and commanded the left wing of the regiment in the field from June 9, 1857, to June 15, 1858, during the Indian Mutiny. He has been repeatedly mentioned in despatches for his highly meritorious conduct in face of the enemy, and in recognition of his services was recently made a Queen's Aide-de-Camp.—Army and Navy Gazette.

FUNERAL OF SIR JOHN PENNEFATHER.—The remains of this gallant officer were interred in Brompton Cemetery on Wednesday last. The first part of the funeral service took place in the chapel of Chelsea Hospital, beneath the many old banners and military trophies collected there. The service was most impressive and the chapel crowded. Amongst those who attended to pay respect to the memory and valour of the deceased officer were General Sir Richard Airey, c.b. (the Adjutant-General), General Sir John Bloomfield, R.A., Lieutenant-General Sir Arthur J. Laurence, k.c.b., Major-General W. C. E. Napier, Major-General Charles Ellice, c.b. Pennefather, Major R. P. Pennefather, Mr. Artemis Lord, Mr. John Carr, Mr. John Hassard, Mr. Frederick Bateman, Sir John Bove, Major Bogle, v.o., &c., &c. The officers of the 22nd Regiment mustered in strong force, and escorted the remains of their colonel not only to the chapel, but also to the grave. It is to be regretted, for the sake of Lady Pennefather, that Sir John had only enjoyed the office of Governor of Chelsea Hospital for eighteen months. His death was not expected until three days before he expired. He had reached his seventy-third year.

DELHI SORES.—It has now been discovered that the Delhi or Lahore or Mooltan sore is contagious. It consists of specific germs or cells of an animal nature, which multiply in and eat away the skin. Unless their life is destroyed the wound will not get better. It follows from this that the remedy must be of some sharp killing character such as some acid. Of late years carbolic acid has been used largely in various forms. Dr. Fleming however, the writer in the Gazette, recommends that nitric acid be used. He says that one or at most two applications of this acid are sufficient to destroy the cells and prepare the spot for healing, in the ordinary way. This is the first principle; the morbid growth must be destroyed, or else all other applications are in vain. The other remedy he recommends is potassa fusa, to be applied freely. With reference to the prevention of these sores (a most important point with mothers) some useful hints are given. It is not uncommon to see dogs having a peculiar ulceration on the soft part of the nose, which the owners can make nothing of. Sometimes it seems to heal, but if the dog runs through wheat field or jungle it comes out with the skin again knocked off. It is a Delhi sore, and the dog rubbing its nose on your hand or on a child's face can communicate the contagion.

THE NIZAM'S RAILWAY.—It is whispered about that there is a slight hitch between our Government and the Nizam's. It appears that the shares of the Nizam's State Railway have lately been alarmingly depreciated: so much so, that they are or lately were selling at a discount of 20 per cent.; and as grave fears were entertained that they would still further fall, the Nizam's Government resolved on appointing a controller to look after the Railway finance. To this appointment the Minister nominated Mr. Keay, late of the Bengal Bank, and who had been its agent at Secunderabad for some years. This gentleman is reputed to be an able financier, and well posted up in all that pertains to the monetary affairs of Hyderabad. But it is said that the Resident has, on behalf of the Supreme Government, taken exception to his appointment, and that there has been occasion to rake up an old treaty of 1798 between the late Company and the Nizam, in a clause of which the latter is forbidden to employ any Frenchman or any other European without first obtaining the sanction of the Supreme Government. And here the matter rests, pending a reply to a representation which has been made to Calcutta.—Madras Times.

THE HISTORY OF THE BRITISH EMPIRE IN INDIA.

FROM THE
APPOINTMENT OF LORD HARDINGE
TO THE
COMPANY.

BY
LIONEL JAMES TROTTER,
Late of the 2nd Bengal Fusiliers.

The first volume of this History embraces the period from Lord Hardinge's appointment in 1814 to the retirement of the Marquis of Dalhousie in 1856.

The second volume commences with the arrival of Lord Canning in India in 1856, and closes with his lordship's death in 1862. This being the most eventful period in the annals of the East India Company, including the Mutiny, great pains have been taken in its narration.

"Captain Trotter has done good service in providing the public with a sequel to a standard work. And in every way his performance is worthy to take rank with that of his predecessor. The thoroughly satisfactory manner in which the task has been performed is greatly to the author's credit. We take our leave of the work, congratulating its author upon having produced an addition to the 'History of India' at once permanent in purpose and popular in execution; acceptable in every way to the wants of the public, and especially adapted for the enlightenment of young members of the local service, to whom the modern annals of the country which they help to administer are of far more importance than the history of remote periods having little or no relation to the present day."—Standard.

"Both the plan and execution of the work are deserving of high praise. Full of interest and animation, and narrates with clearness and brevity all that took place during the period of which it treats. The second volume of Mr. Trotter's history possesses the same merits by which the first was distinguished. It is written with great animation, and often with considerable graphic power. It tells its story with perspicuity and without needless or tiresome digressions. It avoids as far as possible that controversial vein into which Indian politicians and historians are alike prone to fall, and it is as impartial as any work is likely to be which deals with times so near our own. The narrative of the spirit-stirring events of the mutiny will of course have the greatest attraction for most readers, and it is in truth the best, as it is the principal part of the present volume. It appears to us that Mr. Trotter has been eminently successful in his treatment of a very exciting and interesting period of recent history."—London Review.

"The volume is full of interesting matter, comprising every event of importance during the exciting period of the rebellion, told in a concise, straightforward, and impartial manner, unincumbered by those copious extracts from documentary evidence which often serve no other purpose than increasing the bulk without adding to the usefulness of a work of this description."—Observer.

"Captain Trotter's reflections are few. . . . He has his own views, though he does not force them upon us in detail. . . . All this proves him to be far above the narrowness of the average Anglo-Indian. He speaks out boldly, too, in defence of Lord Gough. . . . A word as to our author's descriptive powers; they are such as his lighter writings would lead us to expect. . . . Whatever he has to tell Captain Trotter tells it in an animated and picturesque style. The night on the field at Ferozeshahur is admirably painted; so is the grand success of Goojat. The disarming of the veterans of the Khalsa . . . is a striking scene. Captain Trotter's book opens up many other interesting questions; it is full of notices of social changes; it points out the specially unfortunate way in which the annexation of Oudh was managed."—Fortnightly Review.

"Here we have before us the first volume of an eminently readable history. . . . The arrangement of the matter, the style, and, above all, the spirit which pervades his pages, are worthy of great commendation. . . . The second volume concludes with a masterly criticism on Lord Dalhousie's character and services."—Calcutta Englishman.

"We cannot say that he has dealt unjustly by Lord Canning's memory. . . . A well-considered volume, in which the heartiest acknowledgments are paid to Lord Canning for his temperate wisdom at a time when there was no man more abused than he. . . . He writes thoughtfully, yet with a soldier's sense of the stir of a brisk military narrative. His history of this great struggle is full and impartial. . . . We need not follow him through his vigorous rehearsal of the well-known incidents. It forms a very lucid history, the several parts being well planned and well grouped, and no important point being omitted or misrepresented."—Examiner.

MORSON'S EFFECTUAL REMEDIES

Are Sold by Chemists and Druggists throughout the World.

PEPSINE.—The popular and professional medicine for Indigestion is Morson's Pepsine, the active principle of the gastric juice. In Powder, Lozenges, Globules, and as Wine.

CHLORODYNE has now obtained such universal celebrity it can scarcely be considered a speciality, its composition being known to most European practitioners. The combination of Chloroform quickly relieves the pain and spasms of Cholera, Diarrhoea, Dysentery, and in fact all acute and nervous pains, and chronic Coughs; frequently small doses will produce this beneficial result. Many of the Chlorodynes of commerce are not of uniform strength; this has induced Morson and Son to compound their preparation. Sold in ½-oz., 1, and 2-oz. bottles.

GELATINE.—The purest preparation of this nutritious agent extant is Morson's.

PEPTIC FOOD for Invalids and Infants, digestible, nutritious, and palatable. Sold in ½-lb. and 1-lb.

All the above are carefully packed and shipped to orders, which must be made payable in England.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.

WEAKNESS and DEBILITY.—Unless the blood be kept in a pure state the constitution must be weakened and disease supervene. These wonderful Pills possess the power of neutralising and removing all contaminations of the blood and system generally. They quietly but certainly overcome all obstructions tending to produce ill health, and institute regular actions in organs that are faulty from derangement or debility. The dyspeptic, weak, and nervous may rely upon these Pills as their best friends and comforters. They improve the appetite, and thoroughly invigorate the digestive apparatus.
Holloway's Pills have long been known to be the surest preventives of liver complaints, dreadful dropsies, spasms, colic, constipation, and many other diseases always hovering round the feeble and infirm.

Summary and Review.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail are—from Bombay, May 6; Agra and Madras, May 4; Calcutta, May 3.

THE Bombay papers report a gay and busy week in that Presidency. On Monday, the 29th April, Lord Northbrook unveiled the statue of the Queen, which has been set up on the Esplanade of Bombay under a richly carved marble canopy, at the cost of the late Gaikwar. His Lordship had many pretty things to say about the "palatial" public offices and generally handsome architecture of the city which first received him on Indian ground. But his hearers were still better pleased with the earnest-sounding tone in which he compared the natural capabilities of Bombay Harbour with its present state of unfitness for the traffic already seeking to disgorge itself therein. A visit the same evening to the Alexandra Institution for English Girls was followed by his departure next morning for Calcutta, where he arrived on the evening of Friday, May 3, and took his seat as Viceroy under the usual salute. His welcome there and at the several halting-places on his way appears to have been all that he could desire. Travelling across India at such a time of year must have been a pretty hard trial for a middle-aged new-comer; but for part of the way his sufferings were lightened by the cooling processes which Mr. Sanders has applied to the carriages of the Great Indian Peninsular line. His Lordship's subsequent journey to Simlah will have tried him even more severely.

THE day of his departure from Bombay was marked by a splendid entertainment given by the citizens to some fourteen hundred seamen and marines of the Flying Squadron, and by a dinner given that evening to the officers of the squadron by the Bombay Club. On Wednesday the new Governor, Sir Philip Wodehouse, landed in state at Bombay, and was present later in the day during the investiture of Sir Jamsetjee Jeejeebhoy, Mr. Munguldass Nathoooboy, and Mr. Lionel Ashburner with the Companionship of the Star of India, at the hands of the retiring Governor, Sir S. Fitzgerald. The next day the new Governor looked on at the opening of the new Victoria and Albert Museum by Sir Seymour, a ceremony which included the unveiling of a statue to the late Prince Consort. On Friday Sir S. Fitzgerald laid the first stone of the Elphinstone High School buildings, Sir Philip Wodehouse again looking on. The chief speakers were Mr. Peile, Director of Public Instruction, who gave an interesting sketch of what has been done for public education in Bombay since the founding of the Elphinstone College, and Sir S. Fitzgerald, who complimented Sir Albert Sassoon on his share in building a new home for the High School. The gay but rather tiring round of feasting and public ceremonial closed on Saturday with the presentation of an address to Sir Seymour by the Dons of the Bombay University, in admiring testimony to his services as Chancellor of the University; followed up by a garden party, at which Mrs. Fitzgerald received her friends in India for the last time.

The new buildings for the High School are to be large and handsome, with a frontage of four to five hundred feet, on one of the finest sites of the whole Esplanade. To the probable cost of £60,000, Sir Albert Sassoon has contributed as much as £15,000. The statue of Prince Albert in the Victoria Museum, a work of Mr. Noble's, was presented to the city by the late Mr. David Sassoon, at a cost of £3,600. It is about eight feet high, on a pedestal of ten feet.

IN spite of the farewell feasting, Sir S. Fitzgerald does not appear to carry away with him the admiring regrets of very many people in Bombay. If in public he has been loudly complimented on his services in the cause of education, public works, and several other good things, the tone of the Press about him is, on the whole, disparaging. It is allowed that he is "socially popular," but politically, says the Bombay Gazette, "he is not respected by any class of the population, European or native. No Indian Governor in modern times has left less good work to remember him by." In much the same spirit the Times of India speaks of "the coyness and temporising with which the proposal to feast him was first received," and hints at the great difference between fluency of speech and the "grave business" of ruling thirteen millions of people in a province of "high traditions."

FROM the Madras papers we get full details of the dreadful hurricane which burst over the city on the morning of May 2. For some days the wind had been rather high, and had veered round to the north-east, an unusual quarter at that time of year. In spite of warnings given out by the Master Attendant on the evening before, no one seems to have been quite prepared for the outburst of the next morning, a storm, says the Madras Mail, whose like has not been witnessed there for "certainly the last forty years." Nearly all the shipping in the roads was wrecked, including the fine old Hotspur, which was riding out the storm gallantly, when an iron ship, the Armenian, ran into her and set her drifting on shore. Of the nine English vessels wrecked, the Hotspur and the Sir Robert Seppings had most lives on board; but after some hours of fearful suspense and vain efforts to get ropes on board from the shore, nearly all the coolies in the latter and the crew in the former were saved. The Ardbeg was early dashed to pieces against a groyne, and her captain with several of his crew perished without hope of rescue. How many lives in all have been lost, we shall not know before next mail. The native craft in the Roads were utterly destroyed. Many brave things were done or attempted both on board and ashore, and the officers and men of the 21st Fusiliers seem to have been foremost in their efforts to save life, and one of the soldiers was killed by a spar in the midst of those efforts. Two native vessels ran against the Pier and once more broke it. The river Koom and the island were flooded, the chief thoroughfares in Madras blocked up with fallen trees and other wrecks, and many of the gardens and private houses more or less seriously injured.

WE are glad to see that the Rajah of Vizianagram has at last been made a Member of the Viceroy's Legislative Council. If public spirit, enlightened almsgiving, and high intellectual culture recommend a man for such an office, the only wonder is that his Highness was not appointed some years ago.

MR. GEORGE CAMPBELL, the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, may be a shrewd, active, and experienced ruler of men, and some of the reforms he has begun or carried through will no doubt prove to be conspicuous feathers in his official cap. But his Honour also seems to have a knack of ordaining in haste measures of which he afterwards repents at leisure. One fine day for example he struck off the roll of honorary magistrates the names of a number of gentlemen, mostly natives, who were said to have been remiss in the discharge of their magisterial duties. This seems to have caused a considerable outcry, at which we are not much surprised, seeing that the gentlemen thus summarily disposed of were not even invited to explain the reasons of their alleged shortcomings. Scared to all appearance at the sound himself had made, Mr. Campbell was ere long expressing his readiness to reappoint, if they so desired it, any of the magistrates he had just before dismissed. It is not very likely that he will have found many applicants willing to take him at his word, after so glaring an illustration of the principle that punishment should precede trial. To an ordinary person it might have seemed the easier and safer course to hear first what these people had to say for themselves; but Mr. Campbell would rather, we presume, be regarded as an extraordinary person.

WE are sorry to see that Colonel Maxwell's latest trials of bronze guns cast at the Cossipore Foundry have proved little more successful than the previous failures at Woolwich, which led to the substitution of steel and wrought-iron for bronze in the home artillery. It had been fondly hoped that Indian workmen might not have lost the art of manufacturing bronze of the proper toughness, whatever was to be said against the workmen of Woolwich on that score. It appears however that one of the experimental guns lately cast at Cossipore, has burst after little more than a hundred, and another after only eight rounds. Seeing how successful were the first experiments made at Woolwich a few years ago, these results must be very disappointing to those who looked for a great saving from the employment of bronze. One or two failures however should not justify despair in the face of former successes. It may be wise to continue sending out the new steel nine-pounders to India, but it will not be money wasted to continue the experiments with bronze at Cossipore.

WE learn from a recent telegram that Lord Northbrook started from Calcutta for the Hills on the 21st of this month. Meanwhile his Lordship had been addressing a deputation of the Associated Trades of Calcutta in terms which have "created an agreeable and almost unexpected feeling throughout India." He seems to have told his hearers that in finance his aim would be to make "a reasonable amount of income balance the expenditure," and that he "would not lightly make changes affecting the habits of the people." The good effect of these few words is said to have been "surprising." We can but hope that the new Viceroy's mode of translating these words into action will not prove surprising also. With every wish in the world to carry out his seeming pledges, he may find himself so hampered by the traditions of his government and other influences, that the future may continue to run in the same groove as the past.

ACCORDING to the same telegram jungle fever is just now very prevalent in Calcutta and the neighbourhood. Almost every household is said to have been attacked by it. Fortunately for the sufferers, the attacks in question, however severe, are described as "rarely fatal." Jungle fever has not been unknown in Calcutta in former days; but the present epidemic must be something entirely new. Perhaps, instead of jungle fever we ought to read denque fever, a complaint which according to the latest mails from India has been unusually rife in Calcutta and the neighbouring districts.

A CALCUTTA telegram states that the Bank of Bengal has lowered its rate of discount two per cent.

THIS is not the first time that Calcutta has been visited by an epidemic of Dengue Fever, known also as Breakbone Fever, Eruptive Rheumatic Fever, Epidemic Inflammatory Fever of Calcutta, and as the Dandy Fever of the West Indies. During the hot and rainy months of 1824, nearly the whole of Calcutta was attacked by this painful and distressing, but seldom fatal disease. Three years afterwards it spread over the West Indies and the Southern States of North America, and in 1828 the same disease, in a yet more disagreeable form, seems to have troubled Paris also. In Calcutta this year its attacks have generally been very sudden, beginning with violent pains in the joints of hands and feet, wrist, knees, or loins. Headache follows, and a peculiar rash on the face, neck, and palms of hands and feet. Complete loss of appetite, nausea, and retching are accompanied with a fever which lasts three or four days, and often comes back again after a brief remission; the rash also reappearing for a short time. This is followed by great debility and unfitness for mental and bodily work. The neuralgic symptoms appear to be the most obstinate attendants of the disease, which sometimes lasts for two months. The present epidemic is said to have made its first appearance in the cold weather, but to have so increased in virulence during the hot season, which in Bengal begins in March, if not sooner, that few families have escaped its inroads. How it spreads, whether by contagion or in the air, is still an unsettled question. With adults in fair health it appears to be seldom fatal; but babes at the breast and teething children often succumb to its attacks. It is to be hoped that the rains, which are now near at hand, will wash away this strange epidemic, one of the most widespread with which Calcutta has been afflicted for the last fifty years.

AN interesting divorce case has lately been adjudged in the High Court of Madras. Mrs. Green, the petitioner, sued for a divorce from her husband, a member of the Madras Bar, who lately went over to Mahomet, and married a second wife according to Mohammedan rites. Ever since his formal announcement of his change of creed the first wife had ceased to live with him. The evidence showed that he had made public profession of Islam, and afterwards got married to an European lady in a mosque with the usual rites of his new creed. It is pleasant to find that in the ruling of Mr. Justice Holloway legality and common sense were not to be sundered as they too often are. Had there been no open profession of a changed faith, Mrs. Green the first might still, it seems, have been tied for life to her graceless husband. But luckily for her the judge discovered that relief could be granted according to law, when there had been a change of "the profession of Christianity for a profession of some other religion." At the time of his first marriage Mr. Green, he said, "probably professed Christianity, while now, according to the evidence, he professed Mohammedanism." After congratulating the Mussulmans on their acquisition, his Lordship granted a Rule Nisi, with costs, regretting that he had no power to grant anything more.

ACT VI. of 1872, or the Indian Oaths Act, as lately passed through the Supreme Council, allows anyone who so chooses to substitute a simple affirmation for an oath, and empowers the Court to accept from a witness any form of oath which may be held binding by people of his own race or persuasion. If one party to a suit declines to take an oath which the other party has offered to take in company with him, the Court will take note of the offer and the refusal, and of any reason assigned for the latter. Lastly, "No omission to take any oath or to make any solemn or simple affirmation, no substitution of any one for any other of them, and no irregularity whatever in the form in which any one of them is administered, shall invalidate any proceeding or render inadmissible any evidence whatever, in or in respect of which such omission, substitution, or irregularity took place." Here, at any rate, is one sensible piece of legislation, however cumbrously expressed, for which India will owe something to Mr. Fitzjames Stephens.

A HUGE report on cattle-plagues in India has just issued, according to the Friend of India, from the Government Press. Its thousand pages represent the labours of a Commission appointed in 1869, under the presidency of Staff Veterinary Surgeon Hallen. Its contents include an interesting abstract of evidence bearing on the crime of cattle-poisoning, which has of late years been disagreeably rife in various parts of India, more especially perhaps in the districts of Jaunpore, Benares, Ghazipur, Azimgurh, Mirzapore, and Allahabad, all lying together in the south-eastern corner of the North-West Provinces. We remember that some twenty-five years ago Cawnpore bore an evil name for rascality of the same sort, and that officers' horses passing through the station in charge of native grooms sometimes fell a prey to the greed of unscrupulous chamars or leather-dressers, who turned the hides to good account. In the present report however it is bullocks, kine, and buffaloes that suffer most from the same cause. According to Dr. Chevers, in sentencing a man tried at Sholapore in 1846 for poisoning cattle with balls of a white substance sewn up in karbee leaves, the judge spoke of the crime as far from uncommon. In 1851 four chamars were convicted at Sarun of poisoning cattle with aconite for the sake of their hides. In this case the poison was applied by pricking the beasts' heads. Poison-balls of aconite, arsenic, datura, or some other drug are mixed up with the food the cattle eat, or introduced into their bowels in other ways. Sometimes the chamar employs a woman or child to drop poison in the field where cattle are grazing. An immense quantity of arsenic is imported yearly into every Indian port, and for controlling the sale of this poison no Act has yet been enforced except one passed for the Bombay Presidency in 1866. The detection of the crime is made the more difficult by the inability of the police to take any measures concerning it without an express order from the Magistrate. The impunity of the village chamars, who are the chief culprits, is largely increased by their usefulness to the village communities in respect of various functions which they alone can discharge. For the purpose of checking so mischievous a crime it has been suggested that the offence should be directly brought under the Penal Code, that the sale of poisons should be carefully restricted and registered, that the burial of carcases and the destruction of hides should be rigidly enforced, that the sale of hides should always be registered, and heavy penalties exacted for every breach of these rules.

AFTER the generous way in which Sir Donald Macleod has come forward in behalf of Messrs. Cowan and Forsyth, it may seem a little ungracious to impute to him any share in the events which led up to the outbreak of last January. And yet, if all we hear be true, there appears to be some reason for such an imputation. The following extract from the letter of a correspondent whose opinion is worth recording will explain itself:—

The real responsibility for all that has happened lies with Sir Donald Macleod, in whose too paternal reign the Kukas thrived unheeded. It is idle to talk of the police watching them, for I was at Umballa and I know how strongly district officers expressed their opinions about the movement, and how useless their representations were. In Macleod's time Ram Singh was known to be what he has since shown himself through his followers, and yet he was not tried, or checked, or deported. At last, when the steed was well-nigh stolen but for Cowan's hardihood, Ram Singh is actually taken up and sent to Rangoon—the very action taken in 1857 against the King of Delhi. If Sir D. Macleod can show that he was himself thwarted by the Supreme Government, then let the blame be shifted to other shoulders; but otherwise the "Cunctator" was Sir Donald himself, and his Fabian policy allowed the evil to grow and strengthen.

That the writer of these remarks expresses a feeling by no means rare among his countrymen in the Punjab, we readily admit; but whether the charge he makes is well-founded, time will doubtless show. Stronger measures at the outset might have prevented the rising for whose suppression Mr. Cowan has been called to such heavy account. At the same time it is well to remember that no English Governor would have been justified in employing those measures on mere suspicion of something worse to come.

THE MADRAS LUNATIC ASYLUM.—The Inspector-General Indian Medical Department recommended that twenty-eight separate cells be built for the use of the criminal and non-criminal inmates of the Lunatic Asylum at Madras. In consideration of the difficulty of efficiently guarding the violent lunatics at night, and the fact of two deaths from violence having occurred since the occupation of the new premises, the Government have resolved to sanction the additional separated accommodation, recommended by Dr. Balfour, being provided with as little delay as possible. Dr. Balfour's arrangement, by which the female criminal lunatics have been moved to the neighbourhood of the non-criminal female lunatics is, the Government consider, a great improvement, and obviates the necessity of a separate establishment of female watchers and matron. Instructions will be issued in the Department of Public Works to raise the outer wall, and to complete the wall which the Superintendent of the Asylum has commenced to separate the building allotted to female criminal lunatics.—Madras Mail.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LIFE OF SIR HENRY LAWRENCE.—II.

AT Khatmandu Major Lawrence spent two quiet happy years, recruiting his health in a cool climate, amidst noble scenery, and finding for his busy brain a pleasant diversion in writing essays for the Calcutta Review, just then started by his friend Mr. Kaye, the future historian of the Afghan War. In the writing of these Lawrence, who made no pretension to literary skill, was largely indebted to his clever and accomplished wife for the clothing given to his ideas. Always yearning to do good, he was now engaged in shaping out his noble scheme for providing the children of English soldiers with a Home in the Hills, a scheme whose first-fruits ere long appeared in the "Lawrence Asylum" at Sandawar, near Kussoowlie. In spite of many discouragements he kept his scheme before the Indian public, until, with Lord Hardinge's countenance and a lakh of rupees from Goolab Singh, the building of the projected Asylum was begun in 1846. To this work of charity he himself contributed a donation of five thousand and a yearly subscription of one thousand rupees.

At last, in December 1846, the death of Major Broadfoot in the hard-won battle of Ferozeshuhur opened the way for Lawrence's reappearance on the old stage in a part for which no one else was deemed so well fitted. He had brought his wife to the Nepalese frontier on her way home to England for thorough change of air, when an urgent note from Sir. F. Currie besought him to "come quickly" and fill Broadfoot's place as Political Agent for the Punjab. He set off the next day for the scene of labours which were to cover the most important period of his career. He was in time to take part under his good friend Lord Hardinge in the crowning victory of Sobraon. We may note by the way his dissent from the general outcry against Lord Gough's tactics at Ferozeshuhur; the fact being being that the Sikh position "was not to be outflanked, its oblong figure was nearly equally formidable in every direction; and, had Sir Hugh Gough attacked on the northward face, he might have subjected himself to the double fire of Tej Singh in his rear and the works in his front, besides having abandoned the line of communication with his wounded and baggage at Moodkee."

Lord Hardinge's forbearant policy towards the Sikhs found in Lawrence a firm supporter, who would have denounced any scheme for annexing the Punjab as strongly as he denounced the annexation of Sindh. To the last he kicked against Dalhousie's subsequent measures for annexing the country of the Khalsa, and this perhaps it was which ruffled and embittered his correspondence with the ablest and most resolute of Indian Viceroy. With Lord Hardinge however he corresponded then and afterwards on the friendliest terms. His ready tact was soon called into play in suppressing the cow-riots at Lahore, provoked by the rashness or brutality of an English artilleryman, and inflamed by the arts of certain Brahmans whom Lawrence sent off in irons to Ferozepore. A few weeks later he was leading a small force in the heats of May against the refractory governor of Kangra, who surrendered his strong hill-fort betimes at sight of the heavy guns which had been dragged up the opposite hill. A few months later still Lawrence, now made a lieutenant-colonel for past services, was achieving the yet harder task of compelling the Sheikh Imam-ud-din to hand his province of Kashmere over to its future ruler Golab Singh. At the head of a few thousand of the men who had fought against us at Sobraon, he brought the rebel chief to terms, while Lal Singh, then virtual ruler of the Punjab, was checked in his underhand efforts to help the Sheikh by an intimation that if aught befel Colonel Lawrence, his brother John would forthwith place the plotting Rajah in arrest.

This matter settled, Lal Singh himself was formally tried at Lahore for inciting the Sheikh by private orders and by addresses to the troops to hold out in Kashmere. His defence proving in Lawrence's words, "miserably weak," the Court of which Lawrence was a member found him guilty, and without a sign of resentment from any of his colleagues the deposed Vizier of the child Dhuleep Singh was escorted to Ferozepore. The plots of the Queen-Mother were next promptly baffled by the treaty under which Lawrence, with the cheerful consent of the Sikh Chiefs, obtained in all but name the sole mastery under Lord Hardinge of the country once ruled by Runjeet Singh. In the middle of 1847 it was found expedient to banish the plotting Maharanee from the palace and the guardianship of her son. Not long after her removal to Shaikapoora, Lawrence himself started on his homeward journey, worn out with the climate and the hard work, both telling on a frame long weakened by the insidious afterfruits of his Arracan fever.

He left in the Punjab a brilliant staff of Englishmen, not one of whom, from John Lawrence to John Nicholson and James Abbot, but has since left his mark in Indian history; "men"—he wrote—"such as you will seldom see anywhere, but when collected under one administration were worth double and treble the number taken at haphazard." Not all their gifts and energies however could avert the inevitable issues of another collision between the English and the Sikhs. Lawrence had been only a few months at home, had hardly heard of the knighthood at length bestowed upon him at Lord Hardinge's entreaty, when the news reached England of the flame of war rekindled by the murder of Vans Agnew and Anderson at Mooltan. In spite of his broken health Sir Henry burned with impatience to get back to the post which Sir F. Currie was meanwhile keeping warm for him. He seems to have been long incredulous of the extent to which the rebellion had spread among his old friends and clients, and to have hoped that his influence would avert the doom which everyone else saw clearly impending over the Punjab.

By the first February, 1849, he had resumed his old post at Lahore after witnessing, on his way from Mooltan, the splendidly disastrous fight of Chillianwalla. From the first began those differences with Lord Dalhousie which kept these two men apart from each other during the term of Lawrence's connection with the Punjab. It was a kind of incessant struggle between two strong but opposing natures as to the policy which each was bent on pursuing. The one objected to annexation, on which the other had made up his mind from the outset. Dalhousie could ill brook opposition from a subordinate even of Sir Henry's calibre, and Sir Henry fired up at the snubbing he sometimes received from a Viceroy whose polished manners covered a frankness equal to his own, and whose policy he found himself compelled to carry out. His past services assured him the first place in the new Government of the Punjab, but his personal influence was largely counteracted by the formation of a Board of Commissioners, one of whom, his brother John, was almost certain to side with the Governor-General whenever he differed from the President, Sir Henry Lawrence.

Sir Henry's sympathies lay chiefly with the Sikh lords of the soil, with the nobles and gentry of the Punjab, while those of his brother went with the mass of cultivators whom the old aristocracy had oppressed and defrauded at every turn. The former was for recognising and respecting the immunities and privileges of the favoured few, even at the sacrifice of public revenue, while the latter, looking to the need of balancing income and expenditure, was impatient of any usages which exempted the higher classes in the State from their due share of the common burden. If the great freeholders declined to contribute to the public income, they were bound, he thought, to give up lands held on conditions no longer applicable. Sir Henry in short was for holding the Punjab through the goodwill of the old aristocracy, while John preferred to reach the same end by setting the interests of the millions above those of a privileged few.

The points of difference between the brothers did not greatly interfere with the many measures of administrative reform carried out by the new Board. But neither did they tend to promote the happiness of two men who loved each other and were alike impelled by a deep sense of duty and a genuine love of justice. It is amusing to see how both of them in 1852 poured their grievances into the ear of Sir R. Montgomery, who had succeeded Mr. Mansel on the Board. Henry complains that his brother opposes him in every-day questions of patronage or promotion, as if he was either dishonest or incompetent. John on the other hand declares that much extra work had been thrown upon him by his brother's dislike of the new policy, and by his frequent absences on tour. He had often consented against his better judgment to his brother's proposals, but if ever he differed from Henry on any trifle, Henry was sure to take it ill. At last the position became so irksome that both brothers wrote to Lord Dalhousie, each offering to retire from his post. The Viceroy at once seized upon the occasion to do away with the Board, place the civilian John Lawrence at the head of the Punjab Government, and offer Sir Henry the Political Agency of Rajpootana. This to Sir Henry seemed the unkindest cut of all. How deeply he was hurt by a move which took him away from the country he had governed so ably, from the people among whom he had dwelt so long, for whose welfare he had toiled so lovingly, his letters of this and of several years later have left on record. He never quite forgave Lord Dalhousie for preferring the brother whose administrative views most nearly matched his Lordship's own; but as Mr. Merivale has the candour to point out, it could hardly be expected that a Viceroy bent on a certain line of policy would of two agents choose to retain the one who had always shown himself least willing to carry it out. Accordingly in 1853, while John Lawrence became Chief Commissioner of the Punjab, his elder brother took over charge of the neighbouring province of Rajpootana, where, if he stood less prominently before the world, a wide field of quiet usefulness still lay open to him among the eighteen feudatory princes, chiefly of old Rajpoot lineage, who ruled within its borders. For the next four years his life passed in comparative quiet, ruffled by only a few disagreements with the Governor-General, but permanently darkened by the death of his noble wife, who for so many years past had shared his toils and troubles of every kind as completely as his joys and successes. It is a little strange to see him under this great trial turning to a woman, Mrs. Hill, for the solution of those theological knots which reasoning men in all ages have found insoluble. If her answer satisfied him, she must have been more than woman, or he less than man.

In Rajpootana as in the Punjab, Sir Henry won the leaders of the people over to his views chiefly by means of kindly yet frank intercourse and of genuine regard for their feelings and traditions. Still the bodily and mental wear and tear of years had begun to tell upon him, and a manifest tone of languor and listlessness, according to Mr. Merivale, "pervades his later correspondence in Rajpootana." Dalhousie offered him the Residentsip of Lucknow in 1854, but it was not till three years later, under Lord Canning, that Oudh was to witness the last glories of his memorable life. When he did go to Lucknow, in the room of Mr. Coverley Jackson, it was too late to undo the mischief caused or aggravated by the policy of our officials in Oudh after the annexation. The Great Mutiny was already ripe for bursting, and the hero who, in Kaye's words, "carried with him the best of heads and the best of hearts" into his new government, could do little more than show his countrymen how to meet danger boldly and death with Christian calmness. It seems still doubtful how much of the disaster at Chinhut might have been avoided with a little more care, but to him it is mainly owing that the English at Lucknow were saved till the end of June from the storm which howled around them for so many months afterwards. How truly he was loved and honoured by all around him may be gathered from the touching incident quoted in these volumes from Mrs. Harris's narrative. When some soldiers were summoned to aid in carrying his dead body outside, "one of them turned down the sheet which covered Sir Henry's face, and stooping over him kissed his forehead, and then the rest all did the same." He died as he had lived, a true soldier and a highsouled statesman, at the post of duty and of danger, seeking pardon of those he had unwittingly wronged, and happy doubtless in the thought that our Indian empire would be saved by the loyalty of the great province which his own unwearied efforts had made submissive to our rule.

Correspondence.

EUPHRATES VALLEY RAILWAY TERMINI. TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—Having commenced last week with the ferry across our "Silver Streak," I take the liberty of turning the subject "end for end," and so find myself at Bushire; of which place Mr. Ainsworth in his pamphlet writes (to my utter astonishment), "Bushire is also as good a port as Grain." Such an assertion has led me to address you in hope of averting any evil influence it may have upon the evidence of Sir Henry Rawlinson and Mr. Telford Macneil (more recently, Mr. Parkes), who advocate Grain (Koweit) as a terminus for the Euphrates Valley Railway.

As Mr. Ainsworth's expressed desire, in the dedication of his pamphlet to W. P. Andrew, Esq., was to discuss in a fair and impartial spirit the bearing of the evidence laid before the Select Committee of the House of Commons, I hesitate not to mention what is known to me by personal experience and what I have read concerning Bushire. Mr. Ainsworth says hard things of Koweit (pages 62 and 63): "This is indeed a fine deep yet open and healthy bay and roadstead, with a small Arab town inhabited by a well-disposed trading community, but hot and treeless." Again—"Sir Henry Rawlinson preferred Grain on account of sanitary considerations, and it certainly would be infinitely preferable on that account to Kurnah, Bussorah, or Muhammara, but not to Bushire." The italics are mine. Grain is evidently too hot for Mr. Ainsworth; but let me take a portrait of his pet from the "Narrative of a Residence in Kurdistan, &c., by the late C. J. Rich, Esq., Resident at Baghdad;" London, 1836.

Of Bushire, in July, 1821, Mr. Rich writes, "I never felt anything so oppressive in Baghdad as this heavy damp heat, which is quite stifling. The thermometer only ninety-five deg., but it is ninety-one all night; sleep is out of the question. The hot sulphurous blasts of a Baghdad saum are quite refreshing compared with it. I never had the prickly heat so bad before. I am one wound all over my body. It is not the heat I so much complain of as the steam and closeness, which is very relaxing and irritating. My poor Baghdads look like ghosts; and even they are covered with prickly heat. 'Sir,' said Yusuf Aga to-day, 'we can live in fire, but not in a Turkish bath.' He said this upon my remarking that it was quite delightful to hear the Baghdads at last obliged to complain of heat."

If Grain heat beats that, it will astonish me. I was nearly two years in the Persian Gulf in the outset of my naval career; where, in the Honourable East India Company's sloop of war Elphinstone, we rode out a few gales at Bushire and Karrack, and more than once worked in over the flats at the mouth of the Shat-al-Arab. There was not water enough to take us to Bussorah without a steam-tug, so we anchored in the stream near Muhammara. Mosquitoes in myriads at that place—and flies, scarcely less numerous and troublesome by day, and more poisonous in their bite—in July and August, with thermometer by day over a hundred deg., and at night more than ninety deg., have left a very unfavourable impression upon my mind. Perhaps those who are disposed to think well of that place and of Bushire did not visit either at the hottest season. A pleasure to come.

But of the merits or demerits of these places as harbours, I proposed to write; and cannot do better than forward, for your own edification, some scraps of the Persian Gulf chart, showing (on one scale) Koweit, the Khor Abdallah, the entrance of the Shat-al-Arab, Muhammara, Bussorah, and Bushire. I suppose the Select Committee looked into these matters, but it seems to me, after reading Mr. Ainsworth's digest of the evidence, that (as I said in my first letter) the question has not been much looked at from a seaman's point of view.

I reject all idea of adopting Muhammara, or the Khor Abdallah; the first has only a depth of two fathoms on the Bar at low water; the other only three fathoms; therefore, a steamer, arriving at low tide, must waste a lot of time. Imagine one arriving when a Gulf south-easter is blowing! The same holds good with regard to Bushire. Arriving there during a strong shemal, a steamer must wait for high water before she can enter the Inner Roads, or will have plenty of trouble in disembarking mails and passengers upon small steamers outside; for Bushire is not what sailors call a harbour, but an open roadstead. Hear what the "Persian Gulf Pilot" says about winds and weather. "The prevailing wind in the Gulf is undoubtedly the north-wester, called by the natives shemal." "During a shemal, if after rain, the air may be clear and cloudless; but generally the air is so loaded with dust from the Mesopotamian deserts that a dense mist is the result. This makes the navigation very dangerous, as the land cannot be seen; the white surf on the beach is often first seen, while the land is still hidden. In the Shat-al-Arab this is sometimes so much the case that neither bank of the river can be seen." "Some of the heaviest winter shemals set in in fine weather, with no warning except a heavy bank in the N.W. quarter an hour or two previously, which rolls down and gradually obscures all objects, and yet this occurs sometimes without any wind following. A ship should, however, by no means neglect such a warning. Ships should be prepared in winter during a S.E. gale, for a sudden shift to the N.W., especially at night, as the shemal often blows then very strong."

"During the winter months, south-easters, called by the natives shurgi or koss, alternate with north-westerns." "The koss is generally accompanied by thick gloomy weather, with hard squalls and often much rain, sometimes thunder and lightning. The atmosphere is moist, and the barometer generally low." "It seldom blows more than three days, its strength is generally a moderate gale (7), but at times it blows a fresh gale (8); the strongest often lasts only one day."

So much for wind, now for water. "The greatest draught of any vessel brought into the Inner Roads (Bushire) during the war (1857) was nineteen and a-half feet, and this only at springs. The anchorage in the Outer Roads is quite exposed, both to the shemal and shurgi." Mr. Ainsworth speaks of making a landing jetty at Bushire, as if that were all that is needed. But then, another witness says of Alexandretta, "all that would be necessary would be a landing place." In the interest of my brother sailors, who might have to take their large steamers to those two ports, I pronounce Bushire to be in my judgment a very unfit place for the railway terminus. Of Alexandretta, perhaps something may be said at another day.

Al Koweit is a natural deep and nearly land-locked harbour, with no bar and no shoals in the entrance-channel. Jeziret Kubbr, a sandy islet, stands about eight leagues to the S.E., in the line of fifteen fathoms, awaiting a first-class light. The "Pilot" says, "Koweit is one of the most important towns on the Gulf, with 25,000 inhabitants; it possesses more baghlahs than any port in the Gulf which trade to India." "Their vessels bring dates from Bussorah, which they take to India, &c.; and many of the horses sent to India are shipped from this port. From India they bring timber, rice, &c.; they also do much of the carrying trade for other ports in the Gulf."

With regard to the objection that a line from Bussorah to Koweit would not be of use as part of an eventual through-line which must run along the Persian Coast, I would only say that, in a year or two after its adoption as the railway terminus, Koweit will have an enormous trade of its own. Let Persia make her own branch communications by river or road (or both) to Ispahan. Much more might be said of this excellent port, but I have written enough to show my entire agreement with Sir Henry Rawlinson and Mr. Parkes in a preference for Al Koweit. A few lights would make the bed of the Persian Gulf an easier highway for large steamers than the Mediterranean. Remarks on the ports of the latter must be reserved for next week.—

A. D. TAYLOR,

Commander, late Indian Navy.

Hastings, May 16, 1872.

SIR H. LAWRENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—Mr. Merivale has omitted to delineate fully four noble qualities, each of which would have made Sir Henry Lawrence a hero, but all of which combined made him the greatest statesman of the age.

1st. He feared God, and he feared not man.

2ndly. He possessed that wonderful gift of sympathy which caused the plain hard-featured ill-dressed soldier to be beloved by high and low, rich and poor, old and young, Europeans and natives, officers and men, officials and non-officials. His power of sympathetic attraction was devoted to urging all to do their duty to God and their country. He forced shirkers and selfishly-disposed men, and even the meanly ambitious, to work heartily for the good of all. His presence, his words, his letters cheered the zealous and those who had to pass through the valley of the shadow of death. Early in the Mutiny I was astonished to learn how a young lieutenant had induced his discontented sepoys to convey Government treasure from Sultanpore to Lucknow when they might have appropriated it all to themselves, and I have often pictured to myself his ready acquiescence to take those sepoys back to Sultanpore (almost certain death for himself) when he heard from Sir Henry words of hearty commendation, and "My dear boy, when can you start on your return?"

Henry Lawrence's sympathy came very near St. Paul's definition of charity, which rejoiceth in the truth.

3rdly. He possessed the power of reading character which so few Englishmen possess. See what a long line of eminent soldiers, statesmen, and administrators were selected by, and attached themselves to him, though he had not the power of vast patronage wielded by the Marquis of Wellesley, nor the means of unbounded hospitality displayed by Sir Charles Metcalfe. Since my first voyage to India two Generals of the first order have gained for English Generalship world-wide renown; their latent genius was appreciated by Henry Lawrence at a time when they were neglected by Government and unknown to the public. Nicholson so attached himself to Henry Lawrence, that he wished to leave the Punjab, the scene of his rising glory, as soon as his friend was unceremoniously shoved out of it. Havelock would not, I think, have been superseded had Henry Lawrence lived to protest with his wonted fire against such a mode of displaying the national gratitude for a General who had proved in so many desperate conflicts his consummate knowledge of strategy and tactics.

4thly. Henry Lawrence could foresee the effects good or bad of many Imperial measures of vital interest.

Providentially for many years previous to the Mutiny he had been placed over the affairs of the Punjab to prepare our nation to meet that calamity. After the second Sikh war, finding that he could not concur in Lord Dalhousie's measures, he tendered his resignation, but the Governor-General at that time dared not deprive the Punjab of his wise governing hand; he sent his Secretary, Sir Henry Elliot, to induce him to recall his resignation, and it was not until three and a-half years more had elapsed that he fancied that the Government edifice was strong enough to stand without the support of the chief pillar of the State.

Sir Henry had devoted the best part of his life to governing successfully the great Sikh nation, and every one acquainted with the temper, feelings, and wishes of the latter at the time of the Mutiny was well aware that it was under Henry Lawrence and his disciples' influence that they rushed to our standards and enabled us to recover our Indian Empire.

Year after year Sir Henry publicly and privately foretold the ruin of our sepoy army through our insane policy; but we were infatuated, and would not believe him. Up to the present hour his Corps of Guides, his frontier force, is the finest and most reliable portion of our native army.—Your obedient servant,

T.

THE INDIAN CIVIL ENGINEERING COLLEGE, COOPER'S HILL.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—Your last issue contained the complaint of a correspondent regarding the high charge made at the above College, and the difficulty parents with limited incomes found in paying for their sons' education there. Education is, no doubt, an expensive thing, like everything else now-a-days, but the inference I draw from what I have heard as to the comparative cost of the Cooper's Hill College, and other colleges and schools, is directly opposed to that of your correspondent. In the first place I believe the annual charge is not necessarily £150, for under the deferred payment system it may be as low as £90, and I doubt if there be many places in the kingdom where a really good education with board can be got for the same sum. A friend of mine has a son at one of the cheapest of the public schools, and another at Cooper's Hill. He tells me that the nominal charge at the two places is about the same, but that in the one case, in addition to the regular fees, he has to pay extra for his son's private study—that being the name given to a box-like receptacle which he shares with two other boys—for washing, for drawing, for "private tuition" in mathematics (the public tuition in that science being apparently nominal), for use of chemical laboratory, for fencing, and last, but not least, for meat at breakfast, and for extra beer at dinner. For the other son he pays his £90 a-year, and has done with it, for he finds his son's college bills amount to only a few shillings in the term. Altogether he assures me the boy at the middle-class school costs him considerably more than his elder brother, the young man at the college.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

THE FATHER OF A FAMILY.

SIR S. FITZGERALD AT THE BYCULLA CLUB.

The Bombay Gazette holds that the unconcealed satisfaction with which the Governor speaks of his speedy return to the scene of his former successes as a politician points to what has been one great weakness of his administration here. His heart has always been in the House of Commons, not in Bombay; and, when wearied with the arrogance of the Secretary of State or the stubborn stupidity of an impracticable Council, he has longed impatiently to take part once more in the free and eager strife of English politics, in which men at least meet as equals and get such measure of success as may be due to their own merits. The feeling was natural enough, but it would have been better for the reputation of Sir Seymour himself and for the interests of Bombay if this vision of the delights of Parliamentary life had not beguiled him from applying his great abilities to the close study of the no doubt less inviting questions which happen to be of some political importance to India. A Governor of Bombay may with some reason complain that the public is apt to ascribe to him greater power to do good or ill than really belongs to him; and that, controlled on the one hand by the Secretary of State and the Government of India, and checked on the other by his own Council, he has the mortification of finding all his best intentions baulked, and of being blamed for whatever goes amiss, when in truth he is denied much freedom of action. But we cannot help suspecting that it must be in some degree his own fault when a Governor complains of everybody else for thwarting his beneficent plans, and that the display of a little more energy and devotion to business on his part would have cleared away difficulties which he somewhat petulantly declares to be insurmountable and makes no attempt to overcome. His Excellency on Wednesday evening reproached the "public writers," who say that he has been an indolent ruler, with misrepresenting him. Sir Seymour will pardon us for reminding him that we can only judge by results. We know nothing of the regular routine of administrative work prescribed for the Governor; but we can see in almost every department of the State proofs of the utmost negligence on the part of our rulers, and it is needless to remind our readers how the discussion of every question in which the public of this Presidency takes a deep interest has been shelved, till we are sick of waiting and hopeless of reform. Sir Seymour in his speech contented himself, for the most part, with suggesting the line of defence of his conduct which he could take if he liked; but he made one positive statement, claiming to himself the credit of having forced the Government of India to reduce the debt of the Bombay Port Trust by a million sterling, which we cannot allow to be placed on record without adding that, as it was he himself who created the original debt of three millions, we have little to thank him for because he succeeded in cutting it down to two.

THE SENTENCE ON MR. COWAN.

The Englishman remarks that, regarded from a judicial point of view, the verdict of the Government is unimpeachable. But there is the other aspect of the case. Whatever doubts may exist among Europeans as to the character of Mr. Cowan's conduct, it is beyond doubt that—a few educated Bengalis excepted—every native of the country is convinced that Mr. Cowan did the very best thing he could have done. The wholesale execution of these Kukas, taken with arms in their hands, accords as perfectly with Asiatic ideas of justice as with Asiatic ideas of policy. The consequence is that the dismissal of Mr. Cowan will be regarded by the whole country as an act, not of justice, but of supreme folly. It will be accepted as one more proof that, fortune apart, we are unfit to rule. In native eyes the giant who uses not his strength as a giant is a mere pitiful lubber, whom Jack will assuredly some day outwit and demolish. It will also confirm the prevailing impression that the British nation is an ungrateful nation, prodigal of clemency to its enemies, but never sparing its friends. So far from the high motive involved in the verdict being understood or appreciated, it will be attributed, so far as it is not put down to incorrigible wrong-headedness and stupidity, to a base and contemptible fear, that is ready to sacrifice its own kith and kin for the sake of staying off the evil day a little longer. Now, we must say that an order which creates or fosters such impressions as these is an order which even, for justice' sake, a Government should weigh its position well before giving. No administration could well have been in a more awkward or painful position than the dilemma in which Mr. Cowan's unfortunate act placed that of Lord Napier; and while we hesitate to condemn the course taken, we must say it is a course which no less powerful Government could have taken without declaring itself incapable of appreciating the necessities of its position.

DECENTRALISATION.

The Indian Daily News observes that the conviction is gradually gaining ground in most minds which are accustomed to historical study, that some great experiment in federation will at some future day be attempted in India; and most minds, which have adopted this conviction, have no doubt that the experiment is sure to be rewarded with success. Under these circumstances, we cannot help looking with regret at the tendency to retard any such consummation, which is observable in the policy of the Government of India. The scheme of financial decentralisation, on which subordinate administrations congratulate themselves, because it has given them greater freedom than they previously enjoyed, is regarded by the people generally as a mere mockery, because the decentralisation does not extend to the executive administration of the country. Theoretical advantages, which add to the convenience of governors, without adding to the happiness of their subjects, are not likely to be appreciated by the people of any country; and their chances of being appreciated in India; where governors generally do not possess the sympathy of their subjects, are smaller than elsewhere. If it is tolerably certain that decentralisation will some day be forced upon the Government of India, and that its consummation will promote the happiness of the people, we do not see why some step in this direction should not be taken at once. We do not counsel any such precipitancy as would involve leisurely repentance hereafter: but the considerations which we have advanced above, as well as on two previous occasions, clearly point to the desirability and possibility of a gradual decentralisation, which will not only be entirely free from all elements of danger, but will also contribute to the popularity of both the Supreme and the Subordinate Governments. So long as the military power of the State is maintained in strength sufficient to hold the country against all odds, except foreign invasion, no danger to its stability can accrue from any relegation of executive power to Local Governments; while the possible loss of prestige, which might at first result from any abandonment of power, would inevitably be compensated by the gradual extinction of the discontent, the existence of which alone necessitates the retention of a strong Central Government, which is able at any moment to place its finger on any remote corner in the empire. With the Local Governments occupying a position somewhat analogous to that of the House of Commons, and the Supreme Government dictating only the Imperial policy, India would have some chance of growing into a tolerably contented and prosperous nation.

CHOLERA AT BENARES.—Cholera is reported to have broken out amongst the men of the D/8th Royal Artillery at Benares. There have been two or three fatal cases.

STATION TALK.

ASSAM, April 12.—For the past fortnight we have had lots of rain, and on the whole splendid weather for tea. I hear some reports of scarcity of rice in this district. Planters who have not imported rice for years have ordered rice for their coolies this year. If the Assamese would only work hard they would be independent men, even from the cultivation of rice alone, but they prefer sticking to their houses, eating opium, and driving dull care away. They are at present enjoying their Brehoo, their annual Tamasha, dancing and beating drums all over the country at each house in expectation of money, on receipt of which they give a blessing, and often a curse if unsuccessful. As far as the tea season has gone, there has been more tea manufactured to date generally than at the same date last year.

SILCHAR, April 29th.—Capital weather for tea, rain every evening for the last three days. More is wanted, and the little we have had has not been before it is time. The days are just what April days have the reputation of being—alternate cloud and sunshine. Vegetation looks beautifully green. The days are warm, not hot, and the nights quite pleasant enough to dispense with punkhas, and towards morning a razia is not felt to be unpleasant. The Courts appear to be crowded, and a good business seems doing, most of all perhaps in the bribery and corruption way.—Bengal Times Correspondent.

SIMLA, April 22.—I find I was misinformed about Major Parsons coming up here. He has been ordered home on medical certificate, and those members of his family that were here have gone down to Ambala to join him. Mr. Gardener, Deputy Commissioner, was here a few days ago from Kussowlie, but went back the day after he came. It is said that Mr. McNabb is deputed to make a special report on the state of the Ludiana District. He will find everything very quiet just now, for the Kukas are thoroughly cowed, and under strict surveillance. They are not allowed to go from one village to another without passes, and passes are not given without strong necessity being shown. As may be supposed, there have been many recantations from Kukaism to orthodox Sikhism. The church is undergoing alterations, and will be enlarged. A printed card has been nailed on the desk in each pad, stating that this year no seats will be assigned, but collections will be made every Sunday in the mornings and evenings alternately. The collection on the first Sunday of the month will be devoted to the fabric, establishment, and service of the church, including the organist's salary. The other collections will be for the usual charitable purposes. There was a grand marriage procession here a few days ago. The Rana of Dhami went with a great retinue to Koti to bring away his bride. Both these places are small States a few miles from Simla, on opposite sides of the station, so the procession passed through Simla. First came a stout party on a pony with two enormous kettle-drums in front embroidered with yellow and red. Then came a body of about a hundred musketeers, two by two, dressed in cast-off coats of the 104th, and red flannel forage caps. These loaded and fired a volley every hundred yards—at least as well as the local volunteers could have done. Next came some standards, and after them a body of matchlockmen, who loaded in a very primitive style, taking out their powder by handfuls from their canvas bags, and pointing their weapons in all directions; these were not in uniform. Then intervened a body of the great unwashed, who in these mountainous countries are more unwashed than anywhere else. These were evidently intruders, for presently they were seen to yell and fly in all directions, being chased by the next members proper of the procession—to wit, two very small elephants with red and yellow housings. Then came some led horses and horsemen, and among them the Patiala vakil at Simla (a sort of Consul). Last of all came a number of *jampan*s and other conveyances carried by men. Foremost among the occupiers of these was the happy bridegroom, a portly gentleman of some four or five and twenty, in scarlet and gold, with his face covered, as is usual, among native bridegrooms, with a veil of strings of gold thread depending from a crown-like superstructure on his head. I have never seen such a crowd in Simla as turned out to witness this procession. A couple of hours before it passed, the hill sides, along the Mall, were crowded with men, women, and children. They were continually repeating to each other, in tones expressive of intense satisfaction, that the affair cost five thousand rupees. These simple and poor people thought it the height of grandeur, the fact being that in the cities in the plains, the wedding processions of comparatively poor men are far more magnificent. Another landslip has occurred in the bit of road between the two bridges, or rather the sites of the two bridges, below Haripur. This piece of road is at the foot of a wall-like precipice, about 600 or 700 feet high, and not a season passes without the road itself falling, or being blocked up by debris fallen from above. I have often had to dismount from my horse, or descend from my jampan, and walk over this bad bit of road. This landslip has been the cause of the death of four palaes, crushed by falling rocks. While on the subject of roads, I may mention that it is proposed to shorten the present way, by making a new road available for carts from Sabatu to Simla between the new and old roads. This will pass at an equal distance from Haripur on the old road and Kiari Ghât on the new, and will be shorter than either by a few miles, and be more level than the old one. There is a great deal of fever in the station now. Coughs, too, are prevalent. Measles also have shown themselves. I hope the Calcutta people won't bring up the bone-breaking dengue.—Indian Daily News Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

COURT OF ENQUIRY ON MAJOR LLOYD HARRIS.—We learn that the Court of Enquiry that had been assembled to enquire into the case of Major Lloyd Harris concluded their labours on Wednesday, May 1. The result is not as yet known. Colonel Agnew was not called on for his evidence, although he was ordered out from England at a few days' notice for this express purpose.

BETTER LATE THAN NEVER.—The Gazette of India of April 27, 1872, contains the following "Political" order:—"The Right Hon. the Governor-General in Council is pleased to confer upon Munder Singh, of Imjhira, the title of 'Rajah Bahadour,' as a personal distinction, in recognition of the meritorious services performed by him during the mutiny of 1857-58."

PLEADERS IN COURT.—We hear that the application lately made by the Vakeels of the High Court to be allowed to plead on the original side will very shortly be argued before a full bench. Mr. Paul, as the Advocate-General, will represent the Bar, and the Vakeels will be represented by Baboo Unnoda Persaud Bannerjee, the senior Government Pleader. Mr. Woodroffe has also been engaged to appear on behalf of the Mooktears.—Indian Daily News.

THE RESULTS OF THE HARVEST.—Such high expectations had been formed of the harvest just gathered in that the actual result is very disappointing. In fact, for nearly all the districts below Cawnpore the harvest is absolutely below the average, and in some cases much below it. The wheat crop has comparatively failed in Futtehpore, Humeerpore, Mirzapore, Benares, Azimgurh, Bustee, and Goruckpore. Barley also has failed in Humeerpore and Bustee, while gram, peas, and other crops are much below the average in Futtehpore, Humeerpore, and (except as to gram) Allahabad.—Pioneer.

DISCOVERY OF A RUINED CITY.—A report has just reached us that a young engineer, engaged on the survey of the Sirhind Canal, has discovered the ruins of an extensive city. It is about 150 miles south-west of Umballa, in the midst of the desert, where water is only reached at 200 feet below the surface. The water is said to be so brackish that it is almost unfit to drink. We shall try and find out the truth of this report, for, if correct, it opens out one of the most interesting questions of the day as regards change of climate, for from want of water this part of the country is quite uninhabitable.—Messillite.

THE OLD STORY.—A remarkable case of extortion by a native official has recently been brought to light at Humeerpore. One Munzoor Hassan, Deputy Tehsildar, had, in the course of collecting supplies for troops in various villages, demanded much larger quantities than were really required. The villagers objected, and he agreed to reduce his demands on receiving various sums of money for the concession. For this illegal conduct he was removed from his appointment, and put on his trial before Mr. Twigg, Joint-Magistrate of Humeerpore, and sentenced to three years' imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 2,000. Malpractices of this kind are not to be discovered without the greatest difficulty, and the district officers deserve the thanks of the public for providing one more warning for dishonest officials.—Pioneer.

THE INDEPENDENT WAZIRIS.—Mani Khan, the chief of the principal section of the independent Waziris beyond the Bunnoo border, has lately visited Lahore, under singular circumstances. Indian Public Opinion tells us that at a durbar to which all the independent Waziris came at Bunnoo in February, 1871, the Lieutenant-Governor gave to the chief, who was complaining that the grievances of his tribe were never listened to, a scrap of paper on which he wrote in pencil a promise to see and help Mani Khan should he ever present the paper in Lahore. It was armed with this paper that Mani Khan visited Lahore, with several other independent chiefs. They were received with great hospitality, and carried away with them valuable khillats as a memento of their visit to this capital. The feeling among the Waziris generally at the present time is most friendly to the Government.

THE CYCLONE OF MAY 2.

The weather since Tuesday has undergone a remarkable and disastrous change. Monday was an exceedingly hot and sultry day, having about it unmistakable indications that a change was impending. On Tuesday morning rain fell. Rain also fell during the day, and in the night a storm regularly set in, which continued at intervals throughout Wednesday and Wednesday evening, and on Thursday morning the weather can be described as little short of a hurricane, culminating in a fearful storm, such as fortunately rarely occurs, and such the like of which has not been known in this place for many years. Out of a large number of vessels, European and native, in the roads, three only have escaped the ravages of this terrific and furious gale. No less than nine European ships, all of them large vessels, have been driven ashore, and are now complete wrecks. Seventeen native vessels and dhonies have also met the same fate. The total loss of human life by this catastrophe is not yet known, but it is certain that it must be considerable. On land trees have been blown down, houses unroofed, and some lives lost. But the worst that has been suffered ashore is trifling in comparison with the dreadful havoc and devastation which have been made in the roads. Of course it could not be expected that the pier would escape in such a conflict with the warring and furious elements and the shipping. It is again broken in two, and this time in about the same place as the St. Bernard parted it in 1868, when that vessel broke away from her anchor and drifted ashore.

FURTHER PARTICULARS.

The total number of vessels wrecked in the late gale was twenty-six, consisting of nine English ships, eight native barques, three brigs, one schooner, and five dhonies. The total number of lives lost is not yet known by the Marine authorities, owing to some of the rescued sailors having been sent away to the Fort, others being taken away by their friends, and some more going to the General Hospital for treatment. The surviving commanders of the wrecked vessels will attend the Master Attendant's-office to-day, and give a correct number of their crew that have been saved. The whole line of beach from the north to the south was railed off, and a large number of police constables deputed to watch the goods and other property landed from the wrecks. His Excellency the Governor yesterday again visited the beach where the wrecked vessels were lying. We learn that on the morning previous to the storm, Captain Crowther, the Deputy Master Attendant, issued a circular to the commanders of all the English vessels in the roads, to the effect that the periodical season of uncertain weather on this coast had arrived, and cautioned them to keep their ships as much as possible prepared in every respect for standing to sea, at short notice, should the necessity arise for doing so, and in the meanwhile requested them to stay at night on board their respective ships, and also remain by them as much as possible, until the uncertain period had fairly passed over. The captains of the vessels met at the Master Attendant's office in the evening, and they, together with the Master Attendant and his deputies, consulted the barometer and sympiesometer, and were unanimously of opinion that the weather was not threatening. At twelve o'clock at midnight the barometer fell, and an hour after, there being a certain change in the weather, Captain Crowther repaired to the Marine Office and, together with the other deputies, made the usual night signals, and watched the movements of the vessels. Half-an-hour later a native barque broke from her anchorage and struck against the pier, and caused a gap about 150 feet wide. The other native crafts and English vessels followed in succession.

The following is a list of the native vessels that were wrecked in the storm of Thursday:—

THE "HOTSPUR."

The sea was sufficiently calm yesterday morning to permit the removing of the cargo from the several wrecks. The Hotspur unfortunately has been imbedded so deep in the sand, and the waves break with such violence over her, that there is little hope of clearing her just now. We are glad to state that, of the rest of the crew of the Hotspur, eight men were taken off safely from the wreck on Thursday night, and the remaining thirteen yesterday morning. One unfortunate lad was washed off the wreck about nine o'clock on Thursday night. Two gunners of the Royal Artillery, in Fort St. George, received injuries while rescuing the crew on Thursday. One had his arm broken, and another his leg broken, and both of them are now under treatment in the General Hospital. Others received slight injuries. Yesterday nineteen of the surviving sailors were sent by the Master Attendant to the General Hospital, to be kept there under treatment. We are informed that from thirty to forty seamen are missing from the several wrecks, and none of their bodies have turned up anywhere as yet. Six photographs of the beach in its present condition were taken yesterday by Messrs. Nicholas and Curths. The flag staff of the Master Attendant's-office has been blown down by the storm.

The loss of cargo we learn has been considerable. The Hotspur had 1,291 bales of cotton; 2,853 bags, 341 cases and 41 casks of coffee; 27 chests of indigo; 83 bales of skin; 11 bales of hide; 374 pockets of ground nuts; 1,841 pockets of myrobolams; 847 pockets of nux vomica; 597 bags of saltpetre; 6,385 pieces of redwood and 21,000, no. buffalo's horns. The Burlington had 1,361 bales of cotton; 69 chests of indigo; 2,903 bags of sugar; 156 bales of skins; 95 bales of hides; 1,789 pockets of myrobolams; 334 bags of turmeric; 426 bags of ground nuts; 23 trunks of Madras handkerchiefs and 7,838 pieces of redwood. The John Scott had on board 5,855 pieces of redwood and the Armenian 5,847 pieces of redwood and 1 case of wine, &c. The Sir Robert Seppings had 1,068 bags of rice and 90 hhds. of oil. The Kingdom of Belgium had 5 cases of paper.

DAMAGES DURING THE LATE STORM.

The storm has caused great damage to buildings and gardens. A portion of the slate roofing of Patcheappah's Hall has been blown off. Several cocoanut trees and other large trees have been uprooted, and the Agri-Horticultural Garden has suffered considerable damage. The third story of Government House has also, we learn, been somewhat injured.

THE "MONGOLIA" IN THE LATE GALE.

The following information, furnished by Captain A. E. Barlow, of the s.s. Mongolia, has been kindly placed at our disposal by Mr. De Salis, the agent of the P. and O. Company.

"Since leaving Galle we have had very bad weather, and have been obliged to heave to twice. Tuesday night and Wednesday morning it blew one of the heaviest gales I have seen for some time, commencing at S.E. and working round to S.W., when it moderated. I was then twenty miles E.S.E. of Madras. We have sustained no damage except that some sails and one boat were washed away yesterday (the 2nd inst.) evening. I passed the Orissa, of Greenock, dismasted, with only fore and mainmast and bowsprit. I asked if they wanted assistance, which they declined. They appeared to be repairing damages. The Orissa was then fifty miles east of Madras. The Mongolia left Galle at 7 A.M. on the 29th ult., and arrived here at 6 A.M. to-day."—Athenæum, May 4.

Miscellaneous.

PRESENT TO LADY NAPIER.—A handsome solid silver drinking cup for Lady Napier, and an inkstand for Lord Napier, have been lately manufactured by the Messrs. D'Alvez and Co., Madras. The presenters are the teachers and girls of the Civil Orphan Asylum.

THE UNCOVENANTED SERVICE.—There will, we understand, be a public meeting at Doveton College, on Monday next, for the purpose of adopting a memorial to the Secretary of State for India regarding his recent U. C. S. despatch. We trust that the memorial will be made public before the meeting for the information of people interested in the subject.—Madras Mail, May 2.

A VINDICTIVE CLIENT.—Some time ago a native of Madras consulted a European attorney of Madras named Mr. Atkinson, and acted on his advice; but afterwards, finding that the advice which he had received was incorrect, he brought a suit against the attorney for damages. After several days' hearing, Mr. Justice Holloway on Tuesday decided that the attorney had been guilty of negligence, and gave a verdict in favour of the plaintiff for Rs. 300 and costs.

CIVIL.—"It is not generally believed in Madras," says the Madras Times, "that the Hon. A. J. Arbuthnot will, on Lord Hobart's arrival, go to Calcutta to take the vacant place in the Governor-General's Executive Council. In that case the Hon. R. S. Ellis would retain his position as Acting Member of Council, and would possibly hardly think it worth while to take leave to Europe. However, until Lord Northbrook has arrived in Calcutta it will not be officially known whether Mr. Arbuthnot will or will not leave Madras. We should say, however, that the betting is immensely in his favour."

THE LATE GOVERNOR OF MADRAS.—Lord and Lady Napier are expected to arrive at Madras en route to England on the 11th, and his Lordship is expected to land there for a few hours. The ladies of Madras are arranging to present Lady Napier with a very handsome souvenir of her residence among them. Whatever critics may assail his lordship, none of their darts have harmed the bright genial and thoughtful lady at his side. Possibly, too, his lordship's brief tenure of the highest post in India may have done something to abate the censoriousness of the provincials by whom he was pestered while desirous of pleasing himself and illustrating his reign.—Times of India, May 4.

CAMP OF EXERCISE AT BANGALORE.—The Government of India have sanctioned a grant of Rs. 1,200,000 for the formation of a Camp of Exercise for the Madras Army to be formed at Bangalore during next cold season. The Camp, in addition to the ordinary garrison of Bangalore, viz., 1 regiment of British cavalry, 3 batteries of artillery, 1 regiment of British infantry, 2 regiments of Native infantry, and 4 companies of sappers and miners, will further consist of 2 batteries of Royal Artillery, 2 regiments of British infantry, 1 regiment of Native cavalry, and 8 regiments of Native infantry, making a total of 2 regiments of cavalry, 5 batteries of artillery, 13 regiments of infantry, and a detail of sappers and miners.

DEATH OF MRS. STEVENSON.—The "Lady Bountiful" of Tranquebar, Mrs. E. W. Stevenson, died at her residence in that town on April 24, at the advanced age of eighty-two. A correspondent of the Madras Mail says that the melancholy event elicited an expression of sympathy from both natives and Europeans that is seldom, very seldom, accorded to ladies when they die out in that country, even at the age of eighty two! "The bells of the English, Lutheran, and Roman Catholic churches were tolled, and all classes of the community, from the amiable Sessions Judge of Tranquebar to the most forlorn native, united to honour the remains of the good old lady, whose funeral resembled rather that of some powerful and popular ruler of men who had passed away than the obsequies of an ancient dame, whose long and quiet life had been spent in the active but unostentatious exercise of the Christian virtue of charity.

INVALID CARRIAGES ON THE MADRAS RAILWAY.—The Quartermaster-General has brought to the notice of the Government the fact that, while on the Bengal lines of railway specially-constructed invalid carriages are used for cases of serious indisposition or of chronic illness, and invalids who are capable of travelling in ordinary carriages are, when necessary, provided with extra space, no such advantages are to be had on the Madras line of railway. The Commander-in-Chief considers that the time has arrived when invalid carriages should be adopted on the Madras Railway, more particularly with advertence to the requirements for transport of invalids to Bombay for the troopships, or to Beyeore for the troop transports going home via the Cape, and recommends that two invalid carriages be authorised for this line. Government have resolved to call upon the agent and manager of the Madras Railway to submit proposals for the construction of two such carriages as those referred to, and to apply to the Government of India for a plan of the latest approved invalid carriage, which on receipt will be forwarded to the agent of the Company.

FROM BAGHDAD TO BABYLON.—III.

BAGHDAD, Feb. 12.—On Saturday, 10th, we were astir before day-break and crossed the bridge of boats, eager to be revelling among the ruins of Old Babylon. The janitor, however, was not present to open the city gates till after six o'clock, and we had to return and pass round by the river. A ride of nearly two hours through suburban date groves brought us out by a bend of the river from which we could see the heaps of ruins; and sending on the baggage animals, we made a short detour and ascended the immense mounds of rubbish. We passed a few sheep and goats pasturing below, and some asses laden with bricks. The first mound we ascended is known as Amran, is 200 or 300 yards long, and may be 100 feet high. Though the soil is loose and rotten and contains many excavations, there was not much difficulty in passing up, or along it, either for men or horses, though these were given to the syces while we walked. There is a small mosque-like building on this mound, which contains the tomb of some Arab Sheikh, around which outside and among the ruins are numerous Arab graves. The compound of the building contains a deep well of, I was told, sweet water; though I doubt this, from the quantity of salt nearly everywhere covering the ruins. The small shelter around the yard would serve for any one who might wish to stay a day at the spot, but no one lives there, and only people who gather bricks among the ruins and occasional visitors like ourselves ever pass it. Here and there the foxes sneaked off uneasily as we made our appearance, and this continued all through our progress over the ruins, which extend for some miles. The second mound is called by Rich, Mujelibe, and by the natives, I Kaar, or the palace. It is thought by some to be the site of the lofty gardens that King Nebuchadnezzar built for his Median Queen to remind her in the Chaldean plain of her native mountains; though others think the loftier mound about a mile and a half to the north and called by the Arabs Tel Babel, or Mound Babel, was the palace and gardens. From all the mounds extensive views of the country around may be obtained; the Birs Nimroud rising in grim and hoary grandeur on the wide plain some fifteen miles to the southward. The river Euphrates runs a little to the westward of the ruins, and between the mounds is a low valley from W. to E., where, by a bend, the river appears to have once flowed; perhaps before it was turned aside by Cyrus when he, by this stratagem (B.C. 538), captured the city. Amid the scene of utter desolation the mind forcibly reverted to the historic descriptions of its former greatness and glory, as described by Herodotus and Quintus Curtius, when "its walls enclosed a circuit of sixty miles," and on them "four-horse chariots could pass abreast without danger." If much of this is garniture yet it was a mighty and great city with nearly a million inhabitants, perhaps by far the greatest city in the world. "This great Babylon that I have built," said Nebuchadnezzar; though it is more than probable that the illustrious Queen Semiramis had more to do in founding it. It was certainly "the glory of the Chaldees excellency" and the pride of the world, and that so late as B.C. 538, when Cyrus after a two years' siege took the city, and sacked not destroyed it. Even to the time of Alexander it was a place of great importance, as Quintus Curtius testifies, who describes the reception given by the nobles to Alexander on his entering the city B.C. 324 after his return from India. Amid these heaps of ruins where the halls that witnessed that monarch's drunken and licentious feast and his sudden end. And here too at a feast of earlier date Belshazzar saw the hand that wrote upon the wall, the writing interpreted by Daniel. Walking amid these ruins till long after the sun had risen one longed to taste the pleasing draughts of sherbet, shrab, or Babylonian wine, the contents of some of these palatial cellars, but of the thousand of courtiers and servants whose busy feet ran to and fro here in halls of grandeur not one was left. The Cawas, who has oft visited these mounds, was asked to take in our cards to Semiramis, Nebuchadnezzar, or Alexander; or to tell the noker loque to do so, but his reply was "Wuhsab giya, sahib-sab soya"—"They have all gone, Sir, they have all slept." Passing over the central one of the three largest mounds, we came upon a huge stone lion, nine feet long by six feet high, turned over at the bottom of a hole fifteen or twenty feet deep. It must have lain here some years, and it is certain it must have belonged to some works of massive grandeur, the stone of which was brought from afar. Fancy one of Landseer's productions turned over in a similar hole some day in Trafalgar-square; while some Arab who gathers bricks stolidly drives his laden ass past Macaulay's New Zealander, as he sketches from his seat on a ruined arch of London-bridge the mounds of rubbish and pottery which may cover the ruins of St. Paul's, or the great S.E. Railway Station, and some faint idea may then be obtained of the tremendous change which wars and "time's effacing fingers" have effected here. A ruined piece of wall, which is yearly, perhaps daily, growing less, by the removal of bricks, yet stands on the Kaar, but Layard's picture of it only represents, no doubt with accuracy, which it was twenty years ago. Near it stands a solitary tree, dead or nearly so. It is a species of cedar or casuarina, and several offshoots of it have taken root and grown well in the Residency garden at Baghdad, and some have been lately planted in the English cemetery. A little farther north in a nullah of the same mound is a somewhat larger tree of later growth, called by some a nehbuk tree, and these are the only signs of vegetable life till the gardens and date-groves are reached, which are irrigated by the peasants by the river side. Round some of these rudely-cultivated spots we walked to the northern mound Tel Babel—Mound Babel, the greatest and loftiest of all. This mound is, according to Rich, 200 yards long on its northern face, on the southern 219, on the eastern 182, and on the western 136; while its elevation at the N.E. angle was 141 feet. At this point the wall of the sun-dried bricks is more perfect than elsewhere; the reeds between the layers of brick being so strong that after pulling some of them out we could with difficulty twist them to pieces, though they must have lain there embedded more than two thousand years. One gentleman seriously suggested that the work must be of modern date, though this is impossible. The bricks here as well as those on the Kasr, which are kiln-burnt or burnt in the ruins, have arrow-headed characters, and it is said by those who are able to decipher them that every brick, like those of the Birs Nimroud, bears the name of King Nebuchadnezzar.

The sun was getting high, the mirage had spread over the distant plains, giving them the appearance of seas, lakes, and forests, the sowars and guides were beginning to be impatient, for a long journey of more than forty miles was before some of them, and we were reluctantly obliged to tear ourselves away from these rugged, caverned and desolate heaps of broken bricks, pottery, earth, and rubbish and to resume our homeward journey. We rode on to Iskandarieh, a large caravanserai, the place named probably like many others, after the Macedonian conqueror. Here we had a second breakfast or tiffin, for which the walk and ride had given us a most voracious appetite, and the native-made pancakes, bread, milk, and dates disappeared with far greater rapidity than the daintiest fare under ordinary circumstances. But little to note occurred on the rest of the return journey, the mirage afforded by its kaleidoscopic effects among the mounds of ruined canals and approaching caravans, almost endless subjects of remark. We met not a few caravans, and passed as usual many stranded "ships of the desert." Though the sun was warm during the day, we could see the snow on the distant mountains of Persia on our right, away to the far east. We reached Marmodieh, where we slept for the night, and early next morning we started with a five hours' ride before us, and a most lovely dawn and sunrise, arriving in Baghdad in time for the Sunday morning service which the Resident, Colonel Herbert, in the absence of a clergyman, holds in a beautifully oriental decorated room of the Residency. Here the little English community assemble Sunday after Sunday to join in the time honoured services of the English Church, "not forsaking the assembling of themselves together."

The next day, Monday, 12th February, I rode out a few miles over the plain to the east of the city. It was the festival or preparation of the native Christians before Lent, and according to custom they had gone out to walk and talk on the plains, much as in India the Hindus walk out on the Nareli-Purnima or cocoa-nut festival. We passed through a part of the town which had been desolated by fever and plague in 1831-2, and subsequently destroyed by flood. It is somewhat remarkable that the region on and between the banks of the Tigris and Euphrates, once the most fertile and populous in the world, should have become by wars and pestilences one of the least productive and populous of countries. Tamerlane and others here destroyed their tens and hundreds of thousands, if not, over a million lives. The great plague of 1773 destroyed, it is thought, two millions of inhabitants, while cholera and plague since have depopulated whole districts. And now in the entire Pashalic which, in the Report of Commander Jones, L.N., is described as "a large and profusely-watered tract of country ranging over nearly five degrees of latitude and longitude, inclosing an area of available soil which I compute at 50,000 square miles," there is at present an estimated population, according to a recent report of Dr. Colvill, C.S., of one million only. While east, west, north and south, wherever the eye turns or the traveller proceeds, mounds of ruins, ancient but dry canals, treeless and (though the soil is naturally fertile) almost unproductive and barren plains, are everywhere to be seen. The old centres of population and industry are dried up and laid waste, affording certainly a strange illustration, to say the least, if not a fulfilment of the predictions of the old Hebrew prophets—"Her cities are a desolation, a dry land and a wilderness." It is thought probable that the extensive planting of trees and the irrigation of them by canals until they are grown would again restore a heavier and more regular rain-fall to this region, and some efforts are being made in this direction; but capital, security, and enterprise are alike wanting.—Times of India Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

THE COTTON COMMISSIONER.—Mr. Halsey, C.S., Commissioner for Cotton and Commerce, is at present at Dharwar. He would not be in time to witness the cotton gin trials; but he will have ample opportunity for seeing the South Mahratta Country in the midst of its cotton season, and will thereby get a good insight into its requirements.

THE UNCOVENANTED EUROPEANS.—We have not heard of any action on the part of the public or the Uncovenanted Service in the Bombay Presidency to oppose the Duke of Argyll's policy for recruiting the ranks of the Uncovenanted Service. But if anything has been done in that direction, or if any action is contemplated, we would invite the attention of the promoter of the movement to an advertisement in to-day's issue, inviting the Executive Committees of the Uncovenanted Service Remonstrance Association in the Madras and Bombay Presidencies to communicate with Mr. R. Hammond, Honorary Secretary, U. C. S. Remonstrance Association at Allahabad, with a view to facilitate a combined protest of the entire Service and Anglo-Indian community against the Duke of Argyll's despatch.—Times of India.

DINNER TO MR. MANSFIELD.—The members of the Bombay Civil Service at the Presidency entertained the Hon. S. Mansfield at a farewell dinner, at the Byculia Club, on Monday, April 29.

THE PERSIAN GULF.—Referring to the active life led by Colonel Pelly, and the frequent cruises in vessels of the Quungtung class made by him as British Resident in the Persian Gulf, the Pioneer remarks that "it is a misfortune that Colonel Pelly's powers and the resources at his command are not more ample." And the Pioneer does not stand alone in that belief. Colonel Pelly's resources are utterly inadequate, especially seeing the great display of naval strength now lately exhibited by the Turks in those waters. Though Colonel Pelly has guns that would blow the Turks out of the water if occasion required, yet there is nothing to indicate this important fact to the Arab mind, and at present there is no small likelihood of the Padishah being regarded as immeasurably superior in strength to the Ferringhee, because their men-of-war are larger, more numerous in those waters, and more imposing. The Turk fully appreciates his advantage: how long is he to be allowed to enjoy it to the detriment of British interests?—Times of India.

DEATH OF MR. SHEPHERD.—With deep sorrow we have to record the decease of Mr. Alexander F. Shepherd, who for more than six years past has been intimately associated with us in the conduct of this journal. To his numerous friends in this presidency, and to many in other parts of India, his sudden removal will cause much and lasting regret. He will long be remembered by his letters from the Abyssinian Field Force, which appeared in this journal, and afterwards in their collected form, furnished one of the best records of the campaign. Mr. Shepherd was a graduate of Aberdeen University, and his natural abilities were very considerable; so that, had he not been thus cut short in the midst of his days, and had health been granted him, he must have made his mark in the Indian press, or on some similar field of intellectual activity. He had been ill several times during the last twelve months, but none of his most intimate friends apprehended the fatal result which, without specific warning, occurred on Saturday evening. This event, while grievous to us at any time, strikes one more painfully in contrast with the social stir and public excitement of the past week in Bombay.—Times of India.

UNVEILING OF THE QUEEN'S STATUE.—It was not merely a graceful, but a thoughtful act, on the part of Sir Seymour Fitzgerald, to surrender to Lord Northbrook the privilege of unveiling the statue of the Queen, which was presented to this city by the late Gackwar of Baroda. The gift of the statue was intended to commemorate the assumption by Her Majesty of the direct government of India; and there must have been few among the vast crowd of loyal citizens assembled to take part in the brilliant ceremony of Monday, who did not reflect, when Lord Northbrook spoke of the untimely fate of his lamented predecessor, that nothing could be more appropriate than that the first public act of the new Viceroy should be the dedication to the loyal inhabitants of this great city, of a statue emblematic of that principle of continuity in the life of the State which makes the greatness of England independent of the fortunes of individual statesmen. Lord Northbrook performed his task with so much genuine good feeling, and hearty interest in, and admiration of Bombay, that he won from his audience a more cordial greeting than we have ever before heard given here to a Governor or Governor-General; and the new Viceroy and the people of Bombay will have pleasant recollections of one another to colour their intercourse for the rest of Lord Northbrook's reign. The statue is a beautiful work of art in Carrara marble by Mr. Noble. Her Majesty is represented seated in a chair of state, which is placed upon a high pedestal; and above the statue there is a handsome gothic canopy ending in a florid peak. The whole is 42 feet, and is estimated to have cost £18,000.—Bombay Gazette, May 4.

ADDRESS FROM THE BOMBAY UNIVERSITY TO H.E. THE GOVERNOR.—On Saturday afternoon the Senate of the University of Bombay attended at Government House, Parell, to present the University Address to the Chancellor, H.E. Sir Seymour Fitzgerald. On being ushered into the drawing-room, the Vice-Chancellor (the Hon. Mr. Justice Gibbs) read the address, from which we take the following extract:—"In the eloquent addresses delivered by your Excellency at three of our annual Convocations, and at the ceremony of laying the foundation stone of our University buildings, we have observed the exemplification of the true academic spirit, cultivated by your own residence at the most ancient and venerated University of the British Isles, some of whose highest honours have been attained by yourself. We see this exemplification in your just appreciation of the preparatory instruction needful for the successful commencement of University study; in your warm sympathy with our efforts to maintain a high standard for the degrees which we are empowered to confer; in your urging the continuance of advanced study, not only for the competent discharge of professional duty, but for purposes of self-improvement, advancement, and intellectual, moral, and social refinement; and in your just estimate of the general advantages of University culture in India amongst all ranks of the native community, both in the districts of our own Indian Empire, and in those under the Government of native princes and nobles. The interest which your Excellency has thus especially taken in advanced University study, has been further exhibited by your founding, in connection with the highest examination in Arts, a prize, to be denominated 'The Chancellor's Medal,' which we trust will come to be looked upon, as in other Universities, as the highest honour a graduate can obtain. Like your distinguished predecessor, Sir Bartle Frere, your Excellency has given every suitable encouragement to the exercise of private liberality in the endowment in the University of prizes, scholarships, and other similar benefactions. In extending Government pecuniary help to the University, you have suitably recognised the deference due to the deliberations and counsels of its Senate and Syndicate, and, by permitting the new University buildings to be erected by the Department of Public Works, you have relieved the Senate from much care and anxiety, and at the same time have ensured satisfactory results."

Official Papers.

MILITARY STATIONS IN INDIA.

The following Official Paper, addressed to a contemporary (the Times), exhibits the dangerously unsanitary condition of some of our military stations in India:—

November 14, 1871.

From the Deputy Inspector general of Hospitals, Rawul Pindee Circle, to the Sanitary Commissioner, Supreme Government, Simla.

Sir,—I am shortly to leave the circle and service in India, and desire to take this last opportunity of again bringing to your notice the terrible condition of the water supply for the Peshawur city and cantonments. I can with truth affirm that I never come to Peshawur to make my inspection without my wonder being excited, not that epidemics and sickness constantly visit this station, but that the community is ever free from wide-spread disease. Since I made my first visit officially to Peshawur, now four years ago, I have taken every opportunity in my annual inspection reports, as well as in special reports on the water supply to every official person I could venture to address, of pointing out the fearful conditions under which the whole Peshawur community obtain their drinking water. No language I could use would be too strong to describe the abominations of the existing arrangements, and I have certainly spoken as strongly as is permitted in official correspondence. In my inspection, however, made this week, I can see little or no improvement in any particular since 1867.

2. It is unnecessary that I should enter again and again into the details of the water supply question. These are doubtless familiar to yourself. Of course, the grave and radical defect is the open, unprotected main channel, seven miles long, from the Bara River, exposed as this is to every species of contamination. From this, the main source of the cantonment supply, which runs along the watershed line, proceed the minor channels, also open, that supply the different regiments. Not the smallest effort is made to keep these minor channels even tolerably pure, and, by a curious perversity, the drinking water-tanks of the various native infantry regiments are for the most part situated at the lowest end of these small channels. Some of these channels pass by latrines, hospital and regimental, and after running the gauntlet of the sepoys' lines, deliver their stream into the water tanks. It seems hard to understand why, in making the original cantonment, the higher ground should have been chosen for the latrines, and the lower level for the water tanks. The best position for the latter, one might suppose, would be as near as possible to the main source of supply. Again, the small stream or channel which supplies the Suddur (or main) Bazaar passes by cesspools or pits, 8 feet or 10 feet deep, filled with night soil or rubbish. When I say "by cesspools," I mean, literally, within one yard of these, now in actual use. I had hoped that the whole system of cesspools and deep pits for ordure had been abolished in every cantonment, but I had ocular demonstration this week that in Peshawur, at least, it is by no means yet abandoned. These cesspools are within a very short distance of the 16th Bengal cavalry hospital. Happily, this water channel for the Suddur Bazaar has to flow over another and deeper channel, which passes down towards the dooley bearer's lines, and ultimately to the city. It is, therefore, a few inches above the level of the cesspools; but the deeper channel I have spoken of, itself within a very few yards of the cesspools, is actually on a lower level than the ordure in the pits. One may imagine what the purity of this channel must be, with a pressure of 8 feet or 10 feet of ordure acting on the subsoil in its immediate vicinity. The effect on the unhappy dooley bearers may be learnt from the records of the station hospital, where, in 1870, these poor people died in numbers like rotten sheep. The cantonment authorities, I believe, maintain that, although the city has the same channel subsequently passing through it, the inhabitants never use the water for drinking purposes; but in this they are mistaken, as I have fully convinced myself.

3. In conclusion, I can only say that I do not see how matters could be worse, except in a community which drew no distinction whatever between its cesspools and water-tanks, and used either indiscriminately for both purposes.—I have the honour to be, Sir, your most obedient servant,

G. E. MORTON, M.D., Deputy Inspector General of Hospitals, Native Troops.

MADRAS IRRIGATION COMPANY.—In anticipation of the meeting called for the 30th inst., the report of the Madras Irrigation and Canal Company has been issued. Prior to the opening of the Canal, in July last, there had been received on account of the water supplied to the town of Kurnool and to a small strip of cultivated land lying contiguous to the canal along the first section, the sum of £5,719, while £7,968 was expended on revenue account up to the 31st December last. The amount due for the irrigation supplied during the season 1871-2 has not yet been settled with the Government of Madras.

THE INDIAN COURT AT THE INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION.

The exhibition of jewellery may be said to commence from the very beginning. In a case near the entrance, against the wall on the left-hand side, will be found a collection, made by Dr. Birdwood, of the seeds and fruits which are copied, either strictly or conventionally, for the purposes of ornamentation; and among these all the simple forms used in jewellery may be found. The next case carries the matter a step further. It contains a collection, made by Mr. G. D. V. Fitzgerald, of grass ornaments worn by the Thakoor of Matheran Hill, near Bombay. In this case there are bracelets or bangles, and neck chains, woven from grass or straw, and exhibiting the originals of many Etruscan or other ancient patterns, in forms due to the necessary fastenings of the short lengths of material. The third case contains silver ornaments from Bombay, and in many of these the grass forms are simply repeated, as in a more advanced stage of the art they are to be found variously conventionalised. In other cases are collections of jewellery from Madras, Oude, the Punjab, and the N.W. Provinces; but the peculiar manufactures of Ahmedabad and of Trichinopoly are unfortunately not represented. The objects range from the finest gold work to the cheapest pewter ornaments of the peasantry; and a case in the centre of the Court contains a dressed doll of life size, to show how the various articles are worn. A very noticeable feature is the beauty of surface given to both gold and silver by the native methods of treatment, and in some cases—notably in the large circular gold ornaments, representing the sun and moon, will be found extraordinary delicacy of workmanship and excellence of design. Bracelets and necklaces, containing jewels or enamel, afford, even in their roughest and coarsest forms, examples of an exquisite perception of harmonies of colour and of grace of outline, and every now and then will be found an ornament which might be supposed to be Etruscan, or Assyrian, or Grecian, or Celtic. Dr. Birdwood, who has given, and still gives, much careful study to this question, agrees with some earlier inquirers in being of opinion that the history of ornamental forms, their origin from certain natural forms, and the appearance of the same types in distant countries and periods, all point to the existence of an earlier and common civilisation from which that of historic times has radiated as from a centre; and he hopes eventually to be able to furnish something like proof of this hypothesis.

At the entrance of the Court on the right will be found a case containing a collection of "Cambay stones," generally agates, but distinguished by various specific names, such as sard, cornelian, onyx, chalcedony, and the like, which have been brought together, at great labour and expense, by Dr. Birdwood. Every stone in this case is a gem; many are absolutely unique; and the collection, as a whole, is quite without rival. The ornamental metal work of India is represented by a superb case in the centre of the Court, full of vases, dishes, chalices, and other vessels of the most gorgeous character. Some small boxes and other articles of "ruddy gold" will especially attract attention; but the gem of the whole case is a rosewater-bottle of Cashmere enamel of some subtle colour that almost defies definition, and with arabesque patterns in gold. This bottle has been secured by Sir Digby Wyatt. Near it are some exquisite specimens of Bidree (black and silver) and Koofgari (gold and steel) work; and also some vases of brass or copper with silver or gold enrichments, which are quite Homeric in their tone and character. The same case contains also some bottles and other articles in silver, and an especially beautiful bowl and dish of gold and silver pierced. The case itself is worthy of notice, and it is surrounded by a narrow raised platform which obviates the possibility of crowding while its varied contents are being inspected. Other specimens of costly metal work, chiefly the mere overflowings of the central case, will be found here and there, but none of them require any detailed or special notice.

Towards the further end of the Court, on the left and in the centre, is a collection of the cotton manufactures of India, which will at least serve the purpose of showing manufacturers in this country what it is that the natives want. The cotton manufacture of India is calculated to be about twice as great as that of Lancashire; so that, if our manufacturers could obtain the command of the Indian market, they might at least treble the present demand upon them. The specimens exhibited are of great interest, and they have as common characters strength and firmness of texture, great beauty of design, and remarkable harmony and sobriety of colouring. The utter absence of tawdriness in the coloured cotton that might be worn by an Indian mendicant strikes one with a sort of despairing admiration when it is contrasted with much that is exported from this country, and the colours produce a very remarkable effect of richness, as soon as the fabric is sufficiently distant from the eye for its actual coarseness to be concealed. The really rich Indian textures are scarcely represented (although one case contains a brilliant kincob, some Dacca muslin, and some embroidery), excepting in a specimen volume of Dr. Forbes Watson's forthcoming great work on the "Textiles of India." This work is to be completed in eighteen volumes, and will contain 3,000 samples of actual fabrics, such as kincobs, silks, calicoes, muslins, and so forth. The specimen volume is of kincobs of Ahmedabad and Benares, and is a superb foretaste of a truly imperial undertaking. It is placed in a case, which will eventually contain a complete set of Dr. Forbes Watson's publications on Indian manufactures.

The musical instruments are very curious, and are mostly ranged in cases against the wall at the further end of the Court. The "banjo" type distinctly predominates, and is to be seen in all stages of development, from a bamboo thrust through half a gourd up to a complicated and richly-decorated instrument. The "Jew's harp" of our childhood is also represented. There are tom-toms in abundance, rude pandean pipes, gourds to be blown into, cymbals, and large instruments composed of a series of cymbals fixed in a circular frame, and intended to be beaten by a performer standing in the centre.

On first entering the Court the visitor will be struck by the beauty and richness of the carpets hanging upon the walls. Some of these are exhibited by the Indian Museum, one or two by various owners, and many by Messrs. Vincent Robinson and Co., of Welbeck-street, who also have one of the small rooms on the right of the Court. The floor of this room is covered by a very choice specimen of matting, and over this is a silk carpet from Cashmere of extraordinary richness and lustre. Messrs. Robinson have also other carpets of great excellence; but one, the work of ladies of Turkestan, and which, although only the size of a small hearth-rug, we understand to be worth £40 in the country of its production, should be inspected by every visitor. The fineness of the texture, the harmony of the colouring, and the exquisite character of the pattern, cannot receive justice from a verbal description. Another of these small rooms is occupied by Messrs. Farmer and Rogers, and a third by Messrs. Henry S. King and Co., who have established there an Oriental agency and intelligence office, in which all Indian newspapers, and a variety of books on India, may be found.

The paper objects are not yet arranged, having arrived too late to be prepared for the opening; and we are informed that many other objects in the other classes will yet be added to the collection. We would hope that such additions may not be carried too far, for the Court last year was a little overcrowded, not only for the convenience of visitors, but even for the sake of general effect when visitors were absent. At this moment its appearance leaves little to be desired, and a few additional objects, however admirable in themselves, would scarcely add to its attractiveness.—Times.

Miscellaneous.

PATENT GUN COTTON COMPANY.—It is announced that Captain Henry Hozier has joined the Board of the Patent Cotton Gunpowder Company (Limited), and that Messrs. Grindlay and Co. have been appointed commercial agents for the company for India and China, and Messrs. Heintzmann and Rochussen agents for the continent.

MAJOR B. M. DEANE, 19th Regiment, has been appointed to the Staff of Sir Philip Wodehouse, Governor of Bombay. Major Deane is supernumerary in his regiment, and lately filled the position of Assistant Quartermaster-General on the Madras staff very creditably.—Army and Navy Gazette.

ANGLO MEDITERRANEAN TELEGRAPH COMPANY.—The directors of the Anglo Mediterranean Telegraph Company have issued their report for the eleven months ending 31st March. The net receipts have been £64,317. 14s. 2d., and a dividend at the rate of 15 per cent. per annum, or 13½ for the eleven months, of which £5. 6s. 8d. has already been paid, is recommended, leaving a balance of £4,004. 12s. 10d. to be carried to reserve.

MARSEILLES, ALGIERS, AND MALTA TELEGRAPH COMPANY.—The report of the Marseilles, Algiers, and Malta Telegraph Company states that the revenue for the quarter ending 31st March last amounted to £3,879. 11s. 7d., and the expenses to £1,315. 13s. 6d. The directors propose to distribute £2, 500, equivalent to 5 per cent. per annum, as a final dividend, the arrangement for amalgamation with the other companies taking effect from the date named above.

MILITARY.—The annual dinner of the medical officers of the Army, Navy, and Indian Services will be held at the Freemasons' Tavern on Thursday, the 30th of May, at seven P.M.; Sir J. Randal Martin, C.B., in the chair. Lieut.-Gen. C. Hamilton, C.B., Bengal Infantry, becomes a general, and Major-General Sir N. B. Chamberlain, K.C.B., K.C.S.I., Bengal Infantry, a lieut.-gen., with seniority from May 16, consequent upon the death of General J. Garnault, Madras Infantry, who died at Torquay on the 15th inst.

INDIAN RELIEFS.—The Indian reliefs for the year 1872-73 have been arranged as follows:—The corps to embark for India are the 10th Hussars at Colchester, B Brigade of Royal Horse Artillery at Aldershot, the 43rd Regt. at Cork, the 40th Regt. at Dublin, the 67th Regt. at Shorncliff, and the 51st Regt. at Athlone. The corps ordered to return home are the 20th Hussars from Bengal, a Brigade of Royal Horse Artillery from Bengal, the 3rd Bat. 60th Royal Rifles from Aden, the 2nd Bat. 10th Regt. from Burmah, the 2nd Bat. 24th Regt. from Madras, and the 2nd Bat. 21st Foot from Burmah.

BRITISH INDIAN SUBMARINE TELEGRAPH COMPANY.—The report of the British Indian Submarine Telegraph Company (Limited) for the six months ending 31st March last has been issued. The gross receipts in that time were £80,479. 10s. 11d., and the expenses £19,482. 9s. 4d. In addition to the interim dividend of 2 per cent., the directors now propose to pay 2½ per cent., making a total distribution at the rate of 9 per cent. per annum, and the balance of £7,559. 11s. 7d. is carried to reserve. The report also refers to the proposed amalgamation with the Anglo-Mediterranean, the Falmouth, and the Marseilles Companies into a new company, to be called the Eastern Submarine Telegraph Company (Limited).

RECENT SELECTIONS.—A subaltern in India complains of the injustice of recent selections. The following is his case:—"On seeing the Gazette of March 9, I find that an officer who entered the service three years and nine months after myself, and who obtained his lieutenancy four years and nine months after me, gets a troop in his own regiment, while in the same Gazette a captain in my regiment is gazetted out, who, on 22nd of the previous October, had offered me by telegram £200 to sanction his exchange with an officer junior in the service to myself, and yet the step is not given to me, but a supernumerary is absorbed. I remain a senior subaltern, and have been such three years and six months, during which period I have been purchased over three times."

STRANGERS' HOME FOR ASIATICS, AFRICANS, AND SOUTH SEA ISLANDERS.—The annual meeting of the supporters of the above institution was held on Friday, at Willis's Rooms, under the presidency of the Marquis of Cholmondeley. The report, which was duly adopted, stated that the need and importance of such an institution had never, from the opening of the Home, been more apparent than during the period which had elapsed since the last anniversary. The number of inmates remaining in the Home on the 1st January, 1871 (nine being destitute cases), was 16; the number admitted and registered during the year 1871 (including 36 destitute cases) was 327; the total number lodged and boarded in the year 1871 (including 45 destitute cases) was 343; the number who left, provided with employment, or had their passage paid, was 237; the number remaining in the Home on the 1st January, 1872 (of whom seven were destitute) was 106. The expenditure in 1871 amounted to £2,166. 8s. 3d., and the receipts from all sources were £2,215. 1s. 2d., leaving a balance of £48. 12s. 6d. in hand.

COMPETITION AND THE INDIAN SERVICES.—A meeting was held on Tuesday last at the Society of Arts' Rooms, under the auspices of the East Indian Association, to discuss the present system of competitive examinations for appointments in the Indian Civil Services. Mr. Eastwick, M.P., the chairman, said that no doubt the theory of competitive examinations was right, but they were no test as regards the moral character or physical capabilities of the candidates. Men who gained their appointments by examination looked upon them as their right, and were not so manageable, and cared less for the service itself than those who received their appointments as gifts. Much had been said about competitive examinations by eminent men, and Lord Derby was in favour of them. He had a great opinion of Lord Derby's judgment, and was willing to accept it. (cheers.) Dr. George Birdwood then proceeded to read an interesting paper on "Competition and the Indian Services." Mr. Gordon considered that young men were greatly injured by the present system of cramming. General Sir Le Grand Jacob, C.B., thought the services were losing in a measure the high tone which formerly distinguished them, and he ascribed this to the competitive system. Votes of thanks were given to Dr. Birdwood and to the chairman.

THE "FLORA OF BRITISH INDIA."—The first part has just appeared of the long-expected Flora of British India by Dr. J. D. Hooker, published under the authority of the Secretary of State for India in Council. The territory included in the Flora is that comprised within the British territories in India (including the Malay Peninsula and the Andaman Isles), together with Cashmere and Western Tibet, but excluding Afghanistan and Beluchistan, the plants of which countries are included in Boissier's "Flora Orientalis," and belong to quite another botanical region, that of Western Asia. Of the 12,000 to 14,000 species of flowering plants and ferns belonging to British Indian botany, not a twelfth part has hitherto been brought together in any one general work on Indian plants; the description of the remainder being scattered through innumerable British and foreign journals, or contained in local floras or works on general botany; and a very large number being either very badly described, or not at all. The work is, therefore, one of considerable labour as well as importance, Dr. Hooker being assisted in it by various other botanists. There are a large number of new species described in this part; and the natural orders included in it are Ranunculaceæ, Dilleniaceæ, Magnoliaceæ, Anonaceæ, Menispermaceæ, Berberidaceæ, Nymphæaceæ, Papaveraceæ, Capparidaceæ, Resedaceæ, Bixineæ, Violaceæ, and Pittosporaceæ, by Dr. Hooker and Dr. Thomson; Cruciferae by Dr. Hooker and Dr. Anderson; Fumariaceæ by Dr. Hooker; and a part of Polygalaceæ by Mr. A. W. Bennett.

GREAT SOUTHERN OF INDIA RAILWAY.—The report of the directors of this company states that the length of line open for traffic remained at 168 miles. The average gross receipt per mile of railway in 1870 was £422, and in 1871 £425; the average net receipt per mile of railway in 1870 was £168. 10s. 10d., and in 1871 £190. 6s. 8d. The net revenue for the year 1871 amounted to £31,976, being equal to 2½ per cent. on the capital expended on the line open for traffic, and showing an increase over the net earnings of the previous year of £3,661. The total number of passengers conveyed during the year 1871 was 813,885, being an increase of 30,130 over those carried in 1870. The receipts were £39,034, against £37,263 in 1870. The total number of passengers conveyed since the opening of the line was 5,415,226. The earnings for merchandise traffic showed a falling off as compared with those of the preceding year of £2,090. This was attributable in a great measure to the fact that the grain trade in 1870 was exceptionally good, owing to the high market price which then obtained. The total traffic receipts in the year 1871 amounted to £71,343; and in the year 1870 to £70,962, showing an increase of £380. The earnings per train mile were 5s. 9d., against 5s. 11d. in 1870; and the net profit 2s. 7d. per train mile, against 2s. 4½d. per train mile in 1870, showing an increase of 2½d. per train mile. The expenditure amounted to £30,367, or 55·18 per cent., against £42,647, or 60·09 per cent., in 1870, showing a decrease of £3,280 or 4·91 per cent. During the past year four ships, chartered by the company, conveying stores to the value of £5,300, were despatched from England, and had safely delivered their cargoes at Negapatam. The amount which the Secretary of State in Council authorised to be raised by debenture stock,—namely, £125,000, had been issued in a 4½ per cent. stock at par. A decision had been come to by the Government of India with regard to the Southern Extension, and the works had at length been commenced. The general route of the line would be from Trichinopoly to Muniachee, branching thence to Tinnevely and Tuticorin, a length of 215½ miles, and the railway would be constructed on the metre gauge of 3ft. 3·38in. Certain modifications had been made in the plans submitted by the company, and the estimate had been reduced from £4,617 to £3,972 per mile, including rolling stock. The Board were gratified to learn that the manner in which the scheme had been submitted was in accordance with the wishes of the Government of India, and that the Governor-General in Council had conveyed his thanks to the engineer in chief for the completeness with which the surveys, plans, and estimates had been prepared and brought under his consideration. The capital account to the end of 1871 showed that £2,858,046 had been received, and £1,410,793 expended, leaving a balance of £1,447,253.

INDIAN TAXATION.

The Times observes that the deference due on general grounds to the traditions of the native population is a matter comprehensive in the extreme. We cannot, of course, carry the principle too far, or we should never have abolished suttee and infanticide; but it is a question whether we should not prepare ourselves for greater forbearance, even when we may be convinced of the wisdom of our views. There is no doubt that our proceedings have been, so far as intentions and arguments went, all for the best. Our interference with the habits of the natives has been uniformly calculated, if they would but see it, to do them good; nor has there been any legislation, however unsuccessful, for which excellent reasons, according to our own views, could not have been shown. But the proverbial acuteness of the Hindoo does not extend to political penetration, and old ways are preferred to new. No doubt, in the case of the income-tax, the great body of the people are unaffected by the measure; and it may further be said that it reaches the pockets of those who ought to pay, and who cannot, apparently, be made to pay in any other manner. But this very argument implies also that the offended class, if not numerous, is influential, and we cannot afford to alienate such people from our rule. As regards the immediate question, if Lord Northbrook's "aim" is to reduce expenditure till it is balanced by a moderate revenue, he may certainly be expected to retain it. To so experienced a financier an outlay of £16,000,000 upon the Army must needs offer many opportunities of effecting the very slight retrenchment required. The end might be accomplished, we have no doubt, without alarming even military critics; but the broad question of future finance, it should be remembered will remain open still. The resources of India are strained, even in time of peace, to make both ends meet. That is a simple statement of the whole case. It has been proposed to relax this strain by the introduction of a tax from which the natives recoil with horror, and at the same time to provide a source of new revenue against the hour of need. Lord Northbrook will be called upon in the first hour of his administration to pronounce an opinion upon this proposition. It is doubtless because his decision is thought to be prefigured in his address to the Associated Trades of Calcutta, that "an agreeable and almost unexpected feeling" has been created "throughout India." Perhaps, as we have said, the inference is just, but the truth will soon be known, and in the meantime it is satisfactory to record so promising an inauguration of a new rule.

COMPETITIVE EXAMINATIONS.

The Standard holds that the application of the competitive system to the Indian civil service puts it to a severe test, but one which is favourable to its principle in a very high degree. The rewards of that service are sufficiently brilliant to attract candidates of good qualifications. The examinations are so carefully conducted that it is possible by the help of questions and answers to find out the best aspirants for any appointments, surely we may rely upon the selections of the best men for the service of our great dependency. There are many considerations, moreover, which ought to render India the worst field for the exercise of patronage which could be conceived by an enemy of that system. Once appointed, a young man sent to an up-country station in India is practically beyond the sphere of public criticism. Only his immediate superiors can be expected to have any facilities for criticising the manner in which he does his work. Bad appointments in India could scarcely ever be brought home to the careless patrons by whom they were made till so long after their date that responsibility would scarcely be acknowledged by the persons to blame. And yet a large experience of the subject convinces Dr. George Birdwood, at all events, that the competition system is a delusion and a snare. Nor does he rely upon his own opinion alone in putting forward this view. He quotes Mr. Matthew Arnold as having written, "I have borne a part in the examinations for the Indian Civil Service, and I can truly say that the candidates to whom I gave the highest marks were almost, without exception, the candidates whom I would not have appointed." Dr. Birdwood resorts to a somewhat hackneyed illustration of his argument, and one that of course is not admitted as fairly applicable by the friends of competition. He says, "Look to the points and the paces of your steed, but do not rest the choice of a coach horse on the issue of a race, for the simple reason that you do not want racers in harness." The advocates of competition would reply, though we do not want racers in harness, it is better to take a horse even for a coach if he is proved to have one among many good qualities that we require, rather than accept an animal at random that may have none at all. But while this objection is to a certain extent fair as against the particular illustration to which we refer, it does not, as a substantive argument, square with the problem before us. It is not true to say that under the patronage system candidates are taken at random. It is not fair to attribute an immoral indifference to the interests of the service to the Ministers or other authorities by whom patronage would be wielded. A desire on their part to make appointments which, on the whole, will do them credit, would influence their selection to an extent that should not be overlooked. "The old interest of the India House in their servants," says Dr. Birdwood, "and their reverence for the House and the old esprit de corps which bound the members of the service together, have all been destroyed at one blow by competitive examination." Of course, on the principle that offices under Government are prizes which in a democratic state all men ought to be privileged to scramble for on equal terms, the theory of competitive examination is perfect; but taking the higher view, that the public service itself is the first interest to be considered, it is surprising how many and what serious charges may be brought against the pet system of administrative reformers.

TO the Editor of ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

SIR,—As an exponent of all that is of interest to India and its Army, I feel sure that, recognising the justice of the claims which we Officers of the old Indian Army have in that which regards the Bonus Question, you will at this juncture allow me space enough hereby to call the attention of your many readers to a Notice which I, as Member of the Bonus Committee, take upon myself to issue, with the sole view and in the single interest of all to urge those who have any claims to support our efforts to obtain redress.

Justice alone is what we ask, and for that we may always appeal unhesitatingly to that first tribunal of the world—the British House of Commons.

In the name of all my late brother Officers I request you will insert this, and let the Notice have the advantage of your influential and wide circulation.—I remain, Sir, yours very faithfully.

FRANCIS PICTET, Captain.

London, 13, Pall-mall, S.W., 25th May, 1872.

NOTICE.

TO OFFICERS of the BENGAL, MADRAS, and BOMBAY ARMIES, at Home; and Widows of such Officers.

BONUS QUESTION.

The following circumstances have once more led to your grievances, arising out of the Amalgamation, being submitted for the consideration of Parliament.—

1. In the Government of Bengal Report, to the effect that Lord Cranbourne's Despatch has been carefully attended to, the signature of Lord Napier of Magdala, Commander-in-Chief in India, is wanting; the omission virtually implying dissent.

2. The Reports from both the Madras and Bombay Governments clearly convey a negative.

3. Her Majesty's Government, when passing the Act last year for abolishing the Purchase in the Queen's Army, inserted,—at the instance of Sir Charles Wingfield, M.P.,—a clause whereby Officers of the New Line Regiments—non-purchase seniority Corps,—(late Company's European Regiments) were to receive, and ten have already received compensation for Bonus.

4. Her Majesty's Government and Parliament, in passing the Act abolishing the purchase in the Queen's, included the over regulation prices, the practice of which was strictly illegal, indeed penal, and had never received any sort of official sanction at any time whatever; whereas the Bonus or step-purchase system adopted by Officers of the Indian Army more than Sixty years ago, had the direct approval and official sanction of the Court of Directors and the Board of Control, as promulgated in General Orders in 1836, when the Government of the East India Company pledged itself not to adopt any measures that might put a stop to it without due notice.

5. Officers at home, whether retired or on leave of absence, are all subjected to income-tax deductions, part of which are at this present moment employed in satisfying claims of Officers in the Queen's Army in respect to the over regulation prices, and of Officers of the New Line Regiment—in respect to loss of Bonus.

These are substantial reasons justifying a renewal of representation to Parliament, and the step now taken has every prospect of success.

The second week in June is the time approximately fixed for bringing the subject before the House of Commons; and not a day, therefore, is to be lost. EVERY Officer now in England should at once petition Parliament in support of the representation now being made.

This is the LAST opportunity Officers will have to obtain redress for their recognised claims, privileges, and grievances.

A Committee has been occupied for some time past in preparing the case, and they are actively assisted by several influential Members of Parliament.

Upwards of one hundred petitions have been received and submitted; but it is certain that this number is but a fraction of those who have more or less substantial claims to make.

It is thought that many are not probably aware of all the circumstances which now place it in their power to make good a case for the favourable consideration of Parliament.

The object in view is to obtain from the Government that compensation for loss of Bonus or step-purchase to which officers were entitled at the time of the Amalgamation,—(which at once and without any notice put a stop to the system,)—according to their respective positions in their respective regimental cadres at that time; this compensation being regulated by what each officer was then or would have been then entitled to expect or to demand of their respective juniors, in accordance with the system then universally in force, and agreeably to an approximate scale somewhat similar to those then in use.

What we ask is nothing more than our rights, in no way differing from those of our late brother Officers in the new Line Regiments, to whom the grant was unhesitatingly granted by Parliament last year.

Every Officer should at once communicate with the Committee, and those who have not now petitioned in support of the present case, may, by sending five shillings, have forms of petition sent them for their guidance or signature.

Every Petitioner having any sort of Parliamentary influence with local or other representative Members should exert it to the utmost.

Widows of Officers who have died since the Amalgamation are likewise invited to communicate with the Committee, with a view to including their claims with the rest.

Officers seeing this will please observe that no subscriptions are asked for. The essential is the submission of Petitions from every Officer having a claim, so that the case shall be consistently and substantially complete.

As our late brothers, in the new Line Corps, have been granted compensation (vide Clause 4, Act of 1871), for that which they were entitled to, by the custom of their Regiments, at date prescribed in that Act, so do we ask for that compensation (in full) to which, according to the custom in our respective regiments, we were entitled at date of Amalgamation.

The claims actually presented in India are but a fraction of what is really due to Officers; but the Committee cannot possibly do justice to them without, or unless they do severally present their claims, and thus support the action now pending.

We have now barely a fortnight for completing the case and for strengthening, by every means in our power, the hands of the many Members of the House who have undertaken to fight our battle.

Bear in mind that those, having any sort of claim, who neglect the opportunity thus offered of severally and collectively submitting the same for the last time, will virtually shut themselves out of all participation in the compensation which there is every reason to believe will be obtained, provided our case be fully made out and substantially supported by the Petition of every Officer having a claim.

Officers may ascertain the probable approximate amount to which they may lay claim by addressing the undersigned. Those seeing this Notice should urge others similarly situated to come forward.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.

WEARY OF LIFE.—Derangement of the liver is one of the most efficient causes of dangerous diseases, and the most prolific source of those melancholy forebodings which are worse than death itself. A few doses of these noted Pills act magically in dispelling low spirits and repelling the covert attack made on the nerves by excessive heat, impure atmospheres, over-indulgence, or exhausting excitement. The most shattered constitutions may derive benefit from Holloway's Pills, which will regulate disordered action, brace the nerves, and increase the energy of the intellectual faculties. Clergymen, lawyers, merchants, soldiers, sailors, and thousands of other persons have voluntarily testified to the benefits they have derived from this invaluable medicine, which puts fresh life into their enfeebled frames.

VOLS. I. TO IV.,

THE PEOPLE OF INDIA:

A SERIES OF
PHOTOGRAPHIC ILLUSTRATIONS OF
THE RACES AND TRIBES OF HINDUSTAN,
ORIGINALLY PREPARED UNDER THE AUTHORITY OF
THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA,
AND REPRODUCED AT THE INDIA MUSEUM
BY ORDER OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL.

EDITED BY

J. FORBES WATSON AND JOHN WILLIAM KAYE.

MEMORANDUM.

In addition to the copies of this work prepared for the use of the Government, the Secretary of State for India in Council has authorised the publication of an edition for sale.

The work will contain about 450 Photographs on mounts, in eight volumes, super-royal 4to., and it will be issued at £2. 5s. per volume. The First and Second Volumes are still on hand.

From the TIMES.

"We gather from the Preface that this work grew to its present handsome dimensions from a very modest commencement. It originated in the wish of Lord and Lady Canning to take home a private collection of photographs which might serve to recall the scenes and incidents of their Indian life, but as it advanced its importance began to be perceived, and Government, with a most judicious expenditure of public money, took it in hand. Very few of the photographs are unaccompanied by descriptions, often copious and graphic, of the subjects they illustrate, and the result is a singularly varied panorama of human life and character exhibited under almost every conceivable aspect. Although these four volumes deal with only a portion of the empire, there is scarcely a type of character, from the loftiest to the most debased, that is not to be found in them, and nowhere else, perhaps, in the world are peculiarities of character so strongly marked and sharply defined as in India. We might exhaust far more space than we can afford without giving the reader as all an adequate idea of the strange varieties of character to which these volumes introduce him."

TEXTILE MANUFACTURES & COSTUMES OF THE PEOPLE OF INDIA,

As Originally Prepared under the Authority of the Secretary of State for India in Council.

By J. FORBES WATSON, M.A., M.D., F.R.A.S.,

Reporter on the Products of India.

Folio, half-morocco, with numerous coloured Photographs. £3. 5s.

This work—by affording a Key to the Fashions of the People, and to the Cotton, Silk, and Wool Textiles in actual use in India—is of special interest to Manufacturers, Merchants, and Agents; as also to the student and lover of ornamental art.

"We congratulate Dr. Forbes Watson on having produced so useful and so practical a work, and on having diffused knowledge upon all material points connected with the clothing of the people of India, which heretofore had been unattainable. His book is written in a clear and thoroughly intelligible style throughout; it is handsomely got up, and embellished by numerous coloured photographs, from which the various styles of costume and portion of clothing, male and female, will be more readily understood than from mere description. The colours, too, of the various fabrics are given from the articles themselves, and we would in particular invite attention to the plates at page 113, all or most being figures of respectable Mohammedans in Upper India, in rich dresses, as conveying excellent impressions of colour and effect in Native Indian costume."—Times.

Summary and Review.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail are—from Bombay, May 13; Agra and Madras, May 11; Calcutta, May 10.

LORD NORTHBROOK's arrival at Government House on the evening of May '3 was followed by Lord Napier's departure on the 7th for Madras and England. The latter nobleman has left behind him a far more pleasing impression than that which he brought to Calcutta. "He was received in Calcutta"—says the Pioneer, "with reserve and indeed suspicion; he leaves it amid unusual liking and respect." His dignified bearing and gracious manners stood the comparison with people's memories of Lord Mayo; he has not shirked any call upon his official energies; and "those who saw most of him and watched him with most scrutiny, liked his character and respected his powers most." No one in short, as the Pioneer puts it, "would have believed how qualified he was for empire if he had not reigned." All this strengthens the conviction we have long felt, that, if he cared to remain in India, Lord Napier would have made a very fit, if not the fittest possible successor to Lord Mayo.

ANOTHER gentleman who has left Calcutta amidst the general regret is Major Burne, whose tact, courtesy, and popular manners probably helped to enhance the popularity of Lord Mayo himself. "Like master like man" was strikingly exemplified in his case, and all the leading papers on the Bengal side agree for once in covering him with farewell compliments. One virtue for which he is specially praised is the winning way in which he used to answer unsuccessful applicants for the Viceroy's favour. As the Pioneer happily says of him, "as Major Burne managed his refusals, an appointment made one man happy without discontenting the rest. . . . He put the difficulties of the case so strongly and fairly, yet in such a kindly manner, before a petitioner, as almost to extort his approval of his own disappointment, and the Governor-General was exonerated."

SIR S. FITZGERALD left Bombay by the mail of the previous week, and immediately afterwards Sir Philip Wodehouse took the oaths as Governor of Bombay.

THE Madras papers give full particulars of the dreadful floods at Vellore, caused by the heavy rains on the 1st and 2nd May. On the 2nd especially the rain came down in torrents, followed by a regular hurricane. In the afternoon the wind veered from N.E. to S., after which came a mighty rush of water caused by the sudden bursting of forty tanks in the neighbourhood. All Vellore was soon under water, including the native Sepoy Lines. Of the native town few traces remained afterwards, but the houses of the Europeans were not much injured. It is supposed that a thousand people have perished, two thousand been left homeless, and many more destitute.

THE Indian Mail brings us lengthy official papers on the Kuka Executions, and military despatches on the campaign against the Loshais. The pith of the former we have given further on; the latter we hope to republish shortly in the Mail. In India the reading of the papers on the Kuka affair seems to have brought a good many people more than halfway round to the opinions expressed by the Government touching the conduct of Mr. Cowan. At the same time a great deal of sympathy has everywhere been expressed for an officer whose error in judgment, if error it was, will have cost him very dear; and in several quarters subscriptions are being raised on his behalf. We note that Mr. Cowan's claim to have quelled a serious outbreak by his summary measures is opposed by Mr. Davies himself, who maintains that the Kuka bands dispersed on the 15th, whereas the executions took place on the 17th January. Even if his view be the right one however, Mr. Cowan may at the time have been misled by false reports, for Mr. Forsyth seems to justify his own execution of the remaining prisoners by the accounts that reached him of Kuka gatherings near Malodh. This is a point on which we should like to hear further.

MR. FORSYTH has gone to Oudh, taking the place of Mr. Gore Ouseley, who has been transferred to the Punjab.

LORD NORTHBROOK was to hold a levée at Government House on the 15th May.

THE Governor-General's order regarding the conduct of Messrs. Forsyth and Cowan, declares that there is "no evidence whatever to show that actual immediate danger was or would have been apprehended, either from the prisoners themselves, or from other members of the sect to which they belonged." With the surrender of sixty-six men and two women to a native officer accompanied by "three sowars and a writer" the Kuka raid "may be said to have come to an end." The small bodies of Kukas seen in the neighbourhood of Malair Kotla had disappeared, it seems, immediately after the failure of the raid. After telegraphing to his Government on the 16th January for leave to execute four men at once, Mr. Cowan on the 17th proceeded to execute fifty, although he had received no reply to his message, and had just received a note from Mr. Forsyth requesting him to send his prisoners to Sherpoor pending further instructions. While the last six or seven prisoners were being tied to the guns, Mr. Cowan, we are told, got from Mr. Forsyth a plain injunction to proceed according to law; but these men also were, notwithstanding, blown from guns. The Viceroy in Council declares that the course he followed "was illegal, was not palliated by public necessity, and was characterised by incidents which gave it the complexion of barbarity. It was commenced in opposition to the spirit of instructions received from superior authority, and in the absence of sanction invoked but not awaited, and prosecuted to completion in contravention of positive orders." Mr. Cowan ought to have kept his prisoners fast, and proceeded against them in due course of law. "No circumstance tends to justify or excuse him. The prisoners were helpless; a large number badly wounded. They had surrendered to very inferior numbers, and were under guard of a strong military force, which might have been increased to any extent." For these reasons the Viceroy in Council directs his removal from the service, and "does so with deep regret, as his previous character and conduct have been unexceptionable, and as he acted with promptitude in concerting measures for the repression of the movement."

WITH regard to Mr. Forsyth, it appears that, after deprecating rash or illegal measures, he on the 18th fully approved and confirmed all that Mr. Cowan had done, besides ordering the execution of the sixteen remaining prisoners. He owned that, in spite of his own feelings on the subject, he thought it his duty to support Mr. Cowan in an act which, as the Viceroy observes, "Mr. Forsyth himself had repeatedly forbidden." Although he acted within his legal powers, he "identified himself with the errors committed by Mr. Cowan;" he "failed to discern his duty as counsellor to a native Government in a serious emergency," and he also "acted in a manner inconsistent with the recognised policy of the Government of India." He is, therefore, removed from Umballa to a position in which "he will not have to superintend the judicial proceedings of any Native States."

It is said that one of the arguments certain to be used against the claimants of bonus-compensation, when their case comes, as it very shortly will come, before Parliament, will be the want of funds wherewith to meet the claims. If such a plea should be brought forward, we hope that some speaker on the other side will explode it by a reference to the twenty-four millions sterling of cash balances lying to the credit of the Indian Government at the end of last March. As the entire value of the bonus claims may be reckoned at only half a million, the reduction of those balances by little more than a fiftieth part will hardly break the back of the Indian Treasury.

IN one of his newly published volumes on the History of Orissa, Dr. Hunter contributes a few telling sentences to the indictment which all classes of people in India have long been echoing against the income-tax. This he describes as "the most recent, and to the Indian mind the most vexatious" of the various new forms of taxation invented by a Government in search of money. Declining for good reasons to attempt any general exposition of what seem to him the defects of this particular tax, he stops to point out one great objection to it, namely, "its unprofitableness in a country of small husbandmen." In Puri District, for example, peopled by more than half a million souls, "the total of all the incomes exceeding £50 per annum, and liable in 1870 to the income-tax is returned at only £106,500. With the tax at its present rate, 1 1-24 per cent, a territory of 2,504 square miles, and a population of 540,995, are therefore subjected to the harassment of revenue underlings of the worst type, in order to gather a tax which, without allowing for the cost of collection, barely exceeds £1,000 a-year. In Cattack district, 1½ million of people yielded as income-tax on trade profits only £2,504 in 1868-69; and the half million of Balasor only £610." Here we have in figures that tell their own tale a striking example of the difference between facts and theories in respect of the Indian income-tax. It is evident from the absurdly small total gathered on this account throughout India by the fiscal shears,—this year it will amount to only half a million if so much,—that the sheep are put to a great deal of suffering for very little purpose. We commend Dr. Hunter's "modern instances" to the attention of Professor Fawcett, who has resolved to bring the whole question before Parliament whenever Mr. Grant Duff unfolds his next Indian Budget. With all deference however to Dr. Hunter, this hard practical view of the income-tax has not, we think, been overlooked by English writers. If they have laid more seeming stress on other aspects of the question, it is only because its political issues contain and transcend the purely financial. The smallness of the yield lends all the sharper stings to the extortion and foul play involved in its collection.

SOME of the new appointments in the order of the Star of India will be received, we imagine, with general satisfaction. The present Begum of Bhopal, daughter and fit successor of the brave and able lady who stood so loyally by us during the Mutiny, is very properly made a Knight Grand Commander. The two new Knights Commanders are Mr. John Strachey, sometime member of the Viceroy's Executive Council, and lately Acting-Governor-General on the death of Lord Mayo, and Mr. Cracroft Wilson, a retired Bengal Civilian, formerly Judge of Moradabad, whose services at Meerut during the Mutiny have at length received their just reward. Among the new Companions are Major O. T. Burne, the popular Private Secretary to Lord Mayo; Lieutenant-Colonel G. B. Malleon, author of the clever, but one-sided "Red Pamphlet," and now Guardian to the young Sovereign of Mysore; and Lieut.-Colonel A. T. Etheridge, late Inam Commissioner for the Southern Marátha Country.

THE Indian Government has approved the project for a narrow-gauge railway from Nagpore via Kamptee and Toomsur to Dongeeghur in Chateesghur; and the scheme has been sent home for the consideration of the Secretary of State. The proposed line, about 162 miles long, is reckoned to cost only Rs. 42,000 a mile. The survey work was carried out in the hot season through a country very little of which had hitherto been mapped. Two routes had to be considered, and 400 miles of sections and surveys were carried out. The Indian Government has expressed its satisfaction with the work done by Mr. Armstrong, Chief Engineer, his assistants, Messrs. O'Callaghan and Sieveking, and the rest of the staff engaged.

ACCORDING to a Calcutta telegram of May 29, Calcutta has got excited in the midst of the hot weather by certain proceedings in which the Bank of Bengal and the Indian Government have played the chief part. The Government, we are told, are much blamed for allowing Mr. Dickson, Secretary to the Bank, to purchase Bank Bills on England for £80,000. It appears that this little stroke of business was at first arranged between Mr. Dickson and the Financial Department, and that the Government "although repudiating the transaction has accepted it." How any one can repudiate and accept the same thing at the same moment, we are not informed. We can understand the lady who "vowing she would ne'er consent, consented;" and people often find themselves constrained to sanction measures of which they may openly disapprove. The latter is no doubt the case with the Indian Government in this instance. They agree to accept the consequences of a transaction which they condemn, because a member of the Government has practically committed them to such a course.

FROM the same telegram we learn that Mr. Dickson has started for England, his health having utterly broken down. The Bank Shares, which had lately fallen about 100 rupees, have since rallied, and are now steady.

THE recent murder of two officers in the 108th Foot at Deesa by a private in the same regiment suggests the very query which has since been put by a correspondent of the Times. How does it happen that, even now in India, a soldier mad, drunk, or otherwise dangerous, can go forth at any moment with his loaded rifle and a pouch full of balled cartridges, to wreak his fury without let or hindrance upon any one who may have offended him? Some time ago, towards the end of 1869 we think, an order was issued in this country, that all ammunition not required for immediate duty should be stowed away in the regimental magazine. This wise order had been provoked by several cases of murder done or tried by soldiers armed with loaded muskets. In India however, where men's brains and tempers are much more easily affected by drink or passion or disease, it has not apparently been thought worth while to place any restriction on the free use of balled cartridges, in spite of the greater facilities which the improved Snider offers to any one afflicted with murderous impulses. But the same correspondent raises another question which seems to demand an early answer. It seems that the murderer, Private Butler, had somehow been restored to the service after a court-martial had sentenced him to ignominious expulsion therefrom. We are not told why that sentence was set aside; but from the accounts published in the Indian papers it is evident that the murderer was generally regarded as a notoriously bad character. In what way he was bad does not appear, and a so-called bad character sometimes makes a good soldier. But a man whose officers have declared him unfit to associate with his brother privates must, one imagines, be a very black sheep indeed.

WHAT causes the unhealthiness of Peshawar? On this point a controversy has lately sprung up in the Times between those who trace all the mischief to bad water and those who trace it all to bad air. Doctors and old Indians are equally prone to disagree, and the present dispute forms no exception to the trite old rule. It can hardly be the water that is solely or chiefly to blame, for, as one writer who lived many years in Peshawar truly remarks, "I have known, with the same water, Peshawar for two years at a time one of the healthiest places in India, and I have known it for the like period one of the most unhealthy places in the world." In face of the evil reputation which has lately gathered round that station, such a statement may sound incredible, but we believe it to be far from groundless. There is hardly a station in India whose character for healthiness does not suffer from time to time, from some perplexing change in its atmospheric conditions. The healthier stations now and then seem to change places with the unhealthy, and become for a time the abodes of fever, dysentery, and other diseases, from which the unhealthy stations obtain a respite. Peshawar may be said to belong to the latter class; and its unhealthiness, always perhaps latent, breaks out at uncertain intervals, but generally culminates at certain seasons of the year. On one occasion, according to "Another Old Indian," after a long drought of nearly two years, "a sudden storm with a heavy fall of rain came upon the place, which was immediately followed by a fever of the most malignant nature, to such an extent that nearly every soldier, European and native, was cast down by it." When the sun broke out, the earth had an "inconceivably horrible smell," as earth containing the seeds of malaria would have. On this occasion moreover it was not Peshawar alone that suffered. The whole valley was ravaged with fever and many villages nearly unpeopled, in places thirty miles away from the river which supplies Peshawar with water. Medical officers also frequently reported the prevalence of diseased spleens, an afterfruit of the fever, in all parts of the Peshawar Valley. Whatever part therefore water may play in rendering Peshawar cantonments unhealthy, the mischief can hardly be due to water alone. The truth, if we remember aright, is that rice is largely grown in the Peshawar Valley, not far from the cantonments themselves; and rice-fields were never remarkable for healthiness. Peshawar at certain seasons must be exposed to the same kind of malaria which renders the neighbourhood of the Campagna so unpleasant to Rome.

WHEN its promised contents shall have all been duly placed and catalogued, the Indian Court in this year's International will lose none of the attractions which commended it last year to all cultivated tastes. At present, like most parts of the Exhibition, it is only emerging from its crystal stage; and the want of a catalogue for what it already contains is much felt. Nevertheless those who saw it during Whitsun week had no cause to go away unsatisfied. Cotton and jewellery are of course the prominent subjects for this year; and in both fields there is much to interest and to please the most casual visitor. In the shape of cotton tissues we have samples of everything that India can offer, from the cheap but tasteful cloths spun for the poorer classes to the "woven-wind" muslins of Dacca, the brocades of Delhi, and the shawls of Northern India and Kashmir, all alike distinguished by harmonious colouring and purity of design. Some of the carpets are rich in colour and of bold but graceful patterns, and the coarser rugs and "sattrinjes" do credit to the workmanship of our Indian jails. Of jewellery there is a pleasing collection, embracing almost every kind of ornament, from the rude bangles of the poor to the fine-wrought necklaces and bracelets which only the rich can afford to wear. Of mixed gold and silver work there are some fine samples, and a choice collection of chased golden vessels from Burmah, coloured of a deep orange hue which by no means detracts from their beauty. Other vessels wrought in brass on a white ground have a very pleasing effect. The specimens of Bidri and Koftgari work, if few in number, are full of merit. One of the most curious and handsome things in the Court is a piece of the "Chadda" wrought by order of the late Gaikwar of Baroda as a covering for the tomb of Mahomet. This Chadda or sheet is a piece of fine network, made up entirely of beads and jewels of every size and colour. Much of the bead work consists of coloured glass, intermixed with thousands of seed-pearls and turquoises, with numbers of rubies, topazes, diamonds, and so forth, to fill up the pattern. Then there is some pretty lacquer-work from Kashmir, and a small but choice collection of carved sandalwood, ebony, and inlaid work on wood and ivory from Western India. One end of the room is filled with quaint but prettily decorated musical instruments of every kind. If a band of Native musicians were at hand to play upon them, the visitors to the Exhibition might discover a new attraction in the Indian Court.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

MONDAY, June 3, 1872.

THE NATIVE MARRIAGE BILL.

IT cannot be said that the Indian Marriage Act has been hurried through the Supreme Council. Whatever holes may be picked in it with any show of fairness, this at least is certain that the new Act, which still awaits the final sanction of the India Office, has undergone much careful revision and passed through the fire of searching criticism from the first stage to the last. Under the title of the Brahmo Marriage Bill Sir Henry Maine bequeathed it to his successor more than three years ago, and one of Mr. F. Stephen's last official duties in India was the helping it through its closing stage of embryonic existence in the middle of last March. Through all the intervening time it has been kept either by friends or foes before the Indian public. If there is no formal and express machinery for evoking Native opinion in India on any subject, we need hardly remind our readers of the many indirect ways in which a Government at all inclined to look before it leaps in legislative matters can generally learn what it wants to know, in a country where free speaking is limited in practice only by the speaker's personal prudence and self-regard. Some questions no doubt there always are, on which a foreign government like that of India can never feel sure of getting at the truth from people who are either bent on concealing it, or are prone by habit to give agreeable answers to leading questions. In the case of the Native Marriage Act however it needed, we imagine, only a little care and common shrewdness to keep the Government clear of pitfalls and wrong turns. One source of misunderstanding was removed by a few simple changes in the Bill and its title, which extended it from a measure of relief for the more advanced Brahmoists to one that would benefit any native belonging to none of the recognised creeds of the country. It has become in short a general instead of a special measure; instead of providing a form of marriage for any particular sect, it simply enables two people to become lawful man and wife, for whom no marriage rites are furnished by the existing laws of the land.

It is impossible, however, to please everybody, and the objections raised against the measure by some classes of natives and their supporters in the Calcutta Council were re-echoed in a letter which lately appeared in these columns. Our correspondent's complaint has, we think, been fairly answered by Miss Collet,* who has long made this particular question her own. It seems clear, indeed, from the wording of the Act, that every due precaution has been taken against hasty marriages on the part of young and headstrong native lovers of whatever creed. It is possible, of course, that suspicious or misinformed natives may regard the new measure as designed to "break the ground for a forcible extension of Christianity;" but it is certain that anyone taking the benefit of this Act must begin by declaring that he does not profess the Christian religion; nor is it likely that the member of a polygamous body will be tempted from his old creed by a measure which makes bigamy penal for those who marry under its provisions.

That "the utmost possible consternation prevails amongst all classes of natives all over the country" is a statement which nothing we have heard on the subject tends to justify. In his powerful speech on behalf of the Bill Mr. Stephen admits the fact of "a certain amount of opposition," which had arisen only at the last moment, and he does not pretend to dispute the gravity of legislating against the wishes and feelings of any section of the native community. But it is also, he reminds us, a "very grave thing for the Government of India deliberately to abstain from doing that which it has unanimously declared itself bound in justice to do." In such cases all that a prudent legislator can do is to balance the arguments on either side and then act according to the best of his knowledge and convictions. On the one hand the Government had pledged itself to pass this particular measure, which on the other has been more or less vehemently opposed. The mere fact of that opposition would not have justified the Government in shelving the Bill. The papers laid before the Council showed that many of the natives consulted had pronounced in favour of the Bill, while others were opposed to it on "grounds which would condemn the most characteristic part of our English policy and legislation;" on such grounds namely as had been taken up against the acts abolishing suttee, legalising the remarriage of Hindu widows, and protecting native converts from the forfeiture of their inheritance. Others again oppose the measure, "not only in complete ignorance of its principles, but although they themselves propose in its place measures of a much wider nature." One gentleman for instance, Baboo Gunga Pershad of Moradabad, winds up a vehement attack on the Bill by the following bold suggestion, which goes far beyond Mr. Stephen himself:—

I acknowledge the truth of the Hon. Mr. Stephen's statement that if we will have Bills for marriage for each sect, the possibility is that the Statute-Book becomes a regular jungle (as he calls it) of Marriage Acts; but to this I reply, why frame separate Bills? Why not acknowledge in one brief Act the validity of all marriages which may in future be solemnised in British India, no matter in what form they may be, and let the Brahmos invent their code, which will equally be valid under the Act?

For a staunch foe to interference with marriage customs the worthy Baboo goes terrible lengths in the most radical direction. If many other opponents of the Bill are equally ready to stultify themselves after this fashion, Mr. Stephen will have small reason to repent of his steady persistence in a measure which, thus regarded, errs only on the side of extreme moderation.

The Baboo was one of six gentlemen consulted by Mr. Inglis, the member in Council for the North-West Provinces. If Mr. Stephen's description of them can be trusted, their answers were little more than echoes of the questions put to them. Having drawn a startling picture of the evils which in his opinion would arise from the Bill, Mr. Inglis asks his native correspondents what they think of it. We are not surprised to hear that they "say ditto to Mr. Burke," adding to the picture various touches of their own. From Madras on the other hand comes a body of opinion more or less favourable to the Bill. Five Native gentlemen consulted by the Acting Collector of the Kistna District declare in effect their belief that the Bill, if not urgently demanded, is at least "on the whole a measure to be desired." The Collector of Malabar took counsel with several Hindus of his district, who all "see no objection to the measure as at present proposed." The gentlemen consulted by the Acting Collector of Madura think that "as the law now stands the proposed Bill can have no very injurious effect upon their religious and social system, except in so far as it confirms Act XXI. of 1850 [for the protection of Native converts], and removes another obstruction from the path of those who may desire to renounce their religion." We are not told how far these opinions were prompted by the manifest leanings of those who reported them, but from the passage we have just quoted, they appear to have been offered in good faith. With regard to the opinions gathered by the Collector of Tanjore we may speak with greater confidence. In order to ascertain the views of people in his district, Mr. Cadell called a meeting of "a few gentlemen of intelligence," to whom the Bill was duly explained. At first they viewed it with apprehension, but in time the more enlightened among them came to the conclusion that the Bill would do no more than legalise marriages among the communities concerned; and that "inasmuch as the right of inheritance to the property of a Hindu is not interfered with any further than it has already been by Act XXI. of 1850, they may well look upon it with indifference."

But how about the encouragement which the Bill, according to some people, holds out to clandestine and foolish marriages? That is an objection, says Mr. Stephen, to which the Christian Marriage Act of 1865 is far more open in theory, and yet in practice no such harm has yet come of it, although two persons, aged respectively sixteen and thirteen, may be married by a registrar without notice, without consent of parents or guardians, and even without declaring their religious belief. In the present case all these doors to rash or secret marriage are carefully closed.

The supposed temptations to rash or unworthy marriages—between a young Hindu squire, for instance, and a dancing-girl whose charms transcend her virtues or her social standing—are reduced in the present Act to their lowest, as Lord Napier of Merchistoun pointed out, by the provision which requires the written consent of parents or guardians unless the contracting parties are twenty-one years old.

But the new Act, say its opponents, will favour unbelief. That a Hindu or a Mohammedan should talk thus may be natural enough. Believers of either school cannot be expected to tolerate free-thinking or dissent more cheerfully than Christians of old-established sects are prone to do. But, as Mr. Stephen forcibly puts it, we may well wonder that such things should be said in this case by Englishmen, especially by those who "promote missionary schools and other forms of European education." Whatever effect may be produced by mission schools, it is certain that European education is and must be the most powerful solvent of native creeds. How then, asks Mr. Stephen, "can we encourage men to learn that which we know will utterly destroy their religion, and yet put them under the heaviest of all possible disabilities for learning the lesson we teach, unless they consent to add hypocrisy to unbelief?" To object on such grounds to the present Act, in the face of all former legislation against this or that native practice or tradition, is very like straining out the gnat after swallowing a dozen camels.

In dealing with the notion that the Native Marriage Act will be viewed with general alarm in India as a covert attack on native customs and institutions, Lord Napier draws a just distinction between measures whose working can be generally felt at once, like "the prescription of a new head-dress, the use of a new cartridge, the exaction of a new tax," and a measure which merely yields "a speculative privilege," which "attacks no visible interest, but operates silently and unseen." Unless a popular outcry can be kept up by artificial means, his Lordship can see nothing dangerous in the present symptoms of discontent. There is nothing to fear, he thinks, either from those who have already broken with the creeds and customs of their fathers, or from those who combine sound English culture with the retention of their ancestral faiths; still less from the masses who know and will long continue to know nothing at all about the new Act. The only class of people who are likely to regard it with an evil eye are "a certain middle class of natives, who are partly educated, who are disposed to criticise the policy of the Government without being fully cognisant of its real views, who are strongly attached to the old standards of faith and social life, and are suspicious of innovation from authority—who, in fact, are half enlightened." It is very likely however that critics even of this class will soon verify his Lordship's previsions, if nothing be done to keep up an artificial excitement over the Act. Let the question be allowed to sleep, and the present feeling must soon die out. Nor, adds his Lordship, "must we forget that, as education becomes more diffused, the suspicions and resentments to which I have alluded will have less and less force. What gives offence now, will give no offence a few years hence."

Correspondence.

AN OLD STORY REVIVED.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

DEAR SIR,—You were good enough to publish some time ago a communication from myself relating to the accusations brought by several Indian papers, and more especially by the Indian Public Opinion, against the Maharajah of Kashmere, of having conspired to compass the death of Mr. Hayward, and inciting the Chief of Yasseen (his most bitter enemy!) to carry out his suggestions. In my letter I entered into details showing how groundless were the inferences on which this base accusation rested, and how unfair the imputation cast on his Highness, without a shadow of reliable evidence on which to depend. I described all that had been done by the Maharajah in the matter, both before and after the murder; all that had, so far, been said by Lord Mayo towards exonerating him in the eyes of the Home authorities from the first stain sought to be cast on his Highness; and, finally, alluded to the fact that a solution had been afforded on the spot by one of Major Montgomerie's most trusted native agents, travelling in search of geographical information, and that his inquiry had resulted in a complete confirmation of the correctness of the report of Mr. Drew without his knowing anything of that report.

I was not then in possession of the narrative of this subordinate, who was a highly intelligent Pathan havildar of Sappers, but have within the last few days had the pleasure of reading a detailed account of this adventurous man's journeyings. It is full of interest, as throwing a great flood of light on the topography of the hill country between the right bank of the Indus and the head waters of the Chitral and Oxus Rivers. In the course of his progress the traveller fell in, at the durbar of the Badshah of Chitral, with the very Meer Wullee, servant of the Yasseen chief, who had been ascertained by Mr. Drew to be the instigator of the murder of Mr. Hayward, and received from his own lips the following account of the foul transaction:—

I was in no way inclined to quarrel with Hayward saheb, for I had seen him on a former occasion, while he was travelling through our country, when we interchanged civilities and presents, and parted good friends; but, on this latter occasion of his travelling through the country he was forcibly pressing coolies and other people to carry his baggage from stage to stage on his way into Badakshan, besides taking supplies of food for his followers from the villagers by force; and several complaints from the zemindars reached me to this effect. On Hayward saheb coming up to the village where I was, I remonstrated with him, and advised him not to act as he was acting towards the people: whereupon the saheb turned round on me and abused me, telling me that this country did not belong to us but to the English, and altogether his attitude on the occasion was very violent, so much so that I feared his using personal violence to myself, and in consequence I kept quiet. The saheb encamped for that night near the place where I was, but towards morning I sent some sixty men to a place a little distance ahead, called Ooshgoom, with orders to wait in ambush for the saheb and his party, and on their way thence to fall upon them and kill them—which they did, killing Hayward saheb and seven of his servants.

Knowing, as we do, that human life is held in no estimation by the ferocious tribes who inhabit those inhospitable regions, and that murder is there frequently considered more commendable than otherwise, we cannot be surprised at the open manner in which this villain boasted of his cold-blooded crime; but I am sure your readers will be more than surprised to hear that the newspaper editor who had been persistently foremost in his accusations against the Maharajah of Kashmere, and makes insinuations as to his being the prime mover of the murder, to whom the account of the Pathan traveller has been communicated, could not bring himself to confess his grievous error, and publicly to express his regret for having unjustly accused an innocent man of participating in the murder of a traveller whom he had done his best to aid and assist in his explorations, though carefully warning him against the dangers to which he was exposing himself.

Let me add that these murderous villains in Yasseen were the witnesses whose evidence Mr. Hayward received as reliable when he brought his frightful accusation of the massacre of the Yasseenees by the troops of the Maharajah to the notice of the British public! Verily truth does lie at the bottom of a well. It has, in this instance, been accidentally fished-up by an obscure traveller, and the good name of the Kashmere Prince been altogether relieved by his testimony from the slightest imputation. The editor in question accepts the narrative, and yet has not the common honesty to make the only reparation in his power to the high-minded chief whose reputation he had so unjustly and falsely assailed.

With apologies for again troubling you on this subject, but assured that your sense of justice will induce your giving the above a place in your columns, I remain, yours faithfully,

INDIAN RAILWAYS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—Does England contemplate parting with India, or is she determined to keep it?

If the latter, how can we account for her indifference to put that magnificent conquest in a posture of defence against any enemy who might attempt to invade it from Cabul or Candahar?

The English nation is believed to have invested nearly 200 millions in India, and to draw from it annually upwards of 12 millions sterling.

It is impossible to protect India effectually without railways, or at least tramways. Troops and guns and warlike stores cannot be quickly conveyed without them. Those who witnessed how soldiers were conveyed during the Mutiny, fifty a-day, in ten frail palanquin carriages, dragged by miserable ponies; and how district officers were ordered, at a month's notice, to manufacture thousands of carts, and break into the yoke thousands of bullocks, for the conveyance of commissariat and warlike stores, must feel indignant at the idea that a second Cawnpore massacre may be caused, owing to the supine nonchalance of the Government.

Is it, or is it not, necessary to have a railway or tramway from Attock to Hyderabad, on the left bank of the Indus? If it be necessary, why does Government persistently ignore the necessity of making a railway from Mooltan, through Leia Maree Murkund, to Attock?

It is said that a railroad through the Salt Range opposite Kalabagh would be expensive; but the money wasted in one year on transports and barracks would pay for this portion. From Mooltan, through Leia, to Maree, a railroad might be made at a moderate expense.

Let us suppose that an invader from Afghanistan were to make a feint on Peshawur, and a real attack on Dera Ghazee Khan; how could we extricate our army in time from out of the Peshawur valley? Could we fall back on Lahore before the invader had reached that city? It would be an unpleasant telegram which could announce to England that half a million of Tartars were at Umballa, harrying the whole country, shutting up the Governor-General and his astonished Council at Simla, and asking the perplexed Commander-in-Chief, on the Chenab, to catch them over a railway broken at every mile, and through rivers the bridges over which had been effectually blown up by Russian Engineers.

Is it wise to depend entirely on the Seikhs for our communications, by having only one railway to Attock? With a second line from Mooltan to Attock we could still keep open communications, even in the event of the Seikhs or the Mahomedans turning against us. It is not probable that the two sects would combine and co-operate.

I fear that years may elapse before the railway from Kurrachee to Mooltan will be opened. Cannot you exert your voice to hasten the completion of this important work?

The Lahore and Attock line is making but slow progress. Can you inform your readers how the delays have been caused?

The Times of the 27th May has published the following return :—

1870.	Exports of railway iron to British India during four months, from January to April	73,681 tons.
1871.	Do.	Do.	Do.	Do.	21,672 "
1872.	Do.	Do.	Do.	Do.	2,723 "

Is our Government going to sleep?—Your obedient servant,
T.

CAPITAL OR REVENUE EXPENDITURE.

The Englishman observes that in State enterprises, as in private undertakings, it is always possible to decrease the apparent expenditure, and to present a clean balance sheet, by putting down current outlay to the capital account. This, too, without any intentional dishonesty, for in great works, such as railways or canals, a large intermediate class of charges come up yearly for additions or improvements, partly of a temporary, partly of a permanent nature. If it becomes a rule to construe such charges from the capital account aspect, a considerable sum may be annually withdrawn from the head of current expenditure without doing violence to the actual facts. Such a practice, however, brings its own punishment, producing a sense of easy-going self-complacency and security which sooner or later prove to be but a Fool's Paradise. It was against the principle which this practice represents that Lord Mayo so sternly set himself in September, 1869. His determination to know the truth, and the whole truth, to face the facts at however great a sacrifice of individual preconceptions, and to make the public aware of the real state of the case, was a stroke of statesmanship which has assuredly brought its reward. The question is complicated by the circumstance that more than one Indian financier has taken the opposite view. We need not enter again into the discussion as to whether posterity should be made to pay for our barracks. But this discussion is only one of a hundred, smaller individually, but of similar character, and shows how much may be said on both sides of the question. Mr. Laing looked at it strongly from the capital account point of view, and held that outlay intended to provide for the political security of the Empire might be legitimately made a part of its permanent debt. Mr. Massey took the same side with such strength as the gods had vouchsafed to him; and the Bombay merchants, in their manifesto to the Secretary of State, suggested a system of terminable annuities, a plan which we ourselves have advocated, and which is supported by public opinion. On the other hand, the home authorities have, with unusual steadiness, maintained and enforced the opposite views of the question. Works of a really permanent character must, so far as their cost of construction is concerned, be provided for by additions to the public debt; but works of an intermediate and half-temporary half-permanent sort have for the past three years been charged to current expenditure. A tendency has now made its appearance to re-open this question. We have so often declared our opinion on the subject that it is needless here to repeat it. But we do trust that whatever is done will be done openly. If the principle of paying from the current revenue for everything not of a purely permanent nature is to continue to be strictly construed, good and well. But if the present stringent construction of it is to be impaired we have a right to know the limitations and safeguards to which the more easy-going system will be subjected. This is precisely one of those practical questions with which the Finance Committee might advantageously deal.

THE UNCOVENANTED EUROPEAN.

The Madras Times holds that even if it were true that the only object of the Duke of Argyll's despatch is to prevent the employment of the sons of European officers in the uncovenanted service, it would still regard it as a most mischievous one. It is in the highest degree important for us, if we mean to hold India, that we should continue to maintain that family connection between England and India that did so much for us in the past. Formerly an Indian civilian or military officer looked forward to placing one of his sons in the service, and he consequently regarded India much more as his home than a man does now. He felt that his stake in the land did not end with his own career. This has been pretty well destroyed by the competitive system, and if the Duke has his own way it will be utterly destroyed. Civil and military officers in India will find themselves forbidden to seek a career for their sons in the country where they are themselves compelled to serve, and where all their present interests and associations are. We should say that the history of the world does not supply such another instance of trying to handicap loyalty and good service. We should like to know what nation, save us English, would forbid those who maintain the national rule in distant lands from establishing their children there in the best way they can. From this point of view, the policy of the India-office appears to us to be equally cruel and impolitic. That officers' sons will continue to enter the uncovenanted service we know very well; but it will be the sons of officers who have taken care to cultivate political and personal connections at home, rather than those who have spent a life of hard work in the East.

Bengal.

THE ARRIVAL OF THE VICEROY.

Soon after the appointed hour the Sir William Peel landed Lord Northbrook, the new Viceroy of India, at his Capital. A considerable crowd of both Natives and Europeans had assembled both at the Chandpal Ghat and along the Esplanade, through which the carriages passed, to obtain a sight of the new Governor-General, who looked none the worse for his long and tedious journey from Bombay. On landing his Lordship was received by Mr. Bernard, Secretary to the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, the Sheriff, the Commissioner of Police, and the Officiating Master Attendant, a guard of honour of the 14th Regiment presenting arms; the band of the Regiment played the "National Anthem," and twenty-one guns thundered a royal salute from the ramparts of the Fort. The route was lined by the remainder of H.M.'s 1-14th Regiment, the 8th Native Infantry, a detachment of the 10th Native Infantry, and the 13th Native Infantry, whilst the Calcutta Volunteers in good numbers formed a guard of honour at the foot of the grand staircase. No time was lost in getting into the carriages, and the procession (if three carriages can be dignified by that name) moved off to Government House.

On the arrival of the carriages at Government House, the volunteers, who had assembled in front of the grand staircase, presented arms, and the band played the National Anthem.

His Excellency the Viceroy elect was received at the foot of the grand staircase by his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, accompanied by Major O. T. Burne and Captain the Hon. J. Napier, A.D.C. to the Viceroy, and was escorted by the Lieutenant-Governor to the top of the staircase, where he was received by H.E. Lord Napier of Merchistown, and by him presented to H.E. the Commander-in-Chief, the Lord Bishop of Calcutta, and the Members of Council. His lordship was at once conducted to the Council Chamber, where he was sworn in as Viceroy Governor-General of India, taking the usual oath and the oath of allegiance. A few gentlemen, mostly officials, military and civil, had collected on the top of the grand staircase to assist in the reception of the new Viceroy, who cannot have been much impressed with his reception, which could not be described as enthusiastic. The volunteers turned out well, being, we understand, 300 strong, although it was mail day, when many of them could not possibly be spared.

The new Governor-General is a slightly built man of average height, with a somewhat determined face, firmly compressed lips, intelligent and clear eyes, and a generally shrewd expression. He was very self-possessed under the scrutiny of the eyes which were critically watching his every action, but still seemed glad, as who would not be? when the "business" of the hour was over.—Englishman, May 10.

THE LOSHAI EXPEDITION.

The following report on the doings of the Muniore contingent will interest some of our readers :—

"TO THE MAHARAJAH OF MUNIPORE.

"Muniore, April 16.

"My dear Rajah,—On the return of your contingent from the small share assigned to it during the Loshai expedition, I request you will do me the favour to convey to the officers and men my congratulations on their successes.

"I cannot even surmise whether the policy pursued in our frequent intercourse with the Loshais and their chiefs will meet with the approbation of Government, but I am quite sure the Government will not fail to notice approvingly the enduring, subordinate, and moderate spirit which has pervaded all ranks of the contingent.

"Having marched to the southern frontiers of Muniore, a distance of nearly eighty miles from the capital, the force was there encamped for a period of forty days in a close valley, where the nights were bitterly cold, and fogs arose as regularly as sunset and remained until noon the following day. The men consequently suffered a good deal in health, but I heard no repining, and am not aware that a man returned before being permitted to do so.

"The same causes, combined with deficiency of clothing, prostrated most of the coolies upon whom the force depended for the conveyance of its supplies, and produced privations which compelled its temporary retirement.

"A panic spread through the hill population, which rendered it impossible to replace the coolies from that source, and I am aware how great trouble you had to meet the exigency; but you did so, and when the sick were replaced and supplies replenished, the force resumed its post—a measure which relieved me of much anxiety, and for which therefore I feel personally indebted to you.

“The services of the contingent may be summed up as follows:—

“Our Kookie auxiliaries were the first to come in actual conflict with the enemy. They lost a subadar who was much esteemed both by yourself and by their own race; but it was a consolation to them that the attack, which was within your own territory, was avenged by five of the enemy being killed.

“In January the force sent out escort and food to captive fugitives from Lenkamo villages, and brought into camp 227 men, women, and children. In February it afforded like assistance to 392 captives from Poiboi's northern villages. In the escape of these it may be said to have been directly instrumental; other captives have also from time to time reached the camp, numbering altogether 649 men, women, and children.

“In addition to the above the force has afforded protection to 2,002 refugees from Loshai villages, and 110 refugees from Kamhou's villages, making a total of 2,112 refugees, men, women and children.

“The escape of these poor creatures is, of course, primarily due to the movements of the Cachar column.

“All the above have found an asylum in your territory. Lands have been allotted to them, and arrangements made for providing them with food until they raise crops for themselves. The interest you have evinced in them has been most gratifying to me, and I trust that under your fostering care they will soon perceive the advantages of a more civilised life, and prove a valuable medium in our future intercourse with the Loshais. The excellent position of ‘Seebou,’ taken up for the contingent by your officers, with my concurrence, had all the strategic advantages we anticipated. While there the force held Kamhou's tribe in complete restraint. It compelled the Loshais to so divide their force, in order to watch its movements, that on the 25th of January, when Brigadier-General Bouchier's column was attacked by Poiboi's clan, at least half that chief's force, with his principal leader, Damboom, and nine subordinate leaders, was in front of our camp—a diversion, to my mind, of great importance, in so far that it saved the British force from much greater loss.

“The day after the final retirement of the contingent from Seebou it had the good fortune to intercept a force of Kamhou's, carrying off to their hills 962 of the inhabitants of Loshai villages, which they had completely devastated. This force had crossed the frontier in the interval of the first retirement, and was not aware of the return of the contingent, hence its surprise. A brief struggle ensued, in which the three chiefs and fifty-three of their followers were made prisoners, and fifty-four muskets taken; four of your force being wounded. The Loshai captives were all released, and their property restored to them. By this feat Kamhou's power has received a shock from which it will not readily recover, but not before it was required. For years past he had merely simulated friendship, while playing a fast and loose game, one of alternate pretended submission, raid upon your distant villages, and repudiation of participation or responsibility.

“Not long ago the Burmah authorities complained of the ravages committed by his dependents upon the village of Beetop, in the Kubban valley. About the same time his tribe committed a raid upon the village of Lengsole, in your territory, on which occasion one man was killed and seven were carried into captivity; and as recently as the 15th December last they committed a raid upon three other of your villages, killed four women and seven men, and carried sixty-seven into captivity; making a total of seventy-four of your subjects still held in captivity by Kamhou.”

“All doubts as to the criminality of this tribe have been set at rest by the recent escape of one Kosa Sunnaputter, who was brought face to face with the chief ‘Kokatung,’ and accused him, and his non-denial.

“The amount of good this success has done for the future peace of the country cannot be over-estimated. It has checked a career of devastation upon the neighbouring tribes which, in all probability, would have terminated in the complete absorption of the Loshais and the occupation of their country by a powerful and ruthless tribe, who would have preyed upon our outlying gardens as the former have done, and given us all our work over again.

“I can only say I feel great pleasure and satisfaction in having been associated in an act so replete of mercy to our fallen and contrite enemies, who, I have every reason to believe, will now prove peaceful and friendly neighbours.

“In addition to the 54 muskets taken from Kamhou's force, the captives and refugees have brought with them 171, making a total of 225 extracted from the hands of the raiding tribes.

“Your commander, Major Sevalier Chamber, and his second in command, Major Tungal, have kept their men well in hand, and have shown much judgment and consideration in their intercourse with the Loshais, and deserve my best thanks. Gokool (interpreter) has also been most useful to me, and deserves commendation.—Believe me, your sincere friend,

“W. F. NUTHALL, Major-General, Officiating Political Agent, Manipore.”

Miscellaneous.

ACCIDENT TO MR. BAYLEY.—We regret to hear that Mr. E. C. Bayley, the Home Secretary, met with a serious accident on Friday. He was out riding, and his horse falling, he broke his arm badly.

THE CHOLERA IN PURTABURH.—The following is the very dismal cholera account of the Purtaburh district up to the end of last month:—Total attacked, 6,694, of whom 4,574 died. In the last week, from 24th to 30th April inclusive, the number attacked was 1,327, and of deaths 944.—Pioneer.

DEATH OF GENERAL BUTLER.—Lieut.-General J. Butler, Bengal Infantry, died at Simla on the 30th ult., entered the service as ensign on the 12th January, 1821. He served in the Punjab, 1848-49, with the force under Brigadier Wheeler, and was present at the assault of the height of Dullah. The cause of death was general debility.

A PRINTERS' STRIKE.—We understand that the compositors of the Central Government Press have been on strike for the past three days. The cause of this is said to be the attempt to introduce piece-work, instead of payment by monthly salary. We understand that with some difficulty the last Government of India Gazette was produced. A strike in Calcutta—and that too in a Government office,—is certainly curious.—Indian Daily News, May 10.

LORD NAPIER.—Lord Napier (says the Indian Church Gazette) will leave Calcutta in the Sumatra on Tuesday next. If his short tenure of office has offered no opportunity for display of statesmanship, there have been no faults of taste, no lack of kindness and liberality upon which unfriendly criticism could fasten. Lady Napier's kind offices to the sick in our hospitals have been unremitting; and during her short stay we believe she has made herself acquainted with almost every philanthropic work in Calcutta.

FINANCE.—The scion of the House of Baring has not arrived in India one week too soon if he is to manifest any of that practical skill in financial management for which his immediate ancestors were reputed. Sir Richard Temple's lunatic treatment of the monetary interests of the country is just now in full swing. On Tuesday £300,000 more of bills on England were bought at Calcutta through the Bengal Bank. The legality of these transactions is very doubtful according to the provisions of the Bank's charter; but that is a matter of secondary moment compared with the dire injury which will be inflicted on the mercantile affairs of the country by persistence in the Finance Minister's present course. This thirty lakhs now announced makes about £750,000 purchased, in one shape or other, for remittance on Government account during the last three weeks. If his Excellency Lord Northbrook could delay his departure from Calcutta for a week, in order to master this abnormal money dealing, and devise some measures for alleviating the mischief now brewing by Sir Richard, he would do much to give the country confidence in his quality.—Times of India, May 13.

LORD NAPIER AND MAJOR BURNE.—The P. and O. steamer that yesterday morning broke ground at Garden Reach bore away from our midst the late Viceroy, Lord Napier of Merchistoun, and Major O. T. Burne, Earl Mayo's private secretary. It is unnecessary for us to say that the departure of these gentlemen is not unattended to the community of this city with feelings of sincere regret. During the time that Lord Napier has held the high and responsible office which the melancholy event at Port Blair called him to assume he has exhibited not only the higher qualities of the statesman, but a delicacy of feeling, a courtesy and discrimination, having regard to the exigencies of his position, that beget confidence and command the respect of intelligent men. The departure of Major Burne, we, in common with others, regard with sincere regret. We would carefully guard against overlaying these few valedictory remarks with anything that might savor of unnecessary praise or presumptuous laudation. Yet we are bound to add that in no case have the varied and rare qualifications that go to make up an efficient private secretary been so brilliantly reflected as in Major Burne. To all the essentials of a man of tact and business he unites the instinct, and courtesy of the true gentleman. To every one, high or low, with whom he came in contact, he was uniformly polite, uniformly patient, always sincere. May both he and Lord Napier have a safe and pleasant voyage home, and to both we sincerely but heartily wish a God speed.—Indian Daily News, May 10th.

SIR W. MUIR ON EDUCATION.—At the opening of the Allahabad Zillah School, Sir W. Muir addressed the assembly in Urdu, encouraging the scholars to redoubled industry and exertion, and adding some earnest remarks on female education as affording the only prospect of real social progress and enlightenment. He praised the Baboos settled in Allahabad, who brought with them from Bengal the habits so happily there introduced of teaching their girls. But in respect of the community in the North-West, he confessed with sorrow and concern that he saw little sign of progress. He had often enforced upon them the necessity of educating their daughters and their wives; the Government was ready to assist, but it could only aid the efforts made by themselves—it could not force its school upon them. And yet, without female education, the ignorance and darkness now overshadowing the land would never be removed, nor would satisfactory and steady advance be made in the enlightenment of the nation and in its social progress. Without female education the result would be fitful and temporary, and fail altogether of the national regeneration, after which they should all be striving. He might liken attempts at education which left out the female sex to the mountain water-course that came down with a foaming and turbid torrent for a few hours or days, leaving here and there pools of water, green spots, or clumps of trees, but all else sand and rocks and stones,—a hopeless wilderness; whereas the results to be expected from the simultaneous instruction of the female sex would resemble rather the perennial stream, whose source, derived from the snowy range, yields a full and unfailing flow of water, clear and cold, spreads in its course verdure and fertility, life and refreshment all around.—Pioneer.

THE WEATHER AND THE CROPS.—The following epitome of the reports on the state of the season and prospects of the crops appear in Saturday's Gazette of India:—Except in the plains of the North-Western Provinces and Oudh, the fortnight seems to have been one of variable weather, with light rains in most regions. In Madras more rain is wanted, though prices are steady and the general condition of the Presidency is described as "not unpromising." In Sind prices are steady; in Guzerat, Khandeish, and Nassick, they have slightly risen; in the Deccan a slight fall is perceptible. In Bengal the winter harvest has been got in, and is, on the whole, a good one; ploughing for the kharif crops is very generally going on. For this more rain would be acceptable. Behar indigo is said to be "excellent," but in Jessore that crop is "not looking well." In Assam tea prospects are good. In the North-Western Provinces the rabi harvest may be said to be completed. A full analysis of the yield will be found in the body of the report. From this it appears that the hopes entertained even so late as a fortnight ago have not been realised, and that the harvest has turned out below the average. The Oudh harvest is over. The yield was reported last fortnight "generally very good." In the Punjab the harvest has commenced and promises to be an average one. Things are unchanged in the Central Provinces. In the Berars there has been rain, which has been felt as a relief, and ploughing has commenced. But the want of water is still a danger. Rain is much wanted in Mysore and Coorg; but agricultural operations appear to be going on notwithstanding. In Central India the harvest has been, on the whole, good.

IMPORTS.—CALCUTTA, May 9.—The Import trade is dull, and demand does not revive in the Cotton Piece Goods market to the extent looked for. The directors of the Bank of Bengal made no change in their charges for money at last date of advances.

EXPORTS.—CALCUTTA, May 9.—Jute: There has been but little business doing; fine qualities scarce, but prices are unaltered. Saltpetre: A fair business has been done, and prices remain the same. Rice: Prices of the best Setta are slightly lower, and we now quote this description at 3-10 to 3-11. Linseed: Several contracts for forward delivery have been entered into at an advance. Raw Silk: Owing to the small supplies on hand, and as the March bund will be very small, business continues dull. Corahs: The market still continues firm, and a sale of 2,000 pieces of P. L. C. mark is reported at 174 per corgo.

MONEY MARKET.—CALCUTTA, May 9.—EXCHANGE: There is no improvement to report in business in any branch, nor is this usually the season at which any marked changes do occur.

THE LATE HURRICANE.

A correspondent of the Madras Times, May 4, describing the scene, writes:—

At eleven I retired to rest. I have an indistinct recollection of a gradually increasing commotion till about 3.30 this morning, when my front door was blown suddenly in, split in two, with all the bolts broken. Everything breakable in my bedroom was at once broken, and the whole house filled with sand storm (mixed with sea-spray), which rushed in through the opening. Up till six or seven A.M. all I and more than half-a-dozen servants could do was to keep the doors, which looked seawards, of my residence from being blown in. About 8 o'clock again a door was blown clean in, and all the furniture in the room upon which it opened was scattered about, and pretty nearly 100 rupees' worth of damage done. About 9 o'clock a tree was blown half down, and a large bough hurled against the roof of one of my godowns.

So much for myself. After partaking of a hasty breakfast—half sand, by the way—I started off to see the town. Everywhere heaps of leaves and twigs, broken boughs, and up-rooted trees, choked up the roads. I heard from a credible authority two men were lying dead on a road near the beach, from effects of injuries probably caused by falling trees. Everywhere I noticed the greatest consternation amongst the natives. Some of them, to whom I spoke, said that this was the greatest "Pusa" (i.e., hurricane) which had ever visited Madras. As I drove through one street my horse was flung down by the violence of the wind, and my carriage sent up against a wall. Shortly after this I visited the houses of several gentlemen at St. Thome. The pandal of the house of one was blown down. He told me he had tried with a brougham and a pair of strong Australian horses to get into town, but had been kept back by the sheer force of the wind. At the house of another I saw a palm fallen clean across the drive in front of his house. This gentleman had striven, with two others, to walk into town, but found the way almost impassable because of the shower of hurling sand; whilst policemen met him and his party and told them trees were falling on the road they were going, and advised them not to proceed. Leaving St. Thome, I had actually to go through Luz to reach town. All along every road and street trees and boughs of trees were lying. Here a roof had been caved in by a falling branch. I passed plantain-gardens, three-fourths of the trees in which had been levelled. Palms, neems, and portias, of the principal trees, especially suffered. Of all trees, I noticed that the broad leaved portia had been made the greatest victim to the ravages of the wind. Pandals of houses were lying in fragments along the streets through which I passed. At one time I passed a house, outside of which lay an inverted hack-carriage with every spring gone. At another place I saw an unfortunate jutka. It had evidently been shot into a door. A corner of the little conveyance had gone clean through a pretty stout panel. In the market streets the temporary pandals, and even tiled temporary roofs, were knocked about in all directions. In one place I saw a few houses entirely dismantled, and the roads everywhere I drove were mere running streams. Such was the scenes I witnessed with my own eyes along the streets this morning.

THE SCENE AT THE REACH.

About half-past two I drove down to the sea beach to witness for myself the fearful sights of shipwreck. I shall try as simply and as plainly as I can to depict in words the prospect which met my eyes as the sea met my view. All along the beach were vessels of all sizes and in all positions. Some were partially, and some wholly, dismasted. There they lay, scarcely moving, in the surf. The fearful breakers sprang up in foam, and well nigh overwhelmed them every moment. And here and there could be seen the survivors on board, clinging to the wave-washed sterns of the unfortunate vessels. Wave after wave swept over them, yet they clung on, in desperate hope of life. A dense crowd of Europeans and natives lined the beach. Amongst the Europeans I saw the fair anxious faces of several ladies. First of all I turned my steps to the pier. Ah, what a sight! A great gap in the centre told where a native vessel had passed clear through, and left a chasm which only lacs of rupees can ever hope to bridge over. On the Royapooram side of the pier were numerous small vessels aground, around which the white surf flashed angrily. One vessel had come up quite close to the pier, and lay so closely and evenly alongside, that one could have half supposed it was there for the purpose of lading cargo. A little beyond, however, lay another vessel high and dry, at right angles to the fiercely beating waves. All around the foam was blotched by black pieces of wreck—spars, masts, chests, bales—rolling, tossing, and dashing one against the other.

I now went on a little further to see the scene on the shore opposite to the Hotspur. Further particulars of what occurred here will doubtlessly be known to-morrow. The sight which presented itself to me was a marvellously affecting one. Hundreds of Europeans (I believe the Governor and the leading men of Madras were amongst them) will ever remember these few hours on the beach. To the north was a large iron vessel imbedded close to the sea-line, with no one on board. Next to it, just as close to shore, was another but smaller vessel. Southward of this latter, fifty yards distant, was another vessel, also very near to the beach, and connected therewith by a hawser. Between these two latter, several hundred yards out to sea, was the skeleton of the Hotspur. Yes, there she was, that noble ship on which perhaps some of my readers may have been passengers in days of yore,—there she was, all her midships staved in, her masts gone, her bow just protruding over the waves sufficiently to cast up wild spurts of sudden spray, and what remained of her good crew clustering on the stern, and every minute overswept by huge rollers. Just as I reached the scene a successful rocket carried a line to the vessel. They had been firing all day, and only now, 3 P.M. at the earliest, had a rocket been fired straight. The party had their heart in the work. They were eager to fire straight. There were their fellow creatures dying before them, in the merciless sea, and you could see by the eyes of those who directed the rockets they were only too eager to fire direct to the object aimed at. But the truth must be confessed. They had either no practice, or their rockets were very unreliable ones. The firing was most utterly wide of the mark in the majority of instances. As I reached the scene, a wild hurrah broke forth. Even the natives joined in it. It was a keen electric peal of gladness, which was echoed over the boiling waves from the wreck in the offing. Shortly afterwards a sailor attempted to come to land by the rope thus flung to the shipwrecked crew. Again a wild hurrah breaks forth, as he is pulled in. "He is safe!" "No he has sunk!" "Look! a wave has overwhelmed him fathoms deep!" "He is drowned!" "No look—he rises!"—and the cheers ring and re-double as the man reaches, by a great effort, the cross hawser, which is attached to one of the ships near the beach, and laboriously climbs into the vessel, and from thence gets to shore. Scores of gentlemen press round the poor fellow, who staggers, with bloodshot eyes and smiling face, on the terra firma. I heard him say, in answer to the important query, "What do they want on board?"—"They want a basket if you can send one." Alas none was obtainable. He had been the bearer of a line from the shipwrecked crew, but it had been torn from him, whilst he was buffeting with the furious surf.

Now came a pause, and thereafter I witnessed one of the most daring deeds ever done. Who is the man who performed that wonderful deed? He ought to have the Victoria Cross! I am certain half of those who witnessed the brave deed would have liked to have struck up a life-long friendship with that noble sailor. He tried to carry a line out to the sinking crew of the Hotspur. Amid the frantic cheers of those who saw him, he trusted himself to that single long rope which was now tightened a dozen yards above the fierce billows, and now sank as low beneath them. He reached half way. We could see the poor fellow's efforts wax feeble and feeble. Higher and higher the foamy waves hurled themselves over his head. He was a hundred yards from land, and between him and land were not only raging waves, but great pieces of splintered masts and wrecks. Death was before, death behind. Down broke, high over his head, another terrible wave. He loosed his hold. We saw a black head on the foam drifting towards the wreck of a vessel to the north. For five minutes he was lost. "Is it not a shocking sight?" "Poor man, he died a noble death"—such were the exclamations in the mouths of all. All gave up hopes of him—when lo! a lifeless body in the surf amongst the logs of wood, bales, and other debris of the wrecks. Half a dozen men sprang recklessly into the water. They bear him up insensible into the crowd on the beach. He is alive say some, and others erroneously shake their heads. At length the poor fellow raises his head a little and articulates, just loud enough to be heard by a popular Madras surgeon who has rushed forward to assist him—"I have saved them, have I not?" Brave man, it was his second life, as it were, and he uttered the thought which was lost on his mind as his enfeebled hands let go the rope, and he dropped into the sea. Mr. Editor, can you, or any of your readers tell the world the name of this thrice-gallant English sailor?

I saw another marvellous instance of English calm unflinching pluck. A man was trying to pass to land along the hawser from the Hotspur carrying a line to save his fellows. Wave after wave dashed him hither and thither. When he found he could hold on no longer, he held the hawser rope with one hand and with his other calmly took off his trousers, and leapt into the waves. The chances he knew of his safety were two to one against him, but he kept his head cool, and did the best he could for himself at that trying hour. And He who helped them who help themselves saved him.

THE GREAT FLOOD AT VELLORE.

VELLORE, May 5.—From a few obliging residents at the place I was able to learn that last Monday and Tuesday were cloudy days. Wednesday morning was dark and heavy, and towards the afternoon rain set in and continued to pour the whole of that night, and the state of things was not changed next morning. At about eleven o'clock on the forenoon of Thursday a very heavy downpour came on. It rained so hard that one was hardly able to see any object at the shortest distance. It was blowing from the north-east, and by two o'clock there was a regular hurricane. The wind howled and raged most furiously, and the rain fell in frightful torrents. Suddenly, at a little before four o'clock, there was a fall, and the wind, that even before seemed not at times to blow from the N.E., veered to the South. After this there was a great cry raised by thousands of voices who felt themselves in danger by the coming down suddenly upon them of a great body of water, which swept everything before it. All Vellore was soon under water, and hundreds of lives were lost, and thousands were ruined. The rush of water was caused by the breaking of some tanks that are situated about two and a half miles from Vellore. These tanks are said to be the Veerabuchee-agraharum, the Ootary, the Theroobady, and the Allapuram. It is believed that the waters of the Veerabuchee-agraharum and the Ootary coming down with united force and being joined by the broad streams of water that flowed down the hills with which Vellore abounds caused the great destruction that attended the floods. The portions of the town that suffered most by the mighty rush of waters were the part of Vellore occupied by the lines of the native regiments and the Cusbah, which contained about eight or nine hundred houses, in each of which there were five souls on an average. The Officers' lines and the houses of the European residents only suffered so far that the walls of the compound were breached, and the water had got into some of the houses and had damaged the property in them. The native population were observed to be in great danger when the floods set in, and as soon as assistance could be rendered it was afforded, all the officials and military officers turning out and doing their utmost to save life and property. Colonel Robson, the Officer Commanding the 28th Regiment M.N.I., Captain Godfrey, the Adjutant of the corps, and Dr. Fox and other officers of the corps, and Major Mayne, Mr. White-side, the Collector, Captain Macleod, Captain Johnson, Lieutenant Price, the Superintendent of Police, and Mr. Bourke, the Inspector of Police, were out, and behaved very heroically during the floods. In the lines of the native regiments the 28th Regiment suffered slightly. But the houses of the drummers of this corps were carried away. The families of native corps stationed at the place suffered very much indeed, particularly the families of the 14th Regiment. The Havildar of this corps has reported that most of the women have perished. A noteworthy circumstance in connection with the loss of the women is, that most of the women who have perished were Go-sha women, women who are kept in a state of confinement always. The floods extended from the central gaol, about two and a-half miles from Vellore, up to the houses of the European residents. During the floods the water in some parts of the Cusbah was as much as eight feet, and even in some of the houses of the European residents there were more than four feet of water.

I have hitherto stated what I have heard with regard to the floods. I shall next proceed to describe what I saw.

THE CUSBAH.

This village has suffered the most. If it had been a village it certainly did not look like one when I saw it. What I beheld was a plain here, a plain there, a few tumbled-down houses in another direction, and a mosque standing a little way off. This was what was to be seen of a village that only a few days ago contained about 700 or 800 houses, each house being on an average occupied by five persons. The spectacle was sad to behold, but the tale of the manner in which the hundreds of lives were lost was still sadder when heard. The inhabitants of the village were struck with consternation when the waters came down upon them with mighty force. Some of the people ran to the houses of the European residents and were saved; but of those who remained in their own houses none escaped. It is related that in one of these houses there were assembled about 150 persons. The house was that of a pensioned havildar. Of the large number assembled in the house a great many were women of the 14th Regiment who had taken refuge there. Of these 150 souls all perished save the pensioned havildar, who alone remained to tell the mournful tale.

THE LINES OF THE NATIVE REGIMENTS.

Next to the Cusbah were the lines of the native regiments with regard to the damages sustained. The houses of the families of native corps were mostly swept away, and those that remained were deserted. The lines of the 28th Regiment had not suffered to so great an extent. But such of the houses as had been touched were completely destroyed, and the occupants had lost their all.

THE EUROPEAN RESIDENTS.

The houses of the European residents, including the officers of the native regiments, were not injured, though the water entered some of them; but the wall of every compound was breached.

THE GENERAL APPEARANCE OF THE TOWN.

Perhaps a resident of the town might be able to say what Vellore was like. But, as I saw it, a very large portion of it could only be described as a heap of ruins. The Fort is intact, and the houses of the European residents remain as they were. But in the native parts of the town it is hard to believe that the grounds which are now empty had but recently houses standing upon them. The sweep of the waters has been so clean as to leave no trace of houses behind.

THE LOSS OF LIFE AND PROPERTY.

It is yet not known what the loss of life is, but it is immense. On a rough calculation it is considered that it might be safely said that between 500 and 600 persons have died by the great disaster. While the loss of life is immense, the loss of property is equally so.

Those who were rescued from a dreadful death, or who were fortunate enough to escape from the same through their own exertions, have been for the present sent to the mahal in the Fort, where their wants are attended to. It would appear that upwards of 3,000 people have been rendered houseless.

The waters subsided on Friday, and as soon as they were able to do so the police with the assistance of the military set about to search for the bodies of the dead. Two hundred and fifty convicts were procured from the central jail, and, under the guard of a company of sepoy of the 28th regiment, were made to dig up the ruins for dead bodies. On Friday 169 bodies were found, on Saturday 38, and to-day about 20 bodies. The search is being continued. The police are being reinforced from all directions. A batch of fifty constables arrived this morning from Salem. Another batch of fifty constables, under the charge of a European constable, came in this evening from Coimbatore, and a third batch is expected to-morrow morning. The bodies that have been removed are being buried behind the Cusbah and the fort. I have heard that the sappers and miners from Bangalore will be sent down to Vellore to remove the debris.

Major Drever, the Acting Inspector General of Police, was at Vellore yesterday, and sanitary precautions are to be adopted to prevent the breaking out of any epidemic.—Madras Times, May 6.

FURTHER PARTICULARS.—LOSS OF NEARLY 1,000 LIVES.

VELLORE, May 5, Evening.—The disaster at Vellore is far more serious than was at first supposed. The results of the flood, so far as they can be at present ascertained, may be summed up as follows: about 12,000 people are houseless, or have lost their habitations; from 3,000 to 4,000 of these are absolutely destitute, being dependent, at all events for the present, on public support; about 1,000 people, it is now estimated, have perished, and the destruction of property has been very great. Indeed, it is wholly impossible as yet to give anything like a reliable estimate of the pecuniary loss occasioned by the flood.

Miscellaneous.

AN ACCIDENT AT TRICHY.—A visitor from this station tells us that Mr. Webster, Acting Collector of Trichinopoly, had a very narrow escape last Friday week. His carriage, drawn by rather a skittish mare, was about to enter the cutcherry compound, when the animal took fright, and dashing through the gates careered with its burden all over the enclosure, and succeeded in damaging the carriage very considerably, and inflicting a broken arm upon the coachman. Mr. Webster, we are glad to hear, escaped unhurt.—Madras Athenæum, May 11.

THE 19TH N.I. AT TRICHINOPOLY.—We learn from Trichinopoly that the 19th Regiment N.I. arrived at the station by the midday train from Negapatam on Friday, May 4. The steamer which brought the regiment from Singapore was unable to land them for a day or two, owing to the stormy weather we have been having along the coast. The 19th N.I. are located in tents in the neighbourhood of the 38th N.I. lines, as no huts are available for them. On dit that the 38th and 26th Regiments are to attend the camp of exercise at Bangalore when that great event comes off.

LEAD IN HYDRABAD.—We learn that in a nullah sixty miles west of Eldabad, in the Nizam's territory, Mr. Fredden has picked up one specimen of lead ore and one of antimony. The discoverer is of opinion that the institution of a proper search in the Hills will be rewarded with success, and that the lead ore contains a percentage of silver and will be a valuable article of commerce. If Mr. Fredden had not been obliged to leave Bombay for England on medical certificate he would undoubtedly have helped in substantiating the report he sent in regarding the two specimens he discovered. Mr. Hardy Johnstone, C.E., who has rendered the working of the coal-fields such a success, is now doing his utmost to further this last discovery.—Bombay Gazette.

THE LATE CYCLONE.—On Sunday evening last the British ships Prince Rupert and Her Majesty, which arrived in our roads from Aden, brought intelligence, the former that she picked up two dismasted vessels (native craft) and towed them into the roads, and saw two others, Madras Lighthouse bearing N.N.W. 110 miles; the latter that she saw three vessels, names unknown, dismasted east of port. The shipwrecked sailors obtained their discharge certificates from the master attendant yesterday. The Viceroy is to take eight of the distressed men instead of seven. The men proceeding by her are second mates, stewards, and cooks, for whom employment is hard to be got in Madras. The eight who lost their lives in the wreck of the Ardbeg consisted of John Hobson, commander; Frederick Hunt, able seaman; Jackson, chief mate; William Basters, steward; Henry Redcliff, able seaman; W. Mills, able seaman; John Faulkner, able seaman; and G. Knight, able seaman; the bodies of only the two former having been recovered. One of the dhonies which was wrecked on the northern side of the pier was towed into the sea yesterday morning by three masula boats and with the assistance of a large number of masula boatmen, who had been hard at work with the wreck for three days. Endeavours are also being made to tow another dhony into the sea, and there seems to be every hope of success.—Madras Athenæum, May 11.

THE DESSA TRAGEDY—MISIMPRESSIONS CORRECTED.

That Butler had deliberately planned the death of Captain Laurie there is not now the slightest doubt. He left his barrack room the previous evening with his rifle and ammunition, and it is stated that about 9 o'clock he went to Captain Laurie's house and asked to see him. The servants told him that their master was not at home, which was the case, and the man left. He must have then concealed himself in the hedge which surrounded the compound, and remained there the whole night; at any rate there were traces which went to show that he must have passed some hours there.

Some have suggested that he might have been under the influence of liquor, but for this there does not appear to be the slightest foundation, and even had he been so when he left the barracks the hours he passed in the cool night air must have entirely sobered him before morning. That he was mad is also an idea scouted by all who knew him. The only motive that has been discovered for these hideous murders is that Butler was marked for extra drill by the Adjutant, and that Captain Laurie, his company officer, refused to interfere on his behalf. The character given him by his comrades is, that he was a man of a sullen, revengeful, cowardly disposition, a man who scarcely spoke to, or was spoken to by, anyone.

The murder of Lieutenant Munro must have been an after-thought of the assassin's, which entered his head on seeing his unfortunate victim approaching. That he may have had a desire for his life also is very likely, but it is impossible that he could have laid any plans by which he could ensure the death of both at one and almost the same time. The ruffian ruthlessly seized the opportunity which fate or chance threw in his way.

It has been stated that these murders were caused by the two officers in question being over-strict in the execution of their duties, but such a report may at once be contradicted. Those who knew the late Captain Lawrie will one and all say that he was anything but a disciplinarian, and if Lieutenant Munro was more severe in the performance of his duties, he was certainly not more so than his position as Adjutant demanded. In short, all can testify to the fact that no two officers ever had the interests of their regiment more thoroughly at heart, or tried to do more both for officers and men. Both were officers and gentlemen in every sense of the word.

It has also been stated that Butler was no worse than the rest of the soldiers, and that he committed these horrible crimes with the approval of his comrades. Nothing could be more untrue. Doubtless in the ranks of the 108th there have been and may still be some men of bad character; but in this case it is only fair to say that all ranks join in hearty execration of the man who has thus deprived them of two friends whom it will be hard to replace.

To an outsider it may appear strange that a soldier should be able deliberately to shoot two of his officers and then to commit suicide, firing in all some ten or twelve shots, without interference of any kind; but to those who know the spot where the occurrence took place, and all the minor details of the case, it is not so strange as it may appear. The murderer had everything in his favour, he had a breech-loading rifle, with several rounds of ammunition, it was scarcely daylight, the regiment was falling in for parade, and the band was playing not a great way from the scene of these fearful tragedies, thus preventing the shots being heard at any great distance. Thus so little was known of what was going on that several officers went to parade, and were in ignorance of what had happened till the regiment was dismissed.

That the man may have had some other reasons for the committal of these murders, besides the one of being marked for drill, is possible, but up till now they remain undiscovered, notwithstanding all investigation. Think and consider over the matter as one will, the only conclusion that can be arrived at is, that the Almighty, for some unknown but doubtless all-wise reasons of His own, has seen fit to allow a villain to perpetrate two of the most diabolical murders that have ever blotted the pages of the history of the Army.—Times of India.

Miscellaneous.

DEPARTURE OF THE FLYING SQUADRON.—The men-of-war composing the Flying Squadron, which has been an object of considerable interest during the past fortnight, left Bombay harbour on the 6th inst., at about four o'clock P.M. The Cadmus, one of the Squadron, left for the China Station at eleven yesterday morning. It is supposed that she goes there on a three years' commission. As she steamed round the other vessels of the squadron, their yard-arms were manned and the crews of each in turn saluted her with ringing cheers. The remaining ships, the Narcissus, Inconstant, Immortalite, Volage, and Topaz were under steam shortly after noon, as it was expected that sailing orders would have been given at that time, but it was not until just before four o'clock that they cast off their moorings and got under way. The Narcissus led the van, followed by the others in the following order:—Inconstant, Immortalite, Topaz, and Volage. After describing a circle round the flagship (the Glasgow) the whole squadron steamed out to sea in the foregoing order. Rear-Admiral Cumming accompanied them as far as the outer lightship, and then returned in the Glasgow's steam launch. The squadron left for Mauritius, from whence they will proceed to the Cape, where the new Admiral (Admiral Campbell) will join, and further sailing orders will be received. A number of spectators were assembled on the Apollo Bunder to see the "big" ships take their departure. The view of the vessels as they passed the outer lightship in a line was an extremely pretty one. The officers and men of the squadron may congratulate themselves on the good impression they have left behind them.—Times of India, May 13.

DEPARTURE OF SIR SEYMOUR FITZGERALD.—Sir Seymour Fitzgerald embarked last Monday afternoon at the Apollo Bunder, in the presence of a number of spectators of all classes. The road leading to the place of embarkation was lined on either side by a detachment of the 11th N.I., and a guard of honour of the 21st N.I. was drawn up at the Pier-head. His Excellency was expected to arrive at the Bunder at about 5 P.M., and long before that hour numbers of ladies and gentlemen and natives of every class had assembled to bid farewell to our departing Governor. At the stairs where his Excellency was to embark the crowd was very dense, and our guardians of the peace had a somewhat arduous duty to perform in keeping it in order, for all were anxious to have a last look at the "Governor Sahib," and, as it afterwards turned out, to give him a parting cheer. Shortly before six o'clock his Excellency, accompanied by Sir Philip Wodehouse and attended by a numerous body guard, drove on to the Bunder. Sir Seymour took leave of many friends on the Bunder, and some little time was occupied in hand-shaking and farewells. The spectators pressed forward and almost turned the party in. A passage to the stairs was soon cleared, and his Excellency, accompanied by several members of his family, embarked on board the boat of the Superintendent of Marine. As soon as the boat was clear of the Bunder and the salute commenced to boom forth, the spectators on the Bunder gave vent to their feelings in loud and prolonged cheers, which Sir Seymour acknowledged, bowing repeatedly. The boat rowed direct to the P. and O. Company's mail steamer Pekin, by which vessel our late Governor left these shores.—Times of India, May 13.

THE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN FINANCE.

The date of adjournment of the committee being Tuesday, the 28th May, the chairman (the Right. Hon. A. S. Ayrton) and two or three of the members attended; but there not being a sufficient number of members present to form a quorum, the sitting was adjourned to Friday, the 31st May. The non-attendance of members on the former date was attributed to the Epsom Meeting and the eve of the "Derby." It was expected that the examination of Messrs. Harrison and Gay, which has lasted many days, would be resumed on Friday; several other witnesses from India are expected to arrive and be examined in the course of the session. The progress of the investigation into the whole system of the finance of the Indian Government has been rather slow, at the same time intricate and elaborate, and this has led to the opinion, that short as the time is before the close of the session, much remains to be inquired into before the committee can have any good basis for its final report.

On Friday the Committee met, when Messrs. Harrison and Gay's examination was upon the Finance and Revenue Accounts of the Government of India generally. Nearly every departmental office and its administration was rigidly inquired into, the Committee taking the establishments seriatim, and thus going through the last Return of East India Finance and Revenue Accounts for 1870-71 from beginning to end; as it proceeded, examining the witnesses and criticising the accounts with unsparing freedom, and occasionally having something to say of a fault-finding character against certain charges. The expenditure for printing and stationery used by the Government first came in for animadversion, on account of there appearing to be an enormous quantity of printing executed of official papers hitherto done by hand by copying clerks. The contracts for printing were shown to be only profitable in certain cases to the printers who contracted to do the Government work, while the voluminous Indian Blue-books printed, choked up the State archives with masses of printed matter which was, after all, consulted by few readers. It was mentioned that a certain Governor-general, whose name did not transpire, had some few years back commenced this system of printing official documents of all kinds and almost indiscriminately; the system he inaugurated still continued. The introduction of the system had been the more expensive as the Government had had to superannuate the copying clerks, whose department had been superseded, and, at the same time, to pay for a much more costly establishment, viz., the Government Stationery Department. We understood that the increase of expenditure under this head had been from £57,000 in 1856-7 to £250,000 in 1870-71. Before leaving the chair, Mr. Ayrton announced that Sir John W. Kaye, Secretary of the Political and Secret Department of the India Office, would be the witness on the following Tuesday (to-morrow) on the subject of the political charges for India.

With reference to there being no meeting on Tuesday last, through non-attendance of members, Sir T. Bazley moved that, for the future, five instead of seven members of the Committee should constitute a quorum, as at present.

GREAT SOUTHERN OF INDIA RAILWAY.

The annual general meeting of this company was held on Tuesday at the London Tavern; Mr. J. Chapman, the chairman presided.

The report, an abstract of which has already appeared in our columns was held as read.

The Chairman, in moving the adoption of the report and statement of accounts, said they were all fully aware of the delays that had occurred in respect of the extension line. At last they had been allowed to proceed with the works, and they had lately despatched four engineers to direct the necessary operations. He trusted that the line would be a most valuable addition to their system, and tend to develop the resources of that part of India. It would pass through the cotton districts of Tinnevely and Tuticorin, and extend their system to nearly four hundred miles of railway. The Secretary of State in Council having suggested that the amalgamation of the three lines in the Madras Presidency—namely, the Madras, the Great Southern of India, and the Carnatic Railway Companies—would be desirable, the directors had taken the matter into consideration, and they believed the amalgamation would be attended with the same good results as had attended amalgamations in this country, tending to uniformity of action and economy in management, and they had therefore intimated to the Secretary of State their readiness to co-operate in carrying out the suggested measure upon such fair and equitable terms as might be agreed upon being satisfactorily arranged. But nothing had yet been done in this respect. When matters were brought into a tangible form it would not be difficult to bring them to a definite conclusion. So soon as any definite scheme for the amalgamation of the three companies was submitted to the directors they would lay the same before the shareholders for their approval or otherwise. He would ask Mr. Bruce, their consulting engineer, to give them some information as to the Southern Extension line.

* Subjects (a) and (b) are alternative; a candidate will not be allowed to take up both.

Mr. G. B. Bruce said that the Southern Extension line would go from Trichinopoly to Muniachee, branching thence to Tinnevely and Tuticorin, a length of 216 miles. The gauge, which at first was not fixed, was now settled as the metre gauge. The original estimate for constructing the extension line was £4,617 per mile, including rolling stock, but the Government authorities went over the various items in the estimate and struck out some of them on account of the line being on the narrow gauge, altering the estimate to £3,972 per mile; but it was only fair to say that this estimate did not include the great increase in the price of materials, especially of iron, that had since occurred in this country. No doubt, one advantage of the delay in commencing the works had been that their engineers, while remaining in India, had made observations during the wet seasons that would enable them to execute the waterways with more certainty and less risk of danger hereafter to the works from floods or anything of that kind. The line would cross a country having many waterways and sometimes various floods. The diminution of cost was not all due to the difference of gauge. The actual difference in cost was not so much between the broad and narrow gauge. The broad gauge in India was 5½ feet, and the metre or narrow gauge was 3ft. 3½in., the difference being 2ft. 2½in. A third line would be laid down from Trichinopoly to Tanjore, so that there should be no break of gauge on that portion of the line, but there would be a break of gauge from Madras. They had reduced the length of platforms at stations and other works to reduce the estimate. Another matter was that there would be no fence to the narrow gauge lines; the other lines had iron fencing. The weight of the rails was the difference in reality between the broad and narrow gauge.

The report and statement of accounts, seconded by Mr. Norton, were adopted unanimously. The retiring directors, Mr. G. Norton and Mr. Roupell, were re-elected, and also Mr. Whitworth, the retiring auditor.

The proceedings concluded with a vote of thanks to the chairman and directors, to Mr. Notman, the secretary, and to Mr. Bruce, the consulting engineer.

JUDICIAL COMMITTEE OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL.— KNOTT v. THE NAWAB NAZIM OF BENGAL.

This was an action to recover the sum of nearly £100,000, for services alleged to have been rendered to the Nawab. The claim was for £20,000 under an alleged agreement, and also a commission of 12½ per cent. on sums recovered and received by the Nawab in consequence of the services of the plaintiff, which would amount on the sums received by the Nawab to about £80,000 more. In 1790 Lord Cornwallis formed a fund for the benefit of the Nawabs, called the Nizamut Deposit Fund, which has since comprised the accumulations of the two lacs of rupees annually deducted by the Company from the nominal stipend of 16 lacs of rupees, which ought to have been paid in full to the Nawabs. The amount of the fund, it was believed, was now between £1,500,000 and £2,000,000. This fund has formed the continual subject of dispute between the Company and the Nawabs, who claimed to have the money paid to themselves, or as they might wish, for the benefit of the family and for the general purposes of the Nizamut; the East India Company and the Government claiming either an absolute control over it, or, at all events, a right to deal with it for the purposes of the Nizamut at their pleasure. Since 1857 the present Nawab has been very active in asserting his claims on the Government of India as to the fund and other matters affecting the interests of his family. In consequence of those exertions, Lord Canning, in 1862, wrote a despatch unfavourable to his claims. Lord Canning's view was that the Nawab had no claim as of right either to the payment of the annual sum or to any appropriation of the fund, except only at the pleasure of the Government. The Nawab was extremely dissatisfied with this decision of Lord Canning, and endeavoured to obtain a reversal of it. With this view he retained the plaintiff, who had been a member of the uncovenanted Civil Service of India, as his private secretary, with a salary of 1,000 rupees a month, or 2,000 a year, and employed him for some time in India in preparing the appeal. On his leaving India for the purpose of coming to this country to prosecute the appeal, the Nawab entered into an agreement with him, which was now in question, and the effect of which, as the Court construed it, was that he was to receive a salary of £4,000 a-year, and, if he succeeded, a sum of £12,000, and also 12½ per cent. on the sums recovered by the Nawab in consequence of the plaintiff's exertions. The plaintiff came to this country and exerted himself in the prosecution of the Nawab's appeal, and his case was brought before the House of Commons by Sir F. Kelly. In 1864 Sir Charles Wood gave his decision, which did not reverse that of Lord Canning, nor declare any hereditary right in the Nawab to the income, but only declared that a withdrawal of the allowance would be a violation of the spirit of the assurances given to the Nawab's predecessors, and that there was no intention to disturb existing arrangements. As to the Deposit Fund, Sir Charles Wood did not affirm any right of the Nawab to an appropriation of it, but only said that it would be very proper to consult the Nawab about its appropriation, as it was for the benefit of his family. Sir Charles Wood subsequently sanctioned, at the request of the Nawab, an annual charge of Rs. 40,000 (£4,000) out of the fund to meet the expenses of his son's visit to England in 1865, and the Government had since also paid Rs. 100,000 (£10,000) out of the fund for portions for the Nawab's daughters. Again, in 1863, the Government sanctioned an advance to the Nawab of a like sum for the expense of his own visit to this country. The question then arose between the Nawab and the plaintiff, his agent, whether the latter had earned his right to the reward stipulated for his services in case of success. Down to 1864 the plaintiff had been paid £400 a month, under the agreement, but after that time he was paid £25 a month, until in 1865 he advanced his present claim, which was repudiated by the Nawab. No steps were taken by the plaintiff to enforce it, until in 1869 the Nawab arrived in this country. The plaintiff contended that he was entitled to the £20,000, on the ground that the Government had virtually reversed the decision of Lord Canning, and that the whole of the Deposit Fund had been virtually recovered by the Nawab, so that the plaintiff was entitled to his commission on the whole of it; but that, at all events, he was entitled to recover the commission on the sums actually received by the Nawab, or paid out of it for his family. The question was whether the plaintiff was entitled to recover.

Sir J. Karslake, Q.C. (with him Mr. Giffard, Q.C., and Mr. Philbrick), argued for the plaintiff.

The Attorney-General, Mr. Field, Q.C., and Mr. Lumley Smith were for the Nawab; but the Court, after fully hearing Sir J. Karslake, were clearly of opinion that his client, the plaintiff, was not entitled to recover.

The Lord Chief Justice delivered judgment at some length to that effect, recapitulating the principal facts of the case. The object, he said, of the Nawab was to reverse the decision of Lord Canning, which negated any hereditary right to the income, or any absolute right to the fund, and the agreement with the plaintiff was directed to that object, and he was not to be entitled to the stipulated remuneration unless he succeeded in attaining that object. But he had not succeeded, for on neither point had the decision of Lord Canning been reversed. Sir Charles Wood had carefully and wisely abstained from entering into the question of hereditary right to the income or absolute right to the fund. The object of the agreement, therefore, had not been attained, and the sums received by the Nawab had not been received in consequence of any reversal of Lord Canning's decision, and had no reference to the agreement. Those sums had not been paid to the Nawab as of right, but only in virtue of the discretionary power which the Government asserted as to the disposition of the fund. The plaintiff, therefore, was in no respect entitled to recover under the agreement, as it had not in reality been carried out on his part.

Mr. Justice Blackburn concurred. The case, he said, was analogous to that of a broker who was never entitled to his commission unless he succeeded.

The other learned Judges also concurred.

Judgment, therefore, in favour of the Nawab.

Miscellaneous.

A BLOCK TO BREVET PROMOTION.—The death of Lieutenant-general Butler, just announced from India, disturbs the whole of the arrangements recently announced as to coming Brevet promotions. The Gazette of Tuesday next will, we believe, set all the successions right.—Army and Navy Gazette.

MAJOR-GENERAL D. BABINGTON, Madras Infantry, becomes a Lieutenant-General in the Indian Army, with seniority from the 16th ult., in succession to General J. Garnault, Madras Infantry, deceased; Major General Sir N. B. Chamberlain, K.C.B., K.C.S.I., attaining the rank in succession to Lieutenant-General J. Butler, whose death is announced this week from India as having occurred at Simla, April 30.—Army and Navy Gazette.

SECRET SOCIETIES IN INDIA.—A lecture was delivered by Mr. Iludus Prichard, P.S.S., on "Secret Societies in India," at the City of London College, Leadenhall-street, on Thursday evening. The paper imparted some valuable information regarding native movements, social and political, in India; and connecting both Mahomedans and Hindoos with such organisations. There are also certain native societies in India whose organisations are of a caste or religious character; and these latter were referred to and their composition analysed.

PENINSULAR AND ORIENTAL STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY.—The report of the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company for the half-year ending the 31st March last has been issued. With reference to the four new vessels in course of construction, it states that the Cathay is to be delivered towards the end of June, the Hydaspes will be launched in about a month, and the remaining two—named the Malwa and Bokhara—will be completed in December and February next. Contracts have also been entered into for building four more vessels of about 2,500 tons register each, with engines of 450-horse power, on the compound principle. An interim dividend of 3 per cent. for the half-year is recommended.

BOMBAY GAS COMPANY.—The report of the Bombay Gas Company has been issued for the half-year ending the 31st December last. The general revenue account shows a balance of £9,881. 19s. 3d., out of which a dividend of $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., making 7 per cent. for the year, is declared.

WILLS.—The will of Augustus Fortunatus Bellasis, Esq., late of Grove-end-road, St. John's-wood, formerly in H.M. Bengal Civil Service, who died on board the steam-ship Urano, in the Red Sea, on March 23 last, was proved in London, on the 10th ult., under £50,000 personalty. The wills of the undermentioned have just been proved:—General Charles William Wingfield, R.A., of Gunton Old Hall, Suffolk, under £25,000; General Thomas Oliver, of H.M. Indian Army, late of Duke-street, Grosvenor-square, under £10,000.

BREACH OF PROMISE OF MARRIAGE.—An Indian officer brought an action for breach of promise of marriage against a young Irish lady residing at Homburg. The contract, it was allowed, was made in Germany, but a letter had been received from the defendant by the plaintiff in England, breaking off the engagement. It was argued in the Court of Common Pleas that this letter brought the contract within the jurisdiction of the Court. A rule had been obtained by the plaintiff last term to stay proceedings; and Mr. Justice Blackburn, not holding that the Court had jurisdiction, now made the rule absolute.

INDIAN APPEALS.—The first case, which had been before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council three days, was that of Baboo Bissessurnath v. Mohessurbux Sing, and was an appeal from Bengal which raised a boundary question in respect of land of considerable value. On May 25 Sir R. Collier gave judgment, dismissing the appeal, with costs. The next was that of Rughoolbur Dutt Chowdhry v. Futteh Narain Chowdhry, and was an ex parte appeal from the Presidency of Bengal, and raised a question as to a bond for 10,000 rupees, which lasted the whole day. Sir J. Colvile delivered judgment. The appeal was allowed.

BANKRUPTCY OF AN INDIAN OFFICER.—At the Bankruptcy Court on May 18 the case of General George Warren, formerly of the Indian army, and who has now retired from active service, was brought before Mr. Registrar Pepps. It seemed that the general was in the receipt of retiring allowances amounting to about £1,190 per annum, and he proposed to set aside £800 per annum for his creditors until the whole of his debts were discharged, the proposal to be without prejudice to the rights of certain secured creditors. Resolutions had been passed accepting the offer, and an order was drawn up in accordance with the terms of the resolutions.

SANDHURST CADETSHIPS.—The whole of the Sandhurst cadets on both the A and B Lists have, we understand, now been furnished with commissions as sub-lieutenants. All the Queen's and Indian cadets of 1870, and about a hundred 1870 direct-commission candidates are provided for. Three Sandhurst cadets—one from the A, and two from the B List—and three direct-commission gentlemen accepted service with the Control department. The number of men who have noted their names for the Cavalry is getting very small; but there still remain close upon two hundred applicants for Infantry to be worked off. It is anticipated that all the Lists will be run out before the expiration of the two years mentioned by Mr. Cardwell some time since; and then several promotions from the ranks will be made, and a few subalterns from the Militia brought in.—Army and Navy Gazette.

PROMOTION OF INDIAN SUBALTERN OFFICERS.—The death of Col. Carpendale, Royal Engineers, gives a step to Lieutenant W. G. Cumming, the last subaltern on the Madras List, and promotion will in future be made from the British establishment. The British subalterns will now therefore receive the benefits of all vacancies occurring in three out of the four lists. Of the old Bengal men, fourteen Lieutenants, thirteen of whose commissions bear date June 8, 1860, the same as that of Lieutenant Cumming, remain to be promoted. In the Artillery none of the lists have run out, there being forty-seven subalterns still serving who were transferred as such from the old Indian Army on the amalgamation. Bengal is represented by thirty-three, Madras by ten, and Bombay by four. Here the Engineers have an advantage over the "Artillery boys."—Army and Navy Gazette.

ROYAL GEOGRAPHICAL SOCIETY.—The annual meeting of the Royal Geographical Society was held on May 25. Sir Henry Rawlinson, the President, in his address, spoke at some length upon the Livingstone Search Expedition. In the evening the annual dinner was held at Willis' Rooms. Sir Henry Rawlinson presided, and among the company were H.E. Baron de Bulow, the Danish Minister; the Duke of Manchester, the Earl of Derby, Sir Harry Parkes, Sir Rutherford Alcock, Sir Arthur Phayre, Sir Bartle Frere, Sir Robert Collier, Sir Francis Grant, Sir John Kaye, Sir Richard MacDonnell, General Rigby, Colonel Grant, Captain Sherard Osborn, Dr. Rae, Mr. R. B. Shaw, Mr. Hawksley, and others. At the morning meeting the Founder's medal was awarded to Colonel Henry Yule, c.b., and the patron's or Victoria medal to Mr. Robert Berkeley Shaw, for his journeys in Eastern Turkestan.

STAR OF INDIA.—The Gazette announces that the Queen has made the following appointments to the First, Second, and Third Classes of the Most Exalted Order of the Star of India:—To be a Knight Grand Commander: Her Highness the Nawab Shah Jehan Begum of Bhopal. To be Knights Commanders: Mr. John Strachey, Bengal Civil Service, member of the Council of the Governor-General of India; Mr. John Cracroft Wilson, c.b., Bengal Civil Service (retired), late Civil and Sessions Judge at Moradabad, and Special Commissioner for the trial of Rebels and Mutineers in 1857-58. To be Companions: Major Owen Tudor Burne, 20th Regiment of Foot, Private Secretary to the late Viceroy and Governor General of India; Lieutenant-Colonel George Bruce Malleon, Bengal Staff Corps, Guardian to his Highness the Maharajah of Mysore; Mahomed Hyat Khan, Assistant-Commissioner, Punjab; Lieutenant-Colonel Alfred Thomas Etheridge, Bombay Staff Corps, late Inam Commissioner, Southern Mahratta country.

CIVIL SERVICE ATHLETIC SPORTS.—A day of athletic sports came off on Saturday, the 25th ult., at Lillie Bridge, West Brompton, arranged by the London Athletic Club, which includes several members of the India-office establishment. In the programme of the day's races some good prizes were set down to be competed for, and the day's proceedings showed the physique of the India-office youth to be highly creditable to lives destined to be passed at the desk. If the competitors did not all prove themselves great in the character of athletes, at any rate the L. O. men carried off some of the prizes. We give the names of two or three of the victors. Mr. G. R. Johnston (the holder of the London Athletic challenge cup), easily secured the 100 yards race, and the 220 yards challenge cup. The 300 yards handicap also fell to an L. O. man, in the person of Mr. G. Butler, another well-known member of the London Athletic Club. The only Indian Civil servant who competed this year was Mr. H. M. Tobin, who stood second to Mr. Johnston in the 100 yards race. Messrs. F. W. Smith and A. H. Savage were second in the mile steeple chase and putting the shot. The attendance of respectable company was large and fashionable, it being computed that more than 15,000 persons were present. Mr. Sydenham Dixon ran the mile in 4 minutes and 35 seconds, and he and his colleagues in the Inland Revenue Department, T. Collet, J. H. Reay, H. W. Murray, S. Smale, and E. N. Alpe, secured the lion's share of the prizes.

THE NEW GOVERNOR OF CHELSEA HOSPITAL.—Lieutenant-General Sir Sydney John Cotton, K.C.B., who has been gazetted as the new Governor-General of Chelsea Hospital in the room of General Sir J. L. Pennefather, deceased, is the son of Henry Calverley Cotton, Esq., cousin of the first Viscount Combermere. He was born in 1792, consequently he has attained the advanced age of eighty years, was educated at Westminster, and entered the army in 1810. He has held numerous staff appointments, and is Colonel of the 10th Foot, having formerly been Colonel of the 22nd Foot. He served with the 22nd Light Dragoons in the Mahratta war in 1817, and with the 28th Foot in Scinde, under Sir Charles Napier, in 1842-43. Commanded a force of artillery, cavalry, and infantry in 1853, which entered the Kohat Pass, and succeeded in overawing and bringing into subjection the refractory tribes in that pass. He commanded the 22nd Foot with a force under Brigadier Boileau, against the Boree Afreedes, on the north-west frontier, in 1853. He commanded an expeditionary force of 4,500 men to Shah Moosseh Kheyl, in August, 1854, for the punishment of the Mohmund tribe. He also commanded, in 1858, an expeditionary force of the same strength to Sittana, the Chinglee Valley, and Punjar, on the Eusofzai border, to punish Mokurrub Khan, chief of the Punjar, and the Hindostanee fanatics and rebel Sepoys (India medal, with clasp). He was nominated K.C.B. for his services in command of the troops on the north-west frontier of India, in suppression of the Indian Mutiny in 1857-58 (medal).

EASTERN BENGAL RAILWAY COMPANY.—The half-yearly ordinary general meeting of the shareholders was held on May 27, at the Guildhall Tavern; Mr. John F. Leith in the chair. The directors' report was taken as read. The chairman then moved the reception and adoption of the report and statement of accounts for the half-year ended December 31, 1871. Mr. H. H. Berens (director) having seconded the motion, the chairman, before putting the resolution to the meeting, proceeded to comment upon the particular features requiring notice and report of accounts now before them. In regard to their prospects for the present half-year, it gave him pleasure to state, in addition to the favourable report of their agent, noticed in the directors' report, in which it was stated that the gross receipts of the first fifteen weeks of the current half-year showed an increase over those of the corresponding period of 1871 of about £3,500, that in the Indian Government Budget, dated April 3, 1872, the net revenue of their railway for the current year 1872-73 was estimated at £178,750, or equal to 6 per cent. upon the whole of their capital. (Cheers.) The chairman, having referred in detail to the various items in the accounts, concluded by expressing his readiness to hear and answer any of the shareholders who were desirous of asking questions. Dr. Mouat expressed his entire concurrence with the observations of the chairman, with the exception of a few points; these being satisfactorily answered, the motion for the adoption of the report and accounts was then put, and unanimously carried.

REWARDS FOR DISTINGUISHED SERVICE have been bestowed upon Colonels A. A. Nelson, half pay, late depot battalion, and E. C. P. Gordon, half pay, late 75th Regiment. Colonel Nelson entered the service March 6, 1835, and became Colonel December 9, 1869. He served as Sub-Assistant Commissary-General Bombay Army throughout the operations under Sir William Nott in Candahar and Afghanistan during 1841-42, and has the medal, and acted in a similar capacity under Sir Charles Napier at the battle of Hyderabad, when he also obtained a medal. He served as Aide-de-Camp to Sir Thomas Valiant in the action of Maharajpore, December 29, 1843, and had a horse shot under him. He has the bronze star for the latter engagement. Colonel Gordon became Ensign December 13, 1833, Lieutenant January 19, 1858, and Colonel August 3, 1865. Colonel Hart gives his services as follows:—"Colonel Gordon served in the campaign against the Kaffir tribes of South Africa in 1834-35 (medal); also as Assistant Engineer during 1837-38, on the eastern frontier of the Cape Colony, and was employed under Colonel Lewis, R.E., to execute a confidential survey (trigonometrical and statistical) of that frontier; served in the Indian Campaign of 1857-58, commanding the 75th Regiment during the capture of Delhi from September 15, and was wounded on the 18th leading the assault on the Hubshee-Ka-Phateek; planned and carried out the forward movement of the right attack within the city, surprising and capturing the Burra Bastion at its gorge on the evening of the 19th, retaining it under a constant fire until the next morning, when the enemy evacuated Delhi; proceeded with Greathed's column, and commanded the 75th in the actions of Bolundshuhur, Allyghur, Ak-rabad, Agra, and Kanouj; advance into Oude, and minor affairs, ending in the relief of Lucknow; subsequently with the Oude field force in front of the city until February 14; specially mentioned in Outram's despatch for 'judgment and coolness' in defending the left advanced outpost of the camp during a night attack made by a very large force of the enemy on January 16, which he repulsed with severe loss (medal with two clasps, and brevet of Lieutenant-Colonel).

Imperial Parliament.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, MONDAY, May 27.—INDIAN FINANCE.—Mr. FAWCETT gave notice that on the motion that the Speaker leave the chair in order that the Indian Budget might be brought forward he would move the following resolution:—"That this House, considering the statements of the late Lord Mayo, that 'a feeling of discontent and dissatisfaction exists among every class, both European and Native, in our Indian Empire, on account of the constant increase of taxation which has for years been going on,' and that 'the continuance of that feeling is a political danger the magnitude of which cannot be over-estimated,' is of opinion that the income-tax, which is admitted to be unsuited to the people of India, might during the coming financial year be dispensed with, and that other taxes exceptionally burdensome to the people of India might be considerably reduced if the finances of that country were administered with adequate care and economy."

THE PERSIAN MISSION.—Mr. EASTWICK gave notice that he would postpone his motion on this subject to Tuesday, the 18th of June.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, FRIDAY, May 31.—EAST INDIA (BENGAL, &c., ANNUITY FUNDS) BILL.—The House went into committee on this Bill and the necessary resolutions were agreed to.

NAUTICAL INCIDENTS.

The Berhampore, Peterson, which arrived at Liverpool, May 27, from Calcutta, had encountered a violent hurricane, Feb. 9, in lat. 11 S., lon. 84 E., commencing at S.E., and veering round by S. to N.W., during which the vessel lay with her lee dead eyes under water for seven hours, but sustained no damage; on Feb. 29, in lat. 30 S., long. 42 E., she experienced another hurricane, veering from N.E. round by N., and W. to S.W.

The Sparkenhoe, Butler, from Calcutta to Liverpool, which put into Lisbon May 23, reported very leaky, is said to have made sixteen inches water at sea, and to be now making twelve inches. It is stated that the spare spars, various portions of the woodwork, and a quantity of linseed from her cargo, had been burnt to feed the donkey engine which worked the pumps, and that, having fuel for only two or three days longer, she had put into Lisbon. The master says that much of the sugar is dissolved. The vessel has been placed in quarantine for three days, having no bill of health.

THE NATIVE PRESS AND MEN WHO DISLIKE IT.—Mr. L. Ashburner, of the Bombay Civil Service, has lately appeared before the Indian Finance Commission now sitting in London; and his opinion is that "Every measure of Government—even the most beneficent—is complained of by the Native press in a most virulent manner." Mr. Ashburner has now been localised in Khandeish, whence we have lately had the cases of Vinayak Diwakar, Kasinath Dinkar, H. Howitt, and others, of which the public has had good opportunities for judging. Coming from such an atmosphere as this, his credentials to sit in judgment on us and our brethren must be very narrowly examined. Mr. Ashburner gives no facts. He does not quote instances; but comes down from the clouds to condemn the native press in general. We should have passed this over, were it the evidence of an ordinary person. But here is an officer in our Covenanted Service, Commissioner over one-half of the Presidency (exclusive of Sind) and may, if he can exert influence "at home," become a member of the executive Government. That such a person should make such hap-hazard statements is to be deplored; but as there are no qualified native members to watch and correct, such will ever be the case, and one-sided accounts will go before the world as the veriest truisms. Mr. Campbell, of Bengal, lately spoke of the Press in the last report sent to us, but the corresponding Bombay manual gives no sound. If we were to accept Mr. Ashburner as our final authority, there must be an end of all criticism; for no press, however able, can hope to maintain its ground, if it be so low as to descend to the meanness insinuated by Mr. Ashburner. We spurn the charge which is absolutely groundless.—Native Opinion.

PROFESSIONAL OPINIONS

SUPPORTING AND RECOMMENDING THIS SYSTEM.

March, 1871.

I have much pleasure in bearing my unqualified testimony to the admirable system of military exercises as given in Sergeant-major B. Browne's book. I can speak confidently of it, having had personal experience of its value. I am in the habit of recommending it to all those under my care, who require this additional mode of treatment for developing their frame.

C. M. MILLER, M.D.,

Assistant-surgeon, London Rifle Brigade.

Mr. Browne.—Nothing can be more true, in my opinion, than all you say in favour of training all our boys to military exercises. Its usefulness cannot be overrated, either to the boys themselves or to the nation, which would thus find, in a short time, and without any inconvenience or effort, the best part of its educated population prepared to take part in the defence of the country, almost without training, and should their services in this way happily never be required, the country would still have the satisfaction of seeing its young male population immensely benefited in health, strength, appearance, and general manliness. If carried out at all schools, it would become the favourite pastime of the boys.

H. EYRE, Lieutenant-general.

Birkbeck Schools, Kingsland, N., March 7, 1871.

For some years past all the boys and girls of these schools have been put through a course of systematic drill, such as that laid down in Sergeant-major Browne's book. The results have been in the highest degree satisfactory. Not only is the physical condition of the children greatly improved, but the discipline of the drill-ground produces habits of obedience and attention, which, carried into the school-room, conduce greatly to the mental progress of the children, as well as materially aid in maintaining order. Until the time shall come when the Government shall wisely insist upon every child being efficiently drilled, schoolmasters who have not yet tried the experiment will do well to do so without delay.

Of course it is of the utmost importance that the drill-instructor should not be a mere martinet. He must be able to convey his instructions clearly and pleasantly;
have an unlimited supply of patience, and show that he really takes an interest in his work.

It has been our good fortune for some years to have secured the services of Sergeant-major Browne, the author of this little book ("Setting-up Drill," &c.), who is not only assiduous in performing his duties, but who is fond of his work, and shows it, and, therefore, succeeds admirably.

JAMES RENTZ, Head Master.

Kingsland Middle Class Schools, Sandringham-
road, March 7, 1871.

Physical exercise is undoubtedly one of the requisites of youth, and if such exercise be conducted with a purpose, it is not only productive of health to the body, but also induces habits of order and energy. In our schools the system of drill instruction has been adopted with the best results, and I am quite convinced that any school would be the better for its introduction. Of course a great deal depends upon the drill-instructor; but if such an one as ours (Sergeant-major Browne, who is thoroughly fond of the work, and at the same time a strict disciplinarian and a perfect gentleman), be obtained,
the result will be all that can be desired.

ROBERT LANE, Head Master.

Southgate-road Middle Class School, De Beauvoir-
town, N., March 6, 1871.

It is fortunate in the present day there is but little need for insisting upon this physical training of youth, as its importance is so generally recognised. To insure success, however, it is indispensable that it should be conducted by well-qualified instructors, such as are apt to teach, of gentlemanly manners and good dis-ciplinarians. From my observations of Sergeant-major Browne, I am able to testify to his possession of these qualifications, and have very great pleasure in recommending his system of drill to those who may be desirous of introducing physical exercises into their schools.

THOMAS WILSON, F.R.G.S., Head Master.

Finishing Establishment for Young Ladies,
Benny-house, 32, Cullford-road, De Beauvoir-town, N.,
March 6, 1871.

Mrs. Aldam has great pleasure in bearing testimony to the efficiency of Sergeant-major Browne's method of drilling, and as possessing not only great patience, but also consideration for the strength of the pupils, that no undue fatigue is occasioned, no too sudden a strain upon the muscles of growing children, eager, perhaps, to outdo their schoolfellows, a point too frequently over-

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.

CONFUSION and PAIN OF THE HEAD.—These premonitory signs of coming illness should have early attention before the summer's high temperature accelerates the circulation, or palpitation and uneasy feelings about the heart will succeed, and be followed in their turn by more serious symptoms. Holloway's Pills display their most constant and happy effects in dispelling these disagreeable feelings, clearing the furred tongue, rousing the torpid bowels, and removing languor and flatulency, often oppressive after taking food. No medicine is so well calculated to restore the digestive functions, so potent to soothe the nervous system, to tranquillise an overwrought brain, to raise bright gleams of hope, and to dispel the dark shadows of despair.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S (Ex. Army Med. Staff)

CHLORODYNE

IS THE ORIGINAL AND ONLY GENUINE.

CAUTION.—Vice-Chancellor Sir W. P. WOOD stated that Dr. COLLIS BROWNE was undoubtedly the Inventor of CHLORODYNE: that the story of the Defendant, Freeman, being the Inventor was deliberately untrue, which he regretted had been sworn to. Eminent Hospital Physicians of London stated that Dr. J. Collis Browne was the discoverer of Chlorodyne; that they prescribe it largely, and mean no other than Dr. Browne's.—See Times, July 12, 1864.

The Public, therefore, are cautioned against using any other than

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.

Remedial Uses and Action.

This INVALUABLE REMEDY produces quiet, refreshing sleep, relieves pain, calms the system, restores the deranged functions, and stimulates healthy action of the secretions of the body, without creating any of those unpleasant results attending the use of opium. Old and young may take it at all hours and times when requisite. Thousands of persons testify to its marvellous good effects and wonderful cures, while medical men extol its virtues most extensively, using it in great quantities in the following diseases:—

Diseases in which it is found ominously useful—Cholera, Dysentery, Diarrhoea, Colics, Coughs, Asthma, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Whooping Cough, Cramp, Hysteria, &c.

Extracts from Medical Opinions.

The Right Hon. Earl Russell communicated to the College of Physicians and J. T. Davenport that he had received information to the effect that the only remedy of any service in Cholera was Chlorodyne.—See Lancet, Dec. 31, 1864.

From A. Montgomery, Esq., late Inspector of Hospitals, Bombay.—“Chlorodyne is a most valuable remedy in Neuralgia, Asthma, and Dysentery. To it I fairly owe my restoration to health, after eighteen months' severe suffering, and when other remedies had failed.”

Dr. Lowe, Medical Missionary in India, reports (Dec. 1865) that in nearly every case of Cholera in which Dr. J. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne was administered the patient recovered.

Extract from Medical Times, Jan. 12, 1866.—“Chlorodyne is prescribed by scores of orthodox medical practitioners. Of course it would not thus be singularly popular did it not ‘supply a want and fill a place.’”

Extract from the General Board of Health, London, as to its efficacy in Cholera.—“So strongly are we convinced of the immense value of this remedy, that we cannot too forcibly urge the necessity of adopting it in all cases.”

Beware of spurious and dangerous compounds sold as CHLORODYNE, from which frequent fatal results have followed.

See leading article, Pharmaceutical Journal, Aug. 1, 1869, which states that Dr. J. Collis Browne was the Inventor of Chlorodyne; that it is always right to use his preparation when Chlorodyne is ordered.

CAUTION.—None genuine without the words “Dr. J. Collis Browne” on the Government stamp. Overwhelming medical testimony accompanies each bottle.

Summary and Review.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail are—from Bombay, May 20; Agra and Madras, May 19, Calcutta, May 17.

LORD NORTHBROOK has received deputations and addresses from several societies, including the Trades' Association and the British Indian Association. He has also been going the round of the public buildings and institutions of Calcutta, and on Wednesday, May 15, he held a numerous levée. In reply to the British Indian Association's prayer for "rest from over-legislation, from over taxation, from over-anxiety for change in the name of progress," his lordship went over the main principles of the Royal Proclamation of 1858, remarked that the growth of local requirements could only be met by local outlay, and virtually bade the landowners of Bengal give up all hope of escaping local cesses in addition to their land-tax. To the Trades' Association he pledged himself to try and maintain a sound system of finance, combined with the greatest caution in legislating for a country where the feelings, prejudices, and interests of so many different races have to be consulted. His speeches, which really commit him to nothing at all, appear to have pleased the Calcutta public; and the popular impatience of Sir R. Temple speaks out in the rumour that Lord Northbrook means to be his own Finance Minister.

SIR PHILIP WODEHOUSE has held a well-attended levée in Bombay, and inspected the naval defences of the harbour. On the 15th May Lord Hobart arrived at Madras and was installed as Governor with the usual forms. Two days earlier Lord and Lady Napier of Merchistoun embarked for England, after a short stay in their former capital. Before their departure a number of gentlemen went on deputation to Government House to beg for a portrait of their late Governor, which his Lordship promised to sit for on his return to England. Lord Hobart was to hold a levée at Madras on the 20th May.

THE Commander-in-Chief of Madras has thanked the officers and men of the Artillery and Fusiliers for their admirable exertions in saving life during the late cyclone.

THE Madras papers inform us that 833 houses, exclusive of those in cantonments, were destroyed by the recent floods at Vellore and 5,000 people left homeless. There are hopes that the actual number of deaths may not exceed 750 instead of a thousand. With regard to the disasters caused by the cyclone at Madras, it appears from some careful articles in the Madras Times that they cannot be ascribed to any carelessness of the Marine department. Ample warning was given from time to time, except that no signal guns were fired when the storm grew imminent; but the captains with whom rested the final responsibility made no preparations to meet an unforeseen and unlikely hurricane. Most of them staid on shore during the previous night. Those ships moreover which might have stood out to sea were awkwardly hemmed in by lighter ships whose best chance of safety was to ride out the gale.

THE Gaikwar of Baroda appears to have stopped the pension due to his brother's widow. An appeal from the Rani herself however has led the Bombay Government to promise payment of a lakh of rupees, which will be recovered from the Gaikwar's Treasury.

WE observe that Major Bourke, Military Secretary to the late Lord Mayo, has been appointed Postmaster General of Madras.

GENERAL POLLOCK and Dr. Bellow are said to have left Sistan for Farisk, and General Goldsmid has gone with the Persian Commissioner to Teheran.

THE story brought from India by this mail, that the Patiala Raja had disapproved the sentence passed on Mr. Cowan, is belied by a Calcutta telegram of Saturday last, which states that his Highness has disavowed any such opinion.

ACCORDING to the same telegram an official inquiry with closed doors is being held into the conduct of the Master Attendant, Government Astronomer, and other officials during the cyclone at Madras.

WE believe that Mr. Cowan's sentence of dismissal, if it is to be carried out, will not be aggravated by the usual consequences of such a fate. The Indian Government has so far tempered sternness with mercy by recommending that Mr. Cowan should receive a pension. A few hundreds a-year with no work to do for the money will at least be better than nothing; but to a man of his tried worth and talents this after all is but a sorry compensation for the utter loss of a promising career.

AN important Regulation has just been issued by the Indian Government for the benefit of the Santhals, whose grievances had lately furnished matter for grave consideration. The Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal is empowered to carry out certain special rules for the government of the Santhal country, apart from the laws enforced in other districts, and to appoint certain officers for the hearing of causes transferred from the jurisdiction of the regular Courts. In order to deal with the mischief caused by excessive usury, it is ruled that the rate of interest shall not exceed two per cent. monthly, in spite of any agreement to the contrary, and that no compound interest shall be allowed for any intermediate adjustment of account. The whole interest on any debt is never to exceed one-fourth of the principal, on a period of not more than a year, nor in any case to exceed the principal amount. Large powers are entrusted to the Lieutenant-Governor for the settlement of lands, for ascertaining all kinds of landed rights, defining boundaries, and for adjusting the diverse claims of landlords, tenants, and village headmen. All such questions shall be decided by the settlement officers under his supervision, who may also revise any faulty decision passed under the Act of 1855. Any village headman who has lost his office or his prescriptive rights since the end of 1858 may recover either by proving "a fair and equitable claim thereto." Rents may be raised or lowered by the settlement officer, after due inquiry into each case. Twelve years' tenure of any holding shall entitle the ryot to all rights of occupancy. Any ryot ousted since the end of 1858 may, on fair proof given, be admitted to the benefits of this rule, and the same shall hold good with ryots who have exchanged fields for others in the same village. The rents thus readjusted shall remain unchanged for at least seven years, and all claims for abatement on account of reclaimed lands shall be liberally considered. Provision is also to be made for the careful record of village customs bearing on the question of rents; and, when a year has elapsed after their publication, these records shall be deemed conclusive as to the rights and customs notified therein. By these and like provisions the interests of the aggrieved Santhals will, we hope, be sufficiently guarded without injustice to the classes from whose oppression they appear to have long suffered. Everything will, of course, depend on the kind of officers selected for the purpose of carrying out these rules; but to that end no better guarantee could be secured than the powers of appointment and supervision which have been placed in the hands of the Lieutenant-Governor.

LORD NORTHBROOK seems to have had a trying time of it during the first part of his railroad journey from Bombay to Calcutta, with the thermometer at more than 100 deg. in his own state carriage. On arriving at Nandgorum he was only too glad to exchange his hot carriage for one which had been fitted up with Mr. Saunders's cooling apparatus, and in this he travelled in comparative comfort the rest of the way. So great was the relief afforded him that he resolved to have his State carriage fitted up with the same admirable contrivance—a resolution which, we hope, he carried into effect before starting for Simla. We may also hope that he will consult the good of the travelling public by compelling the railway companies to use the same apparatus in all their trains during certain months of the year. The chief objection to it seems to be the expense, which for one carriage alone is said to amount to 250 rupees. If that, however, is only the first and chief cost, the invention might at any rate be applied to first and perhaps second-class carriages. Mr. Saunders is employed in furnishing four more carriages with his patent machinery, the improvements in which are like to ensure a yet greater degree of coolness combined with yet more thorough ventilation.

NOR a little excitement has been caused in Bombay by the sudden deaths at Baroda of Bhow Sindia, Vizier of the late Gaikwar, and of Moonshee Habib-oolla, his confidential servant. The former died mysteriously in the prison where he was undergoing his sentence for peculation, just before his term of imprisonment had run out, and the latter two days afterwards shared the same fate. The story, as circulated in Bombay, is to the effect that on the night of the 2nd May Bhow Sindia was ordered by his jailers to swallow a poison-ball which had been prepared for him. On his refusing with loud cries for help, he was squeezed to death by a kind of pressing-machine kept for that purpose. His body was burnt immediately afterwards with a haste strangely unbecoming his princely rank. One of his attendants is said to be likewise missing. The Moonshee, who had been his Chief Secretary, and is supposed to have known too much about the manner of his master's death, is said to have perished in prison two or three days later from poison or torture. It is also asserted that several officers on the late Gaikwar's Staff have been made away with in a like manner, and that the head-steward to the Gaikwar Malharao's own mother was scorched to death in the sun for admitting into the house a messenger from the late Gaikwar's widow. That lady herself has sought shelter in Bombay from the Gaikwar's machinations. A certain air of likelihood to this strange story has been imparted, it seems, by an order from the Bombay Government, requiring Colonel Short, Acting Resident at Baroda, to report on the circumstances attending the death of Bhow Sindia and his Moonshee. We do not envy him the task of unravelling another of those political tangles which are so frequently woven in Native Courts. There is usually a woman at the bottom of these dark plots, and we should not be very much surprised to hear that the Rani of the late Gaikwar had a hand in brewing the villainous stories of which Malharao has become the central theme. Most likely the stories contain just enough truth to aggravate their falsehood; but even if they are true in substance, it does not follow that the present Gaikwar had any share in the alleged murders. Be that as it may however, we hope that full inquiry will be made into the matter, and that the real culprits, whoever they are, if the whole thing is more than a wild fiction, will be duly punished by the Paramount Power.

FROM the Casualty Returns of the two columns of the Loshai Field Force we glean the following results. In General Bouchier's column there were eight fighting-men killed and fourteen wounded to eighty-five who died from various causes. Of camp-followers two were killed and five wounded, while 386 died from other causes. Of the fighting-men the 42nd N.I., who had only one man wounded, lost the largest number, thirty-eight, by death from disease and other incidents of the campaign. The 44th N.I. were the heaviest sufferers on the whole, losing eight killed, three wounded, and thirty-five dead. The 22nd Punjabies lost four wounded and seven dead. Among those who died in the 42nd was Captain Harrison. Of the non-combatants 234 perished in the Nepalese Coolie Corps alone, besides eighty in the Commissariat and fifty-three in the Kookie Corps. In Brownlow's Chittagong Column the casualties among the fighting-men amounted to four killed, thirteen wounded, and thirty dead, while of the non-combatants there died in all 118. The brunt of the latter loss was borne by the Coolie Corps, of whom eighty-nine died. Of the remaining deaths twenty-four are set down to the Commissariat. One of these, a mahout, was killed by falling with his elephant over the "khud." Of the fighting-men, the 4th Ghoorkas, who had not a man touched in the field, lost the largest number by deaths from incidental causes. The 2nd Ghoorkas show two killed and twelve wounded against nine dead from other causes. The actual strength of the Cachar Column consisted of half a mountain battery, a company of sappers and miners, 500 each of three native infantry regiments, with 1,200 commissariat coolies and 800 of the Coolie Corps. This latter body was reduced by cholera at starting to 387 men. The Chittagong Column seems to have repeated the other in point of numbers.

THE work cut out for the two columns appears to have been completely carried through, although they failed at the last in joining hands, and although General Nuthall's Manipore Contingent was prevented by various causes, sickness included, from co-operating as steadily as it might have done. General Bouchier pushed through an unknown, difficult, and hostile country for 110 miles from his first base beyond our frontier at Tipai Mukh. General Brownlow marched eighty-three miles from his first advanced base, itself 130 miles from Chittagong. Lord Napier of Magdala, in commenting on the work done, lays stress on the evidence contained in the General's report, "that no smaller force could have accomplished the task of creating and maintaining such long lines of communications, and have supplied a body in advance sufficient to overcome all opposition and ensure success." His own plans at any rate were so successfully carried out that General Bouchier had returned to Cachar by the 10th March "the actual date on which the Government hoped I might be clear of the country." Not a shot was fired, says the General, on their homeward way. The villagers flocked round them, and though Poiboy was slow in coming in, that was merely "the abject fear of a boy." Three of his head muntries accompanied the General as hostages to Tipai Mukh. On this occasion the English Commander for the first and last time failed to fulfil his usual threat of burning villages in default of timely submission. The reasons he gives for breaking his word are strong enough to absolve him from all blame. Poiboy had never harassed his line of march, thousands of his people were living homeless in the forest, and numbers of them came into his camp, seeking forgiveness and tendering their submission. At Tipai Mukh the hostages were released, and a number of friendly Loshais who had hung about the force almost from the beginning, left it with apparent regret.

BOTH generals express their pleased surprise at finding the Loshais "far from being the savages we had supposed." To General Bouchier they appeared "a highly interesting, intelligent race, given at present in war to savage habits," but capable, he thinks, of gradually reaching "a state of high civilisation." According to General Bouchier, they "live in comfortable houses, on high and healthy ranges. Their mode of cultivation yields the most abundant and certain crops. They are surrounded by pigs and poultry, goats and gyaals (a domesticated bison). They fish and shoot, and brew both beer and whisky. Their domestic and tribal arrangements appear most happy, and altogether their condition contrasts very favourably with that of many of our own subject races." It is said indeed that most of their captives, whom they treat as their own people, would regard their freedom as a doubtful boon; but in the face of the numbers lately rescued from them this seems to us a questionable assumption. It is certain, however, that the child Mary Winchester had been well treated by her captors, for she ordered the Loshais about with an air of authority, and cried a good deal at parting from them.

GENERAL BROWNLOW dwells with soldierly satisfaction on the dashing gallantry of his little Ghoorkas. Quoting one out of several instances, he tells how a small guard of the 2nd Ghoorkas and some Sappers came suddenly on about thirty Kookies preparing an ambush. "There were only four Ghoorkas in front, who at once dashed at the enemy, drawing the fire of the whole party, and yet killing one and wounding two without any loss to themselves." It was due, he added, to "the material training and matchless spirit" of this regiment, that the Column suffered so little at the hand of the Sylhoos. When they were neither marching nor fighting, these brave fellows were employed at long distances from camp destroying "jooms," the patches of burnt jungle where the Loshais raise their crops.

THE new system of signalling with flags appears to have answered admirably in General Brownlow's camp. Repeatedly he signalled to detached parties ten or twelve miles off, and got in a few minutes replies which it would else have taken three or four days to transmit. General Brownlow has such faith in the usefulness of the new system, that he thinks the learning it should form part of every officer's drill, and that an apparatus for night-signalling should be attached to every force that may in future take the field.

PEOPLE who wish to get up a little history under the guise of a work of fiction will find their tastes consulted to fair purpose in Miss Braddon's last novel, "Robert Ainsleigh," whose hero is carried off to India as a recruit in the days preceding the tragedy of the Black Hole, by the crimps of the East India Company. Strange things happened a century and a quarter ago, and the story of Robert's abduction is not so improbable as it looks at first. For his subsequent adventures in India with Holwell and Clive Miss Braddon has chiefly drawn on documents of more or less historical value. The story of those romantic days when Holwell suffered and Clive fought, schemed, and conquered, could hardly fail to interest, by whomsoever told, and Miss Braddon's pen has not lost its cunning. Some parts of the narrative are fairly successful, and the scenes in which Clive himself figures are depicted with a good deal of sober force and sympathetic insight, in language to some extent modelled upon the diction of his own day. To readers of her earlier and more highly-spiced works this may seem a drawback, and some passages of the novel will no doubt be considered a little dull, even from a less exacting point of view. We must own indeed to being somewhat disappointed with the writer's description of the terrible night in the Black Hole. That however would be a trying subject for almost any pen. Only a great poet who had spent a hot weather in Bengal could do it adequate justice, or surpass the vivid ghastliness of the story told, we think, by Holwell himself. Non cuivis homini, &c., however. The historical portraits, including Omichund's, are on the whole rightly conceived and filled in with a fair attempt at dramatic keeping. The wily money-loving Bengali whom Clive, bold in all things, succeeded in overreaching for his masters' benefit, is not, we think, overdrawn, nor does Meer Jaffier lack the redeeming traits which history would allow him. With regard to her English heroes Miss Braddon has not followed the modern fashion of treating them as unpunished criminals. In her local colouring also she has kept clear of the more glaring errors into which homebred writers on India are apt to fall.

WE note the death in his eighty-first year of Mr. Thacker, founder of the well-known Indian firm of Thacker, Spink, and Co.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

MONDAY, June 10, 1872.

THE INDIAN GOVERNMENT AND MR. COWAN.

A CAREFUL study of the official papers published by the Indian Government on the case of Messrs. Forsyth and Cowan, leaves little room for disputing the inherent justice of the verdict passed on those officers. Pending the production of further papers on the subject, we are constrained to admit the apparent strength of the reasons assigned for the course pursued against two gentlemen of the highest character and of long-trying desert. We have not much sympathy with the notion so dear to some minds, that superior officers in any service are bound as a rule to uphold their subordinates at all hazards in the commission of acts however wrongful. Such a course can only be justified on grounds of extreme necessity, and it remains for the ruling powers to judge how far these grounds are tenable in each particular case. Far more harm, as a rule, will accrue to the public weal from such a method of maintaining what is called discipline, than from enforcing the principle that every subordinate must within certain limits be held responsible for his own acts. Even a Nelson must disobey orders at his own peril, trusting that the disobedience will be condoned by ultimate success. In Mr. Cowan's case nothing short of dire necessity could have justified his undoubted breach of law and defiance of positive orders. On this question of sheer necessity the whole strength of Mr. Cowan's defence must hang, and the Indian Government, acting on the evidence before them, have thrown out the one cardinal plea.

That they have done rightly we cannot positively affirm, and it may even be that when Mr. Cowan's case comes up for further hearing, the weight of evidence will be found to lean less strongly against him than it does now. His position, we take it, is that between the first capture of his prisoners and their summary execution bands of Kukas were still prowling around him, ready to begin a fresh and more serious outbreak, which the few troops at his command would have wholly failed to repress. In this nutshell lies the whole controversy, as between Mr. Cowan and his judges. If he could have brought forward anything like reasonable proof of a danger so imminent, they would have been bound to clear him of all blame for choosing the lesser of two evils. Necessitas non habet legem is a trite old maxim, and here also the plea of necessity would have covered any breach of ordinary rules. No strong-minded person would stand on legal use and wont, when all laws were in danger of momentary collapse. Virginia declining to be saved because she was not properly dressed, and the Spanish king who fell a sacrifice to court etiquette, are not examples which people in extreme need would care to imitate. Unluckily for Mr. Cowan, the Indian Government found no reasonable proof of the "absolute necessity" which they were willing to accept as a sufficient plea on his behalf. At the time when he blew his prisoners away from the guns, the outbreak "had been effectually suppressed." Mr. Cowan had at his disposal considerable bodies of troops, and there is no evidence whatever to show that actual immediate danger was or could have been apprehended, either from the prisoners themselves, or from other members of the sect to which they belonged." Various small bodies of Kukas were seen indeed in the neighbourhood of Malair-Kotla, but these had "promptly disappeared." On this point the Government Order quotes the opinion of Mr. Davies himself, the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab, who maintains that "in nearly every instance" the Kuka bands had retreated on the 15th January, the day of the attack on Kotla, "whereas the executions were carried out on the morning of the 17th." According to the official summary of the case submitted for trial, "there is no direct evidence of any Kukas having been seen near Malair-Kotla, even as fugitives, after the 16th." On that day Mr. Forsyth had seen some Kukas at three railway stations on his way to Loodiana, and five were caught that evening hidden in a village near Kotla, but these last were "possibly fugitives from the attacking party."

The only evidence in Mr. Cowan's favour was that of one witness, who "heard of Kukas being in some force in the neighbourhood on the 18th." It was also "generally believed" that one or two of Ram Singh's Subahs left Bhaini before the attack on Malodh to prepare their followers for taking advantage of any success in that quarter; but of this there is said to be "no positive evidence, except that of one of the men captured at Malodh." So far, therefore, as appearances go, there is a fatal weakness in this part of Mr. Cowan's defence.

On the morning of the 16th he had telegraphed to Lahore for leave to execute four of his prisoners. On the same day, having heard of the capture of nearly all the rebels concerned in the recent raid, he telegraphed to his Government not to send the troops he had previously asked for; and in a letter of the same date to Mr. Forsyth he speaks of tranquillity as restored and the entire gang as having been "nearly destroyed." They never, he says, numbered more than 125, of whom 58 had been wounded, 10 killed, and 72 taken prisoners. By the same evening a considerable force of native troops, horse, foot, and at least six guns, was gathered round him at Malair-Kotla. And yet he wrote to Mr. Forsyth, who had just arrived at Loodiana, to acquaint him with his intention of hanging his prisoners or blowing them away from guns the next morning. Before that intention was carried out in the afternoon of the 17th he had received from Mr. Forsyth a short note, bidding him send the prisoners to Sherpoor, where a guard would take charge of them for the present. This note, says Mr. Cowan, "I put into my pocket and thought no more about it." On the 17th Mr. Forsyth wrote him two letters, the one directing, the other entreating him not to proceed illegally. "You have done admirably," said the latter; "but for Heaven's sake don't let the whole thing fall short of perfect success by any hasty act." The writer himself was coming out to Kotla as soon as he had disposed of Ram Singh. "But if you hang these men," he continued, "you will fall short of perfect success; a delay of twelve hours cannot produce harm, whereas illegal action may cause trouble." Meanwhile, however, the prisoners had come in, and Mr. Cowan proceeded to carry out his purpose. The case, he said, in a letter to Mr. Forsyth, "is an exceptional one." The men were not ordinary criminals, but rebels bent on plunder and the subversion of order. Had they succeeded in their first attempt, they would have been joined by all the bad characters in the country, and it would have been no easy task to extinguish them. Timely action had ensured their defeat, but "others of their stamp must be deterred from following so bad an example, and, that the warning should be effectual, it must be prompt and terrible." In the midst of the executions thus vindicated, Mr. Forsyth's official note reached Mr. Cowan. Six or seven men still awaited their doom. After reading the letter, Mr. Cowan handed it over to Col. Perkins, remarking that "it would be impossible to stay the execution of the men already tied to the guns; that such a proceeding would have the worst effect on the people around us." These men also were accordingly blown away from guns.

"In carrying out the execution of my own sentence," he wrote that evening to Mr. Forsyth, "I acted in the honest and sincere conviction that I was acting in the best interests of Government." No doubt he thought so; but in the documents before us there is nothing to show that any harm could have been engendered by a few hours' delay. Mr. Forsyth would then have been at his side, and the responsibility for whatever happened would have fallen on the right shoulders. As it was, that officer, with more generosity than prudence, involved himself in his subordinate's scrape by ordering the execution of sixteen more prisoners.

Had Mr. Cowan been able to show that a delay of a few hours would have bred worse disasters, all this defiance of laws and orders from above, would have justified itself in the service he would thus have rendered to the State. It must not be forgotten that while the remaining prisoners were awaiting their sentence, Mr. Forsyth himself had heard a report of Kuka bands being in the neighbourhood. If these bands were actually hovering about at the time of the executions, and the force at Mr. Cowan's disposal was too weak to prevent further mischief, his summary proceedings would have needed no defence. But he himself had declared that tranquillity on the 16th January was "completely restored;" there seems to have been no lack of troops at hand; and the evidence regarding the approach of Kuka bands rested apparently on hearsay. Such being the case, as laid before the Government, we admit, however unwillingly, that they had no other option than to condemn the course of illegal severity into which Mr. Cowan's well meant zeal and fearlessness of personal consequences had betrayed him. Nothing would be better in tone and reasoning than the masterly Minute in which the Viceroy in Council defines the broad old principles of British law and justice, and insists on letting it be understood that, "whilst every officer will be fully supported in any measures, however rigorous, which he may be justified by law in adopting for the maintenance or restoration of the peace, no one will be permitted to supersede the law at his own discretion." Nor is there any good reason to fear "that the course which it has been necessary to take with regard to the present case will deter other officers from a becoming energy and promptitude in the presence of danger."

But was it necessary to inflict so heavy a punishment as removal from the service on so deserving an officer, to whose prompt action at the outset it was mainly owing that the outbreak he suppressed so savagely did not grow into a widespread rebellion? Whatever may be thought of his after conduct, no one acquainted with the history of the recent outbreak can deny him the credit of having "acted admirably" up to a certain point. Few men deserved better of their country than he had done before he took upon himself to slay without trial the wretched fanatics whom his prompt precautions had baffled in their mischievous designs. If the Government felt itself bound to speak out sternly with regard to one part of Mr. Cowan's proceedings, it ought we think to have weighed his manifest deserts in careful balance against his proved shortcomings. Something less than dismissal from the service he had hitherto adorned might surely have satisfied the claims of unsparing justice. The lesson to himself and all concerned would have lost none of its meaning, if justice in this case had been more largely tempered with the mercy which a due regard for extenuating circumstances, to say nothing of political expediency, seemed especially to enjoin.

BONUS QUESTION.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—I shall esteem it a favour if you will grant me space for the following further information of officers interested in the above question, as following my letter and notice published in your last number.

It must be understood that though a large number of officers have previously petitioned Parliament on this and other questions, the facts disclosed in paras. 1, 2, 3, and 4 of my notice have, so to speak, given the whole question a new life and a new aspect.

The Bonus Committee have been actively engaged in completing a case based on the grounds therein set forth, and have obtained counsel's opinion thereon. It is obviously essential that ALL who have any claims should renew their representations by supporting the action of the Committee and sending petitions, which will be presented by members who look upon the question in the light now set forth. A large number of Members of Parliament have pledged their support to the case as prepared by the Bonus Committee; and it is the duty of every claimant to second our efforts and proceedings.—Yours very faithfully,

FRANCIS PICTET, Captain,

Retired List, Madras Army,

Joint Hon. Secretary Bonus Committee.

INDIAN ARMY.—THE BONUS OR STEP PURCHASE SYSTEM?

This is a vexed question; but it is only vexatious from the fact of its not being properly understood. It involves principles, and to make them clear is all that is wanted. The mere system of buying promotion is already well known, and so far understood, since the officers of the British army have carried it on for very many years; and the country was last year pledged to a payment of close upon twelve millions sterling, as compensation for its abolition. There is, however, a very fallacious idea more or less prevailing that officers purchased their promotion for the sole object of attaining higher rank and enhanced pay; and in the Queen's service there certainly was some justification for this, inasmuch as officers having the means could, under that system, skip over their less fortunate seniors. That in the primitive days may certainly have been the only or immediate object in view, but as the system grew it was clear that officers, who in time became fit subjects for retirement (after devoting the best of their years to the country's service), would naturally and did in fact also become claimants to consideration and reimbursement of the sums which they had expended in accelerating their rise. The advantage was soon apparent, but none the less so to the State than to the officers themselves, for it added considerably to the vitality and efficiency of the commissioned ranks. This led to the recognition of the system by the State, and to its being, at an early period, restricted by certain authoritative regulations. These in their turn led to an extension of the principle by means of what was until very recently known as the over-regulation prices. When the wheel, set in motion by the first, had completed its round, officers who had contributed the sums set down in the regulations of the army, found that these prices were in both cases the same; that they got no more (though no less) than they had actually paid; and that nothing was allowed them in lieu of interest for the money laid out and virtually sunk during the years of their active servitude. Hence arose the want for something more, and this was ultimately made good by the over-regulation prices. It was clear that enhanced pay, with higher rank, was succeeded to and held by officers only by virtue of their commissions in her Majesty's army, and in consideration of higher duties and greater responsibilities, and was not in any way attributable to or connected with the money considerations, whereby officers, in default of better inducements or other means, sought to accelerate their rise. The money paid for accelerated promotion was an entirely voluntary act on the part of the officers individually, and had nothing to do with the pecuniary engagements of the State to pay them all according to their respective positions in the army. The principle of purchase must then be clearly understood to be, or rather to have been, two-fold. Certain sums of money were paid, having more for object the acceleration of rise (whilst each officer knew that by the regulations in force he would have these prices returned to him on retirement), and certain other sums were also paid (though held throughout to be illegal transactions) to officers retiring, as compensation for loss of interest on the money paid, vide regulations, for the years which had respectively elapsed. That a return of the regulation prices, even if taken alone, was expected, was clearly established by the tenor of those regulations, and that the actual attainment of promotion whilst in active service (whether by means of the purchase or otherwise) was not the only motive for contributing even the regulation prices alone, was the more abundantly clear by the fact that officers who had been fortunate enough to obtain their first or any subsequent commissions through deaths occurring had still the right to claim the full regulation prices on retirement. These are considerations and deductions which will commend themselves to every intelligent mind, so far as their relative business and equitable bearings are concerned. But in or when officially confirming the system (as first set forth) and prescribing certain observances by fixing the price to be given and received (as per regulations), the executive enacted a law requiring every officer, on making his application to retire, to declare on honour, and his commanding officer to certify in effect that no money consideration had anything to do with his retirement; and this law had never been rescinded up to the time when the whole system was abolished. This was making the paying and the receiving of the over-regulation prices virtually a penal offence. The extended system having, however, been suffered to grow as years rolled on, it became more or less necessary, as a matter of policy, to look upon it as an established custom, which the Executive could not stay or put an end or stop to without rendering itself liable to the grant of compensation as part and parcel of the entire purchase system. This, as all know, has proved to be an incontestable question, and the Reformed Parliament did, by an almost unanimous voice, grant full compensation in respect to both the regulation and over-regulation prices in the Act passed in session 1871. That point being settled, we have now to consider what was the position and what were the circumstances of the Indian Army officer as regards the analogous system of step purchase which prevailed in the East India Company's service previous to 1861.

Firstly, then, it must be borne in mind (1) that promotion in that army was absolutely based on the seniority principle alone; and that no amount of money could obtain for any one officer promotion or advancement in grade over the head of another, as was the case in the Queen's. (2.) That gentlemen obtaining commissions in the late Honourable East India Company's service did, with very rare exceptions, go out intending to and actually devoted their (I may say) whole lives to that service; and their devotion was and has been so complete and so conspicuous that no army in the world had more tried and efficient officers. (3.) That the two-fold circumstances of promotion by seniority alone being inevitably certain to render it a slow process, and of the virtual exile which each was committed to by his engagement to serve in India only, were additional and very powerful considerations for adopting that system which in time became universal, and was at an early period not only approved of, but more than sanctioned by the Government of the late Hon. East India Company, as well as by the Board of Control. But even independently of that sanction, the Indian Army step purchase system acquired a positively legal locus standi, and held a far higher position, as a custom impossible to ignore, than the over-regulation prices in the Queen's, which to the last were always held to be illegal and the reverse of sanctioned, from the fact that the self-same declaration was required of officers retiring previous to 1836, when it was properly rescinded. (4.) That the step purchase system in the Indian Army was even less adapted as a simple means of accelerating promotion than in the British service is obviously certain, for, in the former, officers could not be got to accept bonuses, however large, who had not actually served sufficiently long to entitle them to a retiring pension; and the grant, as well as the acceptance of a bonus then, and then only, was (at the very first introduction of the system) likewise obviously intended to enable the retiring officer to better his circumstances after retirement. (5.) That in every regiment where the system was adopted, certain general rules and scales were made the guide, and the bonuses consequently were but the counterparts of what was known as regulation and over-regulation prices in the British Army. (6.) As in the Queen's, so in the Company's, the advantage was soon apparent; officers perceived that whilst keeping that ultimate object and benefit in view, they could, in the interim, also promote their rise by that means; and the Government readily and officially acknowledged, just thirty-six years ago, the enhanced benefit to the army in point of efficiency that would arise from the predetermined knowledge that officers would be thus induced and enabled to make room for younger men by retiring at a reasonable period of their lives; and experience has abundantly proved this. (7.) That the two-fold character of the system or principle was if anything even more conspicuous in the Company's service, for, since promotion was obtained by seniority alone, every officer in a regiment did benefit in some degree by a purchase, and this equitable consideration at once dictated a sense of obligation on the part of every one of them to contribute towards that purchase. But it is further also obvious that in a regiment composed of one major, seven captains, eleven lieutenants, and five ensigns, though latterly there were no ensigns, the retirement of, say, the major, could only benefit, for the moment, three officers out of the 24 or 19, and yet all did contribute their relative shares, and did so in very many cases under great personal inconvenience and self-denial on their part. (8.) That the system having more of a collective than an individual character in its operations and results, coupled with the known less favourable position of officers of the Indian army (as regards private means), and their nearer relative position to and with officers of the Queen's who could not purchase (and these represented fully one-third to one-half of the whole), necessitated the raising of the money for purchase by loans, and this naturally and inevitably increased (in some cases tenfold) the aggregate amounts actually paid out by officers in furtherance of the system; and it is certain that could the accounts be collected together, with a view to show the total amount actually laid out in this manner, the result would represent several millions sterling, not a small portion of which has (in consequence of the recipients of those bonuses having returned to the mother country and invested the same in various ways at home) been subjected to the income-tax paid by all British subjects. (9.) The illegality which, in certain higher quarters, was erroneously attributed to the system, rested not on the system itself, for it had been officially recognised, and the Government of the Honourable East India Company (with the approval of the Board of Control) had pledged itself to take no steps that might put a hindrance or sudden stop to it without due notice, but it rested, if at all, on the manner in which (owing to the actual circumstances of the officers in each case interested) the money was in some instances raised; this was always done in India, and (at that time) beyond the jurisdiction of the courts of law in England. And here it must be borne in mind that the sanction so given and promulgated to the army was a consequence, and, so to speak, the only expedient available at the time for carrying out the injunctions laid on the Honourable Company of Directors, and insisted upon by Parliament, when renewing the Company's charter in 1832, to the effect that the company of directors should make some provisions for staying the stagnation of promotion and accelerating the rise in the commissioned ranks of their army.

This brings us to the considerations immediately bearing on the claims which for nine long years have been pending in Parliament, and submitted by officers of the late Hon. East India Company's service, by virtue and on the strength of clearly defined guarantees inserted in the Act, whereby the Government of her Majesty assumed in 1858 the direct government of India and its dependencies. In that Act the promotion, rights, claims and privileges were purposely and positively assured.

Spirit of the Indian Press.

THE NON-AGRICULTURAL CESS IN BOMBAY.

The Bombay Gazette is informed by one who has watched the collection in one large town, that "the working of the tax more than justifies the most conformable anticipations. The assessors have gone on the logical deduction that, as to keep life in one human body costs at least two and a half rupees a month, a family consisting of man, wife, and one child, must necessarily earn the minimum amount taxable, or fifty rupees a year. Consequently, a large proportion of those taxed earn barely enough for subsistence, and have either to borrow the money, or to literally go without food for two or three days in order to pay the necessary amount. The office of the collector is surrounded by various persons, who look more like fit objects for charity than for taxation. The dregs of the population who earn a hand-to-mouth existence by labour, the proceeds of which are frequently anticipated by a loan from the shroff, in order to lay in the necessary amount of grain for the years' consumption, have, as a rule, actually no ready cash, and are never in possession of any such sum as eight annas. Yet many of the poorest who have large families to support, and must therefore, as the assessors rightly agree, earn at least one hundred rupees a year, have to pay in one instalment one rupee and a half, a small enough sum to an honourable legislator, but a sum the payment of which causes absolute bodily privation for many days to a wretched labourer and his family." One informant further tells us "that the feeling among all classes is one of bitter disgust, and the word 'zoolum' is in everybody's mouth in connection with the tax. When more than five thousand families are assessed in one town, anything like an approximately fair assessment in the first instance, or a satisfactory revision afterwards, is impossible. 'It causes much cursing,' was the remark of the Parsee shopkeeper, the leading citizen of the town, and one well-known for his good deeds among the poor." The same story reaches us from all quarters, and we perceive that the Native Press is beginning, somewhat tardily, to teem with complaints of the oppressiveness of the tax. But we will not weary our readers by a needless recital of the inevitable evils attendant on a direct tax in the scanty, fluctuating earnings of a population of labourers and artificers. As a contemporary has pointed out, the very name is a misnomer, as in some districts the majority, and in all the smaller villages a large proportion, of the tax-payers are cultivators who are taxed on the profits in the sale of cattle produce and of their carts and bullocks which they ply for hire when not using them in agricultural operations.

THE NEW CRIMINAL PROCEDURE ACT.

The Bombay Gazette remarks that the Criminal Procedure Act has alarmed Lord Napier, because it seems to him, as to all Englishmen outside the Covenanted Civil Service, to be the first step towards the complete subjection of non-official Europeans to the pettiest magisterial authority in the country. We are glad that so distinguished a member of the Government of India has openly declared how strong is the objection he feels to placing the liberty and fortune of Europeans at the mercy of juvenile magistrates who may become influenced by local prejudices and animosities, and thus be incited to pass severe sentences on gentlemen engaged in mercantile pursuits who have been singled out as victims of native malice. There is no security that an English settler will get justice done him without a jury in obscure and distant magistrates' courts, especially in outlying tea, indigo, or other industrial districts where the civilian feeling against interlopers still lingers. Lord Napier mentioned in his speech one instance of a Civil Servant who had a positive hatred of Europeans not belonging to his own service; and this feeling of caste peeps out from behind the veil of official courtesy, even in the published State papers of men high in office. We do not know if Acts passed by the Indian Legislature can really deprive an Englishman of the birthright he enjoys, under the common law of England, of being everywhere throughout the Queen's dominions tried by his peers for any offence of which he may be accused; but if this new Criminal Procedure Act be enforced, it can but have ultimately one of two results—either the prestige of the English name, which is one of the pillars of our rule, will be destroyed throughout India by the reduction of European British subjects to the level of natives, or (and this is more likely) the colonist class will be thoroughly alienated from the old country, and prepared, should occasion arise, to follow in the course marked out for them by the founders of the South American Republic. It is impossible to deny for long, with impunity to any class of Englishmen, both the privileges of race derived from their native land and the rights of citizenship in their adopted country.

THE GOVERNMENT ORDER ON MESSRS. FORSYTH AND COWAN.

The Punjab Times protests against the decision of the Government. It has heard the announcement with indignation, mingled with sorrow and shame—sorrow for the victims of misplaced zeal for thankless masters, and shame for the insensate folly of those whom an unlucky chance has made our rulers. The Government decision has this day blackened the face of every Englishman in the Province, and contemptuously outraged the sympathies of the races who have hitherto been proud to assist us against all enemies. It has given a premium for midnight murder, for treason and conspiracy, for defiance of our power, for open outrage; a high premium no less than the degradation and ruin of any British officer who in the interests of an empire dares, by a sudden and well-timed stroke, prevent them.

The Bombay Gazette holds that Mr. Cowan's conduct must be pronounced indefensible. He himself says generally that he thought the example of executing the Kookas would do good throughout the country; but it is quite clear that the insurrection was at an end, and not merely the troops, but the country-people seem to have been wholly wanting in sympathy with the rebels. Nothing, therefore, would have been lost by the day's delay Mr. Forsyth himself urged Mr. Cowan to grant; and, however regretfully, we must admit the justice of the decision that the want of judgment displayed by Mr. Cowan was sufficiently flagrant to call for his dismissal from the service. Mr. Forsyth, we now learn, disapproved strongly of the executions, but, when he found the deed was done, he backed up Mr. Cowan, with a chivalrous determination not to desert his subordinate, which lessens in his case the gravity of the mistake made. The local Government also condemned the executions, though Mr. Davies seems to have doubted the policy of letting the natives see that the State disapproved of the acts of its own officers. The Government of India has taken the manlier course of giving full effect to its opinion that Mr. Cowan had been guilty of "barbarous" conduct towards his prisoners; but it has gone, possibly, a step too far in deducing a general rule from this particular instance.

The Pioneer says the Government takes the invidious position of profiting by Mr. Cowan's acts and yet repudiating responsibility. There can be no doubt that the Government has taken very safe ground. The most malignant friends of humanity will not find a syllable to cavil at in the lofty and sonorous sentences in which the Governor-General lectures and ruins Mr. Cowan. In fact, it is an exceedingly able paper, and embodies a great deal of very noble truth; and, what is more, its case as against Mr. Cowan seems to us, we are obliged to confess, absolutely irresistible. Nevertheless we object to the paper as a whole; we dissent from some of its statements of fact, we deny some of its reasoning, and we disapprove of its conclusions. We think Mr. Cowan deserved punishment, but that he ought not to have been punished. The Government of India has stupidly said a number of very wise things. The indictment against the Deputy Commissioner of Loodiana is masterly, but it ought never to have been laid. . . . If we blame, as we do strongly, the action of Government, it is not in the least from approval of Mr. Cowan, it is from the defect of ruling capacity, of governing power, which that action betrays. It is not, in our opinion, injustice to Mr. Cowan of which Government has been guilty, but of something like treachery to the English in India. What (it asks) must be the impression on the troops, for instance, of Nabha, Jheend, and Puttiala, who were present at the execution, who, while they thought they were doing loyal service to the paramount Power, must now suppose that we consider them to have been merely accomplices in a murder! To their disgust at our ingratitude will be added contempt for our imbecility.

Our feelings on the whole question are simply these:—We disapprove of Mr. Cowan's indiscriminating execution of the prisoners as distinctly as our pigskin Friend of Serampore can do; but, horrible to confess, we hold that to be a very little thing compared with the absorbing duty of suppressing rebellion by any means and at any cost. We hold for the supremacy of England right or wrong, if there could be any "wrong" in such a case; but since it is the security from without and the order within, which the British rule affords, that is the indispensable prior condition for all progress and all safety in India, all means should seem right to an Englishman that are effective to secure the permanence of British power.

The Madras Times thinks that if the summing up of the evidence given by the Government of India in its decision be correct, it is impossible that that Government could have come to any other determination than to remove Mr. Cowan from the public service. The Government says that the series of illegal executions "was commenced in opposition to the spirit of the instructions received from superior authority, and in the absence of authority invoked but not awaited, and prosecuted to completion in contravention of positive orders." No official sin could be more heinous than this, and the Government declare that there is "no circumstance that tends to justify or excuse him." The prisoners were helpless in the hands of their captors, some badly wounded; they were under the guard of a strong military force which might have been increased to any extent. Admitting the correctness of this statement, which we are bound to suppose is founded upon sufficient evidence, it is impossible to come to any other conclusion than that "the illegal and indiscriminate execution was a measure for which there was no excuse." We may sympathise with Mr. Cowan on his fate, but it is of the utmost importance that officers entrusted with the power of life and death should be made to feel their heavy responsibility. Mr. Cowan, being guilty of illegality as well as indiscretion, suffers a heavy punishment; and Mr. Forsyth, having acted with great indiscretion, is removed to employment where the opportunity for committing similar mistakes is not likely to recur. We should have rejoiced exceedingly had the circumstances permitted the Government to acquit these officers of blame, for undoubtedly they acted with the best intentions; but the circumstances being what they are we think the Government of India is to be commended for taking decided steps to vindicate the national honour, sorely compromised by the sad errors committed by Messrs. Forsyth and Cowan.

The Englishman asks, What would become of justice in India if the British Government were overthrown by a native rebellion? And is it a flagrant dereliction of its duty if, to avert such universal injury and anarchy as would then ensue, it forbears to punish a single officer who has overridden the law in the belief that he was doing it a service? We have noticed only one side of the dilemma in which the late events placed the Government of India. But it has many sides. Let us look at the case in its bearing upon the future conduct of public servants. Had the Government spared Mr. Cowan, it would have had to face the risk that officers with less judgment than enthusiasm would thenceforward think much more lightly of setting aside the law when in a difficulty. This would have been an enormous evil. But what of the other horn of the dilemma? The inevitable result of Mr. Cowan's punishment will be that henceforth no Government servant will dare to set aside the law in any emergency. Fiat judicium, ruant patria et justitia, will henceforward be the motto of all who are not prepared to offer themselves and their reputations a sacrifice for a Government that dares not be grateful for it. No man will trust to his own judgment of the reality of an emergency which will be estimated by the Government with a strong bias in favour of the law, and probably after the results of his own promptitude have deprived the circumstances of their true complexion. Let it be remembered again that we are neither condemning the Government nor defending Mr. Cowan. We are merely pointing out how awkward was the dilemma in which the former was placed, and how much there is to be said on either side. It is very easy for moralists to arrive at unqualified decisions. They carry about with them the canons of absolute truth. We do not pretend to be moralists, and whether or not the canon, Fiat justitia, &c., is absolutely valid as regards the conduct of individuals, we deny that it is so valid as regards that of Governments. It is one of the advantages of a strong Government that it can afford to be just where a weak Government cannot. It is one of the advantages of India that it possesses a strong Government.

A STEP IN RANK.—A Rangoon paper says that a Mr. E. Pusey, formerly a sergeant in H.M.'s 76th Regiment, and afterwards a scorekeeper at Thayetmyo, has been offered a general's command in the army of H.M. the King of Burmah. From a sergeant to a general is a good step.

STATION TALK.

PESHAWAR, April 30.—The month of April, just drawn to a close, has been really a most enjoyable one at this corner of the Punjab. Copious and frequent showers of rain have kept the air cool and pleasant, and, what is better still, have tended to considerably reduce the price of grain, which a short time back was selling at almost famine rates. On the evening of Thursday, the 25th, there was a very heavy storm of wind and rain, accompanied by much thunder and lightning, and the next morning some of the peaks of the lower range of hills above the Khyber Pass were actually observed to have a covering of snow. Since then the weather has been settled, with clear, bright, sunshiny days, and the early mornings are positively chilly. The station just now is looking its best, the numerous hedgerows of blossoming roses being pretty beyond measure. And yet, Sir, the exodus of the fair sex to the hills is already commencing, and the archery ground presents on band nights quite a deserted appearance to what it did a fortnight since. More's the pity, say I, in which sentiment I doubt not there are many who will re-echo me. Four companies of H.M.'s 1st Battalion 6th Regiment, and the same number from the 55th Regiment, numbering 500 men in all, left for the hill sanitarium of Cherat about ten days ago. Colonel Hume, 55th Regiment, is appointed to command, and judging by the successful way in which he laid out and superintended, so to say, the new hill station of Chukrata, a better selection for this appointment could not have been made. Doubtless Cherat at the end of the present hot season will present a very different aspect to what it does now, and next year may possibly compete with its big neighbour, Murree, in its attraction as a hill residence for sober-minded wives. Many a husband would in that case be enabled to avail himself of a ten days' leave in the course of the hot season to visit the loving partner of his joys and sorrows, but which indulgence the long and expensive trip to Murree in most cases quite debars him from taking. Brigadier General Wilson has, I hear, commenced building at Cherat, so we have a good example set us, at any rate. The principal task in military circles is the forthcoming camp of exercise, which rumour says is to take place either at Hussun Abdul or Campbellpore, but I take it the actual site remains still a moot point, so there are objections civil and political to both these places.—Indian Public Opinion Correspondent.

GHAZEEPORE, May 3.—The Ghazeeapore Institute, which has been lately established in the city by our worthy magistrate, Mr. Saunders, has presented an address of welcome to Lord Northbrook, the new Governor-General. The members being unable to present the address with their own hands, as the train in which his Excellency was travelling did not stop at the Zamaneah station, requested their President and Collector to present the address to the Governor-General at some other place. After expressing their deep-felt feelings of loyalty and attachment to the throne, the members say that—"The policy enunciated by our new Viceroy for the future government of India in his speech at the banquet of Winchester has created great hope of our future well-being; and we sincerely trust that the superstructure, which is wanting on the foundations for Indian civilisation and improvement laid by his predecessors, will attain that degree of perfection which we are longing to see." They also say—"Never was a Government begun under better auspices than at present, if an opinion may be formed from the eloquent speech of the Viceroy delivered at the Winchester banquet, in which he pledges himself to abide by the principles laid down by her Most Gracious Majesty in her Proclamation, the words of which he quoted verbatim on that occasion." Such sentiments call forth from the inmost recesses of our hearts the deepest feelings of gratitude and affection, and we can truly promise in return that his Excellency can safely and confidently rely on our cordial support, so long as he is actuated by those motives, in any project, great or small, which he might devise during his administration for the well-being of this country. Dr. King, Superintendent of the Calcutta Botanical Garden, came here a few days ago, being deputed, it is said, by the Government to inquire into the cause of the breaking out of the "blight," which did considerable damage to the opium crop last year. His stay was a short one, and it is not known how far he was successful in his investigation. A woman of Karon in this district is now being tried for poisoning her own sons. It is said she committed the devilish deed on account of some domestic quarrel. Joint-family system is at the bottom of these evils. The weather is as it is in May. After eight in the morning till evening the sun becomes very oppressive, but as yet the city is quite healthy.—Pioneer Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

BHOPAL.—The Begum of Bhopal is said to have resolved to relieve her subjects from the chaukidari-tax, and to pay the expense of maintaining the police from the royal revenues.

INFANTICIDE.—The provisions of the Act for the prevention of the murder of female infants have been extended to Oudh.

THE BEAS BRIDGE.—The Agra paper states that the bridge over the Beas would be opened on May 15, and that passengers will then travel through without change of carriage or any extra charge.

CALCUTTA NORMAL SCHOOL.—The Director of Public Instruction, Bengal, has recommended to Government that the monthly grant of Rs. 200, asked for by the Indian Reform Association for the Calcutta Female Normal School, be granted.

THE DENGUE FEVER.—Two Judges of the Calcutta Small Cause Court are at present laid up with dengue fever, Messrs. Fagan and McEwen. The Judge of the Sealdah Small Cause Court is also laid up.

LORD NORTHBROOKE'S DONATIONS.—H.E. the Viceroy has sent a donation of Rs. 1,000 to Madras for the sailors whose ships were wrecked in the late cyclone. Lord Northbrook has subscribed Rs. 1,000 towards the fund for the building of a head quarters for the Calcutta volunteers.

MILITARY.—Colonels Swinhoe and Smythe, R.A., and Colonel Dodgson, B.S.C., will proceed shortly to Shillong as a Court of Inquiry to investigate into a matter involving a charge of insubordinate conduct on the part of Colonel Hicks, 44th N.I., towards General Bouchier, C.B.

LORD NAPIER OF MERCHISTOUN.—Before leaving Calcutta, Lord Napier of Merchistoun requested Mr. Jansen, the Danish artist, to paint a portrait of his son, the Hon. J. Napier, and we hear that his Lordship expressed himself much pleased with the result. Mr. Napier was taken in Highland costume, the uniform of his regiment—the 92nd Highlanders.

THE VICEROY'S STAFF.—The Viceroy has appointed the following offices Honorary Aides-de-Camp on his personal staff:—Lieutenant-Colonel A. J. Hadfield, Madras Invalid Establishment; Colonel Sir W. H. R. Green, Bombay Staff Corps; Lieutenant-Colonel J. W. W. Osborne, Madras Staff Corps; Colonel J. C. Graves, Bombay Cavalry; and Lieutenant-Colonel R. Baigrie, Bombay Staff Corps.

EDUCATION.—The Maharajah of Vizianagram has, we see, placed a sum of Rs. 150 per mensem at the disposal of the Bengal Government for the purpose of founding engineering and surveying scholarships. The Lieutenant-Governor proposes for the present to establish ten scholarships, which will be tenable for two years by boys who may attend some recognised surveying and engineering class at a Government zillah school or at any aided school of similar calibre.

PRESENT TO MAJOR BURNE.—The Secretaries to the Government of India have presented Major Burne, private secretary to the late Lord Mayo, with a very handsome silver vase as a token of their appreciation of the manner in which he discharged the varied duties of his late most difficult appointment. The vase was supplied by Messrs. Hamilton and Co., and is valued at £100. It bears the following inscription:—“On one side, ‘In memory of Lord Mayo's Viceroyalty;’ on the other side, ‘Presented to Major Owen Burne by the Secretaries to the Government of India, E. C. Bayley, C. U. Aitchison, R. B. Chapman, C. H. Dickens, A. O. Hume.’”

THE SANTALS.—We learn that the combination of mahajans in the Santal Parganas, to which we referred on Tuesday last, extends over some 300 villages in the Southern Parganas, including some villages on the Mahespur Estate. It is said that the bannias not only insist on their former rates of interest, but require that the cattle pledged as security be given over into their possession at once. A sum of Rs. 20,000 in this part of the country alone will be required to purchase seed and prosecute the ordinary agricultural operations—and to be of any use the money must be found and distributed within the next month.

THE PUNJAB TRACTION ENGINE.—The traction engine, the same that was tried on the Simla and Umballa-road, has broken down. Some weeks ago it sallied gaily forth from Shadera, with the view of reaching Wazeerabad, laden with a lot of material for the wire tramway proposed for the salt mines; but it had scarcely gone a couple of hours when it came to an ignominious standstill and could only be induced to move thereafter by means of bullock-power. It is now undergoing further repair at Wazeerabad, and it is asserted that it will be soon all right again, and answer the expectations of its constructors and projectors considerably better than expected. This, however, remains to be seen. Past failures are certainly against a prosperous future.—Pioneer Correspondent.

MARRIAGE EXPENSES.—Principally through the exertions of Mr. J. Simson, the Collector, the movement for the retrenchment of marriage expenses has been highly successful in the Azimghar district, and has been received by the people with universal satisfaction. The report says:—“Scales of proposed expenditure and rules of practice have been drawn up and assented to, clan panchayats formed in every tappeh of the district, and a large saddar committee appointed for a careful superintendence of the whole district organisation. The Muhammadans of the district are preparing to follow the example of the Hindus in the limitation of marriage expenditure, although they do not consider it desirable to prescribe definite scales of expenditure. They have, however, agreed generally to accept the spirit of the rules, and have appointed pargana committees to secure this desirable result.”

SIND, PUNJAB, AND DELHI RAILWAY.—General Abbott in a few days gives over charge of the agency of the Scinde, Punjab and Delhi Railway, which he has had charge of since August 1868, to Mr. Joseph Harrison, the chief engineer, who will retain charge of the agency until the permanent agent is sent out or appointed by the Home Board. Mr. Charles Stone, C.E., on his way out from England, where he has been absent on leave, is to officiate as chief engineer during Mr. Harrison's appointment as officiating agent.—Pioneer Correspondent.

NEW PRESIDENCY COLLEGE AT CALCUTTA.—We are glad to observe from a letter, published in the supplement to the Calcutta Gazette, from the Government of Bengal to the Director of Public Instruction, that his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor has, after all, accorded his sanction to the construction of a new building for the Presidency College. After full inquiry and personal examination, it appears to his Honour that not only is the present accommodation of the Presidency College totally inadequate to so great and flourishing an institution, but that in reality there is no college building at all, the classes being accommodated partly in the school buildings and partly in a hired house; and seeing how great an engine is this college in the education and development of the natives of Bengal, and how great a hold it has on the interests and affections of the highly enlightened native community in and about Calcutta, his Honour has come to the conclusion that he is justified in building a new college.—Indian Daily News.

NEWS FROM MANDALAY.—A correspondent of the Rangoon Times says:—Colonel Horace Browne, Deputy Commissioner, has arrived here by the Mandalay. He is supposed to be the bearer of a Royal letter from the Queen of England to his Burmah Majesty. We are all surprised, if not shocked, to find a commission of such import entrusted to the hands of a simple Deputy Commissioner, instead of being sent with one of more consequence. I do not mean to say that Colonel Browne is not fitted for the work, but I mean to say that more honour and respect should have been given to a letter from Her Majesty which is not seen here often of a day. Besides, the Government might have sent him up in a Government steamer instead of in a common mail-boat. When the King of Burmah wished to send representatives to meet the late Viceroy, he ordered them to go down in his own Royal steamer. The British might sometimes learn a little from the Burman Government, especially where it concerns matters of State. When Colonel Browne arrived, 6,000 men, cavalry and infantry, and fifty elephants, were sent to the steamer to escort him from thence to the Residency. This is good taste on the part of his Majesty, and shows how friendly inclined he is towards the English. The procession was nearly a mile long, and it was a fine sight to see. Colonel Browne will see the King to-morrow, when he will be similarly escorted to the Royal presence. It is to be hoped much good may come of this interview, and we all await in suspense to learn what the contents of the Royal letter may be.

DEATH OF COLONEL O'DONOGHUE.—Colonel O'Donoghue, of H.M.'s 76th Regiment, died at Secunderabad on the 18th May, and was buried the following evening. The Resident of Hyderabad, and all officers off duty in the station attended the funeral.

THE HILL-TRIBES.—A further sum of Rs. 1,000 has been placed at the disposal of the Commissioner of the Nilgiri Hills for the purchase of a collection of the arms and implements used by the hill-tribes, and for photographs of sculpture and objects of archaeological interest in the district.

LORD HOBART.—Whenever a new Governor arrives the natives get up some strange report or other about him. The low caste natives on the present occasion have taken an idea into their heads that Lord Hobart wishes to make them Christians, and compel them to go to church.—Madras Times.

MILITARY FEMALE ORPHAN ASYLUM.—Major Wright, late Adjutant of the Volunteer Guards, has been elected Secretary to the Military Female Orphan Asylum, on a salary of Rs. 150 per mensem. Major Wright is already attached to a native regiment, and is Tamil Translator to Government, and acting Telegu Translator to Government.

GANJAM.—The news from Ganjam is not very encouraging. There has been slight rain in some places, but the want of water is still felt. Paddy is brought in large quantities from Cuttack and Pooree. The district is unhealthy. Cholera prevails to some extent, and small-pox is also prevalent. There is also cattle disease throughout the district.

THE DENGUE FEVER.—The dengue fever is gradually spreading throughout British Burmah. The natives call it toke qua, or crooked, and state that it has only once before visited the country since the occupation of the British. The Rangoon Times apologises to its subscribers for filling its columns with nothing but a law report, as the editor is a victim of dengue.

THE FLOODS AT VELLORE.—The distress in and around the neighbourhood of Vellore, consequent on the ravages committed by the late storm, on the town and its vicinity, is very great, and subscriptions are urgently needed for the relief of the houseless poor, whose dwellings have been blown away. In Madras the distressed sailors' fund is more than enough to meet the demands upon it. But the fund for the relief of the poor sufferers at Vellore languishes, and is not nearly large enough to meet the urgent demands made upon it. Excluding the military population of Vellore, who are taken care of, and provided for, by Government, there are about five thousand people destitute and houseless, and between seven hundred and eight hundred people have lost their lives. This casualty is a far more serious one than that which happened at Madras, where the loss of human life was comparatively trifling in comparison with that which has taken place at Vellore.

THE LAST AND PRESENT GOVERNOR OF MADRAS.—This week has witnessed the final departure of Lord Napier from Madras, and the arrival of Lord Hobart, his successor. The Sumatra with Lord and Lady Napier on board, was expected to arrive on Saturday, and arrangements had been made for Lord Napier to inaugurate the Madras Waterworks on Saturday afternoon, and a large party was invited to meet their Excellencies at Government House in the evening. The steamer had, however, met with bad weather in the Bay and did not arrive till Sunday, when Lord Napier, accompanied by Lady Napier, landed under Viceroyal honours. On Monday morning his lordship opened the waterworks, and at five in the afternoon Lord and Lady Napier again embarked, and pursued their journey Europewards. Both at the landing and embarkation large assemblies both of Europeans and natives attended. On Wednesday the Surat with Lord and Lady Hobart arrived, and Lord Hobart was sworn as Governor the same evening.—Madras Times, May 18.

THE LATE CYCLONE.—Now that the great storm, which committed so much havoc amongst the shipping in our roads the beginning of this month, has passed away, people are beginning to discuss the question as to whether or not our marine officials, as well as the captains of the vessels, exercised a proper amount of vigilance and attention with regard to the coming storm, and whether the ships should not have put to sea before the storm was actually upon us. The report of the Marine Department, which is before the public, is satisfactory in this respect, and shows that everything that could be done by this department was done. The conduct of the masters of the vessels, according to the Marine Department's report, seems also free from blame. They did all they could possibly do under the circumstances, and as regards putting to sea, an alternative sometimes resorted to in similar cases, it has been pretty clearly shown that such an alternative, in this case, was out of the question. The fact is the storm was so stealthy in its march upon us, and so sudden in its development, when it set in, that no one—marine officials or commanders of vessels—had any time for taking steps to avert the calamity.—Madras Athenæum.

THE DUKE OF ARGYLE'S DESPATCH.—At the public meeting of the Uncovenanted Service, held at Madras on Monday, May 13th, after the memorial to the Duke of Argyll had been read and approved, on the motion of Dr. Urquhart it was resolved, "That, in the opinion of this meeting, the instructions of the Secretary of State for India excluding Europeans in India from the Uncovenanted Civil Service appear to be unjust, impolitic, and illegal;—unjust because in many cases India is practically the only home of many Europeans who have yet no legal domicile in it; impolitic because such exclusion tends to promote a bitter feeling between the races in India, and tends to weaken the hold of Great Britain upon the Empire; and illegal because it is in direct opposition to the spirit and terms of the Queen's proclamation, which declares that all classes of her subjects, of whatever race, creed, or colour, shall have equal rights, and that no one shall be excluded, on account of his race or creed, from any public employment for which his education, talents, and integrity, fit him." Resolved also,—"That the above resolution be signed by the chairman of this meeting for transmission with memorial to the Right Honourable the Secretary of State for India."

POONA.—Among other things that Poona has to suffer it is feared that there will be a water-famine before long. The water in the tank from which the town gets its supply is fast drying up. The people are trying to get water from other sources, but it is feared that even with this help there will be great scarcity if rain does not fall early and in great abundance.

STATION TALK.

BROACH, May 4.—A large meeting of citizens was held in Broach on Monday evening last to collect subscriptions for a national memorial to the late Lord Mayo. The meeting was held in the Collector's kutcherry, and in the Collector's absence the Civil Surgeon was unanimously called on to take the chair. He opened the proceedings by an eloquent speech, detailing the many virtues, accomplishments, and good qualities of the late distinguished statesman. This was followed by another speech from Mr. Callianrai, who spoke in Guzerati. He said he could not find words strong enough to express his profound sorrow at the national loss that had been sustained; and he concluded his speech by offering to subscribe munificently to the proposed object. It was said he had put down his name for Rs. 1,000. Mr. Ellis then remarked that it would be as well to know, before sending round the list for subscriptions, what was going to be done with the money when subscribed. Mr. Budge also remarked that no doubt everybody was sorry to learn that Lord Mayo had been brutally murdered, but he could not quite see why subscriptions should be raised to build some ugly monument to perpetuate his memory. He should like to be better informed as to what Lord Mayo had done to benefit India; the mere fact of his having been murdered did not appear to him to call for any special testimonial. This gave rise to some commotion, and the chairman had to call for order. The Hoozoor Deputy deprecated the opinion of the last speaker, in which he was supported by Mr. White, Mr. Oomedram, and Mr. Macarthy; while Mr. Dhunjee-shaw, the chief inspector of police on the railway, said we ought to show our generosity on such an occasion, in which he was supported by numerous speakers, amongst whom was Mr. Eduljee Muncherjee, Mr. Rustomjee Pallonjee, Mr. N. R. Oliver, and several others. Mr. Aitken proposed that a committee be appointed to receive subscriptions, which was seconded by Mr. Rustomjee Dullal. Anchund Mul-lachund concurred in these views, and a committee was accordingly appointed. The meeting was very numerously attended, there being upwards of three hundred present, and the subscriptions announced amounted to a goodly sum. The meeting concluded with a vote of thanks to the chairman, and three cheers for the Queen, Lord Northbrook, and Sir Seymour Fitzgerald.

JACOBABAD, April 25.—That obnoxious tax—the Non-Agricultural Cess—is causing the greatest annoyance and discontent here among the people. The native officers of the corps here are grumbling over it, and have complained to their commanding officers of its injustice. These latter have, I am glad to say, reported the circumstances to the Commandant-in-Chief for representation to Government, and it is hoped that the Government, before long, will repeal the Act ere any evil consequences arise. Two Sundays ago there had been a rumour current, and which lasted for nearly a week, that it was expected the native infantry would be put in orders to march to the frontier to force the belligerents to come to terms with the Khan. The men were glad that they were to have an opportunity to show the worth of their metal, while their wives were in tears at the close departure of the regiment for action. What has been the cause of this? one would ask. The head-quarters of the army had sent two telegrams requiring an immediate reply as to the quantity of ammunition that was in store, and how many rounds per man. The River Indus has risen, and the canals are quite full. The bar of the Noorwah and Sonewah are not open yet, as the clearances have not been completed, and it is expected that the force of the water will burst the banks of the Begaree and Sind Canals, which will cause the Shikarpore districts to be flooded. The work is, therefore, being quickly pushed on. Going on leave is the order of the day. Major Mills, of Jacob's Rifles, is going on furlough; Dr. Banks and Lieutenant Smith, of the same regiment, have taken three months' leave, which they intend spending in Cashmere; Dr. Byramjee, the Civil Surgeon, will also go on leave next month. The appointment of Political Superintendent and Commandant-in-Chief, Upper Sind Frontier, is, I hear, to be split; Colonel Mainwaring will be Commandant, and Major Harrison, of the Khelat Agency, will, it is said, be Political Superintendent; Captain Reynolds, Assistant Political Superintendent, will take up the post of Political Agent of Khelat. These changes will be temporary till the return of Colonel Phayre, who is now on furlough. Mr. M. H. Scott is expected at Shikarpore about May 15, to take up the appointment of Sessions Judge of the Shikarpore district, in place of Mr. Phillips. The Shikarpore "Courtship in a Graveyard" case will be determined by him. It is time that the proceedings in this case came to a close. I hear that two gentlemen of the long robe are come on speck to Shikarpore from Hyderabad. They were not an hour in this station when they were sought for advice by the complainant.—Bombay Gazette Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

A REGULAR COLLEGE FOR AHMEDABAD.—We learn from a private letter that it is in contemplation to establish a regular Arts College at Ahmedabad in the place of the present Guzerathi Provincial College, which has been in existence for the last eleven years. The vacancy caused by the departure of the Law Tutor, Rao Saheb Vasudev Juggonath Kirtikar, will not be filled, but the funds originally subscribed by the principal merchants of the place, together with further subscriptions from its inhabitants and the princely donation of a lack of rupees of H.H. the present Guicowar will, it is believed, provide funds sufficient for the establishment of a really collegiate institution, since the Government have already pledged themselves to grant a sum equal to the total subscriptions of the inhabitants for carrying out this great project.—Indu Prakash.

BACK BAY RECLAMATION COMPANY.—A meeting of shareholders of this company was held on Wednesday at the office of Messrs. Ritchie, Steuart and Co., the liquidators, for the purpose of appointing Mr. Charles Douglas, a partner in the firm, an additional liquidator. Mr. J. G. Smith was called to the chair, and, after reading the notice convening the meeting, he explained that he was the only partner of the firm in Bombay, and that, as he was going home, it was necessary to add Mr. Douglas's name as a liquidator. The assets of the company have been finally wound up, and it was only to distribute the remaining assets to those who had not yet claimed them that the liquidators were continued in office. On the motion of Mr. G. R. Wilson, seconded by Dr. L. P. Rozario, Mr. Douglas was elected a liquidator of the company. The meeting then separated.—Bombay Gazette, May 13.

AN ODD PETITION.—A somewhat curious petition was addressed the other day to Mr. G. S. V. Fitzgerald, in his capacity as hon. secretary of the Bombay Mayo Memorial Committee, signed by the Patel of Mowjee Salekaree and sixty others, "inhabitants of the Juth Jagheer at present residing in the town of Sattara." The petitioners express their willingness to "contribute their mite towards so laudable an object" as "a memorial at the Presidency to the late lamented Earl Mayo;" but they confess that the proposal to employ political officers in collecting subscriptions has "filled them with agitation and alarm, inasmuch as if the power of raising subscriptions within his Jagheer be entrusted to the Chief of Juth, he is very certain to abuse the privilege by oppressing his subjects under the egis of superior authority, and at the same time serving his own wicked designs." They conclude by praying that some other agent may be employed for the purpose.—Times of India.

THE SCHOOL OF ARTS.—The association of ideas with a school of arts suggests a magnificent building, whatever in gloomy but thought-suggesting Gothic, sprightliness-inspiring Italian, or beauty-filling Corinthian or Ionic; but, if it be disappointment that is not sought for, the visitor to the Bombay School of Arts had better banish from his mind all orders of architecture except the primitive, still to be seen illustrated in a shanty by the side of an Irish bog or a hovel in a Highland glen; for it is in such a place that Mr. Terry and Mr. Kipling spend their talents in teaching the youthful Hindoo or Parsee of Bombay the mysteries of curve and line, and the divine use of the chisel and the brush and palette. Among those who expected to see something not utterly barbaric in the Sir Jamsetjee Jeejeebhoy School of Arts was apparently the Governor of Bombay when he went on May 3 to deliver the prizes to the students after he had laid the foundation stone of the High School. One might be ten feet off what is soundly denominated the School of Arts before seeing it, for ordinarily the eyes are cast a little higher than what is necessary to see a shed when what is expected is a building devoted to and worthy of the arts of Apelles and Praxiteles; and when his Excellency reached the door of the hut wherein the prizes were to be given he did not seem to have recovered from the demolition of his first impressions, and he was still more astonished when he noticed the place he was ushered into. Conceive a long and low shed, dimly lighted with candles, with dirty walls and dirty roof, and here and there a skylight. The first objects which catch the eye are Hindoo bheesties, naked Achilleses, and other samples of the human form divine, drawn in glittering black lead on grey or white cardboard. As the optics get accustomed to the yellow-whitish light of the candles, they may discern at one end of the shed white dresses, and further experience may even show dark faces made still darker under the shadow of a turban like a wheel filled in with cloth; about twenty feet from the gable wall at the other end of the room statues and models, some on pedestals, some not, may be made out; what is on the wall itself darkness forbids your telling—possibly, it is drawings, for there seems to be something white there; from the floor to the middle of the roof may be twenty feet, but as the roof slopes like the top of a Noah's ark, the height is much less where it rests on the wooden walls; add intense heat and nasal consciousness that perspiration is present somewhere; do not forget the condensed noise of fifty native students as quiet as it is in nature for them to be;—conceive all this, and an idea of the school may be obtained, and the difficulties which it will be seen the Superintendent and Mr. Kipling have to contend with will entitle them to be reckoned martyrs to science and to art. We are glad that Mr. Terry secured the Governor to give the prizes this year to his students; it may have an effect much to be desired.—Bombay Gazette.

Official Papers.

THE EXECUTION OF KOOKA PRISONERS AT MALEHR KOTLA.

The Gazette of India of Saturday, May 11, contains the following:—
From E. C. Bayley, Esq., c.s.i., Secretary to the Government of India, Home Department, to the Secretary of the Government of the Punjab.

In continuation of my letter No. 569, dated March 22 last, and with reference to your reply No. 1,270, dated April 11, on the subject of the summary execution of Kooka prisoners at Malehr Kotla, I am directed to state that the Governor general in Council is now in a position to pass final orders in this painful case.

2. H.E. in Council has maturely considered the facts stated by Mr. Forsyth and Mr. Cowan, and the expressions of his Honour the Lieut. governor's opinion contained in your letters of Jan. 19, No. 23-C, Feb. 7, No. 59-C, and of Feb. 16 No. 78-C, and, without recapitulating all the circumstances of the case, which will be found in the memorandum appended, he thinks it right to recall the following leading facts to your recollection as being those on which his decision proceeds.

3. On Jan. 17 forty-nine persons, many of whom were wounded, were, by Mr. Cowan's orders, blown away from guns at Malehr Kotla without trial. That these persons had been guilty of a great crime there is no doubt, but both the manner of the execution and its excessive and indiscriminate severity stand in need of the strongest justification. In the opinion of H.E. in Council nothing short of absolute necessity could justify these proceedings. If any judicial inquiry, however summary, had taken place, a distinction might have been made between ringleaders and followers, and the usual mode of punishment would have been employed. At the time when the extra-judicial execution was ordered the disturbance which had taken place had been effectually suppressed. Mr. Cowan had at his disposal considerable bodies of troops, and there is no evidence whatever to show that actual immediate danger was or could have been apprehended either from the prisoners themselves, or from other members of the sect to which they belonged. The only fact which can be said to suggest the existence of such danger is, that various small bodies of Kukas were seen in the neighbourhood of Malehr Kotla who promptly disappeared. It appears, however, to H.E. in Council that their dispersion was owing to the defeat of their associates and not to the summary punishment inflicted, and in this belief he is supported by the view taken by his Honour in your letter of Feb. 7 above quoted, paragraph 10, in which it is said—

"The Lieut. governor is not of opinion that the evidence now submitted indicates that the immediate retirement of the bands of Kukas who were observed moving towards Kotla was the result of the executions ordered by Mr. Cowan, for in nearly every instance they are said to have gone back on the 16th, the day the attack took place, whereas the executions were carried out on the morning of the 17th. Their retirement appears to have been caused really by the attack having been beaten off by the Kotla people."

4. It is, in short, obvious both from the circumstances of the case and from many expressions in Mr. Cowan's letters that his motive in ordering the executions was to prevent a rising, which he considered imminent, by an act calculated to strike terror into the whole Kuka sect. In illustration of this, it is to be observed that both Mr. Forsyth and Mr. Cowan refer to the small effect which the execution of the Raikote murderers in due course of law had had in the way of deterring the Kukas from further violence.

5. Before adverting to the peculiar circumstances under which Mr. Cowan acted, the Governor general in Council thinks it right to make some general observations on the principle on which that officer seems to have proceeded, as H.E. in Council has reason to fear that it may have considerable influence on the minds of officers who feel themselves liable to be placed in positions of difficulty. This principle, perhaps rather felt than avowed, is that law is meant only for quiet times, and that officers are justified in disregarding it as soon as political danger is apprehended, and in substituting punishments inflicted at their own discretion, and without any other measure than their own estimate, formed on the spot under the pressure of immediate excitement, of what is required in the particular case for the sake of example.

6. This view appears to H.E. in Council to involve a grave error.

7. H.E. in Council desires to impress in the most emphatic manner on all civil and military officers whom it may concern the broad principle that the law of the land administered by the established courts is the instrument to which Government looks, and in which it trusts, for the purpose of suppressing crime, maintaining peace, and deterring ill-disposed persons from following the example of malefactors; and that it is a grave act of insubordination and presumption for any individual officer to take upon himself to decide upon the spur of the moment that the law is not strong enough to protect society, or that the punishments which can be inflicted in its ordinary course are not sufficiently severe to deter from crime. To do so is to usurp the highest prerogative of the Government. Cases may arise in which Government may consider it necessary to punish particular offences with exceptional severity, or to arm particular offences with special powers of summary trial and execution; but till this is done, the duty of all civil and military officers in all cases is to treat criminals when captured in the regular course of law, that is to say, to hand them over for trial to the proper tribunals.

8. In order to show that this course is not inconsistent with any degree of vigour and promptitude which can be required in the most arduous circumstances, it is necessary to bear in mind that for the suppression of violent crime, and the apprehension and safe custody of offenders, the law authorises and indeed requires the use of any degree of military force which may be necessary for the purpose. Rebels with arms in their hands, gangs of dacoits banded together for the purpose of robbery and murder, persons in the act of waging war against the Queen, and all who aid and abet them, may and ought to be attacked by force of arms precisely as armed invaders may be attacked. If their behaviour and number is such that it would, upon military grounds, be improper to grant them quarter if they were engaged in ordinary war, they might be killed upon the spot. In short, there is no severity which by the usages of war may be inflicted upon the enemies' troops for the purpose of defeating and breaking them up, which may not, in strict accordance with law, be inflicted upon bands of criminals, whether rebels or not, for the purpose of their defeat or arrest.

9. The one thing which cannot be permitted to any civil or military officer in any case whatever, is the irregular assumption of the office of the judge and of the legislator. No such officer has right to punish his prisoners, still less has he any right to punish them according to a law made by himself, after the fact, and in reference to the circumstances of a particular case. The law authorises officers to do whatever is necessary in order to suppress crime and arrest criminals, but neither law nor any principle of justice or policy justifies them in punishing prisoners, when taken, as they think proper.

10. Officers may perhaps be assisted in understanding and applying to particular cases as they arise the principle above stated by a few observations on the policy which they are meant to carry out.

11. To administer justice with mercy is the fixed and settled policy of the Government of India, but it is absolutely essential to this great subject that justice should be administered according to known rules, with due deliberation and with discrimination between degrees of guilt. Sentences pronounced under excitement, and with little time for reflection, are liable to be neither just nor wise. It is probable that they will bear upon them the stamp of individual resentment or anxiety rather than that of deliberate justice. Summary orders are often taken for acts of vigour when they are in truth acts of weakness. Such orders frequently show that those who give them doubt their own strength, and are afraid to be merciful to their opponents.

12. The Governor general in Council cannot consent to assume the attitude in which the ratification of such acts would place him. H.E. in Council trusts, on the one hand, in the effect which a course of just and merciful rule cannot fail to produce in time in the minds of the people. He relies, on the other hand, on the existence of a military force sufficient to protect the mass of quiet and well-disposed persons against the small minority who for whatever reasons might be willing to plunge the country into anarchy and civil war.

13. H.E. in Council cannot consent to be forced by the crime of a few fanatics into the sanction of acts repugnant to the whole spirit of British rule. The British Government is strong enough to keep order and suppress crime, and there is no occasion for indiscriminate severity; nor in any case could the exercise of such severity be a source of strength.

14. With reference to the special circumstances of Mr. Cowan's case, H.E. in Council has to observe as follows.

15. In the first place H.E. is of opinion that Mr. Cowan's clear duty was to have detained the prisoners in custody until they could be proceeded against in due course of law. Referring to the principles already stated, there is no circumstance which tends to justify or even greatly to excuse Mr. Cowan's conduct. The prisoners were absolutely helpless. A large proportion of them were badly wounded. They had surrendered to very inferior numbers, and were under the guard of a considerable military force, which might have been increased to any required extent. Under these circumstances their illegal indiscriminate execution was a measure for which there was no excuse. H.E. in Council cannot regard as excuse Mr. Cowan's belief that the execution was politically expedient. In fact, that he set aside the existing law, because he thought it expedient to do so in the particular case, is one of the elements in the offence which H.E. in Council considers Mr. Cowan to have committed.

16. There are, however, other matters in connection with Mr. Cowan's conduct which it is impossible to pass over, and which have been in part brought to his Excellency's notice at a very late stage in the proceedings. The following references to the documents on record will set this in a clear light.

17. On the 16th January Mr. Cowan telegraphed to the Punjab Government for leave to execute four men in a summary manner.

18. On the same day Mr. Forsyth wrote Mr. Cowan a demi-official note which has been lost, in which Mr. Forsyth directed Mr. Cowan to send the prisoners to Sherpoor to be kept until Mr. Forsyth could send a guard to take charge of them. Mr. Forsyth believes that his letter said that the guard was to take them into Loodiana for trial. Mr. Cowan believes that trial was not referred to. Be this as it may, the letter reached Mr. Cowan some hours before any of the executions took place. He says:—"I put the note in my pocket and thought no more about it. It contained only a suggestion which could not be acted on, for the captured Kukas were then close to Kotla on their way in." This conduct would imply that in Mr. Cowan's opinion the main point of the note was that the men should be sent to Sherpoor, whereas it should have been also apparent to Mr. Cowan that Mr. Forsyth desired that the men should be kept in custody.

19. The executions, therefore, cannot be reconciled with the spirit of Mr. Forsyth's instruction, and took place before any reply had been received to a telegraphic message sent by Mr. Cowan the day before to the Punjab Government for leave to execute four men only.

20. Before the executions were finished, and whilst six or seven men were tied to the guns, Mr. Cowan received an official letter containing a positive order from Mr. Forsyth to proceed according to law. Mr. Forsyth's words were—"I request that you will prepare at once the case against such as appear to you to be deserving of capital punishment, and I shall then give immediate orders. But with reference to your expressed desire for promptitude, the case is not sufficiently urgent to justify the abandonment of the very simple form of procedure we have at hand." Upon this Mr. Cowan says—"After reading Mr. Forsyth's letter I handed it to Colonel Perkins, district superintendent of police, with the remark that it would be impossible to stay the execution of the men already tied to guns, that such a proceeding would have the worst effect on the people around us."

21. H.E. in Council cannot see that there could have been any serious difficulty in staying the execution without even communicating the reasons for doing so to the bystanders. It was Mr. Cowan's clear duty to obey Mr. Forsyth's order, in a case in which the lives of six or seven persons were at stake and where the act forbidden was upon the face of it illegal.

22. While the Governor general in Council recognises that the lives of all the criminals involved in the recent outbreak in the Punjab were in principle forfeited to the laws, H.E. is under the painful necessity of affirming that the course followed by Mr. Cowan was illegal, that it was not palliated by any public necessity, and that it was characterised by incidents which gave it a complexion of barbarity. That course was commenced in opposition to the spirit of instructions received from superior authority, and, in the absence of sanction, invoked but not awaited; it was prosecuted to completion in contravention of positive orders.

23. Under all these circumstances, H.E. in Council is compelled to direct that Mr. Cowan be removed from the service. He does so with deep regret, as Mr. Cowan's previous character and conduct have been unexceptionable, and as he acted with promptitude in concerting measures for the repression of the movement.

24. It remains now to consider the case of Mr. Forsyth in reference to the approval passed by him on the act of Mr. Cowan, and to the confirmation by him as Commissioner of Umballa of the sentence passed by the native officials of the Malehr Kotla State with the concurrence of Mr. Cowan against sixteen other prisoners.

25. In confirming this sentence, and in ordering the immediate execution of the prisoners, Mr. Forsyth was acting in a political rather than in a judicial capacity. It is the duty of officers so situated to be specially on their guard against permitting the Native States which are under their superintendence to act with a degree of harshness or precipitation alien to the spirit of English rule; and although Mr. Forsyth's proceedings were no doubt legal, that fact alone ought not to protect him from censure, if his proceedings showed a want of that merciful discrimination which ought in all cases to be characteristic of the British administration of justice. In this Mr. Forsyth seems to H.E. in Council to have failed, and the failure was apparently due to his having permitted a not unnatural desire to support a subordinate, to assume undue prominence in his mind in a case where interests of far greater importance were concerned.

26. On the morning of January 17 Mr. Forsyth sent telegraphed to the Bombay Government as follows:—

"Referring to Cowan's telegram asking permission to execute at once four men. Since then we have got seventy men. I am on the spot, and can dispose of the cases according to form, and without delay. Exceptional action not necessary, and would increase excitement, better allayed, &c., &c."

27. On the night of the 16th he wrote a demi-official letter, which reached Mr. Cowan before the execution. On the 17th he wrote two separate letters, one official and one demi-official; the first directing Mr. Cowan, and the second requesting him in the most pressing, though in most friendly terms, not to proceed illegally. On the 18th, having received the report of the executions, he gave an unqualified confirmation of all that Mr. Cowan had done in the following terms:—"My dear Cowan,—I fully approve and confirm all you have done. You have acted admirably. I am coming out." Mr. Forsyth thus anticipated without necessity the opinions of the Lieut. governor and the Government of India, committed superior authorities as far as he could to sentiments which might be repugnant to their judgment, and directly reversed his own distinct resolution formed and expressed up to that moment. On the same day he confirmed the sentence of the Malehr Kotla authorities, and ordered the immediate execution of the sixteen men condemned by them, a course which was not warranted by the necessity of making a further example, or by the character of the parties concerned, among whom various shades of guilt might by a less cursory inquiry have been discovered.

28. In Mr. Forsyth's explanation of the course taken by him, he says, in his letter of April 8:—

"I take this opportunity to make some remarks explanatory of the sentence carried into execution against the sixteen men on Jan. 18.

"When the case was submitted for my orders, I had to consider it in its judicial aspect, as well as from a political point of view.

"Now, taking the judicial view of the case as it stood by itself, quite apart from all other considerations, sixteen men belonging to a gang who had committed a double series of murders were pronounced to be guilty of the charge preferred against them. The sentence for their crime was death; and, had the case been tried in the Courts governed by our codes, it would have been incumbent on me to show very good cause why that sentence should be mitigated. Had the case, then, been a solitary one, there would have been no more ground for hesitating to confirm a sentence of death passed on sixteen men than there would have been last year for the Chief Court to hesitate to pass sentence on twelve men for the murder of the butchers.

"I had, however, to consider all the surrounding circumstances, and the first one which would naturally influence me was the fact that so many men had already suffered for the same offence. But there were counterbalancing arguments which I now propose to reproduce.

"One consideration was that, if the case admitted of it, Mr. Cowan ought to be supported. However much I might have deprecated his proposed action, and inwardly deplored it when as yet not taken, still when once done I felt myself placed in an entirely different and, it will be readily conceded, in a most difficult position. To hastily disavow his proceedings, and to cancel his acts at such a moment, I considered would be most unwise."

He adds in subsequent paragraphs that he had had a conversation with Ram Singh, which gave him a strong impression of the serious character of the outbreak; that whilst the sentence was awaiting sanction, he heard a report of Kuka bands being in the neighbourhood; and that the Sirdar of Malodh pressed him to pass sentence of death. The prominent feeling in his mind, however, seems to have been that Mr. Cowan ought to be supported in an act which Mr. Forsyth himself had repeatedly forbidden.

29. In conformity with the views enunciated above, H.E. in Council is of opinion that, while Mr. Forsyth is undoubtedly guiltless of any illegal action, he has in no small degree identified himself with the errors committed by Mr. Cowan; that he failed to discern his duty as counsellor to a Native Government in a serious emergency; and that he acted eventually in a manner inconsistent with the recognised policy of the Government of India.

30. H.E. in Council considers that Mr. Forsyth's conduct will be adequately dealt with by his removal from the Commissionership of Umballa to a position in another province in which he will not have to superintend the judicial proceedings of any native state, and by an expression of the opinion of the Government of India that he ought not in future be placed in a position in which he would be called upon to exercise similar control and superintendence.

31. The Governor general in Council is constrained to notice with regret that the two documents essential to the information of the Supreme Government in this case were not brought to his knowledge in regular course and at the commencement of this correspondence, viz., the demi-official letter written by Mr. Forsyth to Mr. Cowan on Jan. 16, since mislaid, and the letter addressed by Mr. Forsyth to Mr. Cowan on the 18th confirming his proceedings.

32. It is with great concern that H.E. in Council feels compelled to pass orders which affect so seriously officers whose fault has no doubt been due mainly to over-zeal for the maintenance of peace and order, but he considers it absolutely necessary to cause it to be understood that whilst every officer will be fully supported in any measures, however rigorous, which he may be justified by law in adopting for the maintenance or restoration of the peace, no one will be permitted to supersede the law at his own discretion. The line between the two things is broad and clear, and the Governor general in Council would be equally prompt to notice any remissness in the use of the means sanctioned by law for suppressing crime and bringing criminals to justice. He has no fear that the course which it has been necessary to take with regard to the present case will deter other officers from a becoming energy and promptitude in the discharge of duty. On the other hand, H.E. in Council fears as little that the course now taken will be misunderstood by the native population. He trusts that this example will teach them that under British rule all alike must obey the law, and they may be well assured that the punishment now inflicted on a British officer who has broken the law is not in any way connected with indifference or indulgence to the crimes of those whom he punished unlawfully. Their offence was deserving of exemplary punishment, though it should have been inflicted in a proper manner, with greater moderation, and with more discrimination between the degrees of guilt of the persons concerned. And lastly, H.E. trusts the present decision will make it clear to all classes that such proceedings as Mr. Cowan's are forbidden by law, and are bad in policy, because they leave no time for moderation and discrimination, and so take away the distinction between the deliberate satisfaction of the requirements of justice, and a hasty acceptance of the suggestions of excitement and alarm.

33. In communicating this review of the conduct of the commissioner and the deputy commissioner, the Governor general in Council considers it due to his Honour the Lieut. governor to refer to the sentiments enunciated by his Honour in connection with those which H.E. in Council has felt bound to record. The Lieut. governor, from the first, embraced and expressed the opinion that the conduct of Mr. Cowan was unjustifiable in regard to the precipitation, illegality, and indiscriminate rigour of his proceedings. A consideration of the exciting circumstances under which Mr. Cowan acted, of the political danger which he apprehended, and of the necessity of supporting officers of Government in acts even of excessive severity when done in good faith and for the public interest, induced the Lieut. governor to withhold an expression of blame which would have been otherwise in accordance with his sentiments, and of which the Governor general in Council would have approved. H.E. is, however, happy to be able to recognise that there is no essential difference between the views entertained by the Governor general in Council and those of the high officer entrusted with the administration and security of a province so important as the Punjab.

THE ELCHO SWORD BAYONET.—It is understood that the Elcho sword bayonet will shortly be adopted for the Henry-Martini rifle, the future arm of the service. Favourable reports have on the whole been received from the various regiments at home and abroad in whose hands the weapon has been placed for trial, and the Small Arms Committee, having recommended the adoption of the Elcho pattern, has been dissolved. The War Department has, however, thought it advisable to extend the knowledge possessed with regard to the usefulness of the new bayonet under varying circumstances and conditions, and have, therefore, ordered samples to be sent to certain regiments for experimental purposes at the Cape of Good Hope and Nova Scotia. The issue of the Henry-Martini rifle to the troops has been further retarded by difficulties at the Elswick Small Arms Factory.

THE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN FINANCE.

On Friday, the 31st May, the committee met, when Messrs. Harrison and Gay's examination was upon the finance and revenue accounts of the Government of India generally. Part of their evidence was given in last week's Mail; but further the witnesses were examined respecting the expenditure on the Medical Establishment of India, civil and military, which elicited no new information beyond the statement of the fact that the medical service had undergone, in the last few years, an entire change for the better as regards pay, viz., about 25 per cent. maximum increase of salaries. The establishment of new hospitals had also caused an increase of charges for the medical service, which from £62,423 in 1856-7, had risen in cost in 1870 to £167,000.

Resuming the subject of the Government Stationery Department, it was ascertained that the only Governorship in which economy had been practised and savings effected of late was that of the North-Western Provinces, where the comparison between 1856-57 and 1870-71 showed a reduction of charges to the amount of £6,000.

Mr. Fawcett and other members animadverted upon the fact that this small sum was all the modern system of Government printing could show on the side of economy.

The witness (Mr. Harrison), in answer to questions put to him, admitted that the control over the Government Stationery Departments had not been efficient; and the system was open to much improvement.

The succeeding items of expenditure discussed were the charges for political agencies. Objections were raised to the Government having paid £12,661 to the Guikwar, to relieve him from his purchase of a number of Armstrong guns from England. This matter had come under inquiry from the Imperial Government.

Mr. Fawcett renewed his objection that the gubernatorial and local authorities were so lavish in their expenditure in India, while there was no proper check or control over it from the Imperial Government.

After some minor heads of expenditure had been gone into, the charges on Superannuation Allowances were investigated. In the course of his present examination, Mr. Harrison mentioned that the suggestions offered by the committee for an improved mode of keeping the accounts of the Government of India were now under the consideration of his own department. In reference to the mode of keeping the accounts, Mr. Fawcett said the comparisons he had instituted of the periodically published tables of cash balances in India for different periods, showed to his surprise, ~~that the difference between the balances in those periods was not so great as was sometimes involved millions, and in the most unexpected manner.~~ The difference sometimes involved millions, and in the most unexpected manner. The balances he had found to range between ten millions and seventeen millions.

On Tuesday, the 4th inst., the committee resumed, and Messrs. Harrison and Gay's examination was continued. The first part of the day's inquiry referred to civil charges for provincial services. The committee on this matter took for their text the "East Indian Finance and Revenue Accounts of the Government of India for 1870-71," page 26, which gives the allotments for personal services as far as regards certain provinces, which cost the State for civil service some £200,000. But the total of service charges for all India is £5,600,000. This grand total, it should be more explicitly stated, is an amount now transferred from the imperial accounts to the accounts of the local governments as a permanent maximum charge. The transfer is a recent arrangement. It appeared that the local Governments of India may now raise funds by their own imposed local taxation to meet service charges. Formerly the money was supplied by the State. In regard to this subject—viz., so important a change in the provincial administration of India—Mr. Fawcett was particularly solicitous to know whether this £5,600,000 allotted to meet executive charges might not be indefinitely exceeded to the degree of imposing an excessive taxation on the people. The answers he elicited on this main point were not satisfactory. Mr. Fawcett, moreover, complained again of the seeming unpreparedness of the witnesses to substantiate statements with regard to the incidents of financial charges, by reference to accounts that could settle doubts and prove statements. Mr. Fawcett expressed a strong opinion that, notwithstanding the new arrangement by which local councils or municipalities had it all in their own hands to raise local funds for cost of administration, yet if a deficiency should occur in the Indian treasuries, it would have to be made up by the State, while the imperial taxation would be going on more oppressively than ever. The witnesses might be very well able to inform the committee of the total amount of imperial taxation for all India, but we should never by the present system know the total amount raised by the local taxation, and therefore the greatest abuses might be going on without our being able to check them.

The Chairman stated that a return had been asked for and promised which would fully explain the nature and character of the local taxation of India for the year 1870-71. Mr. Harrison said the information was, in fact, to be found as a supplementary part of the Calcutta Government Gazette, and the Government gazettes of other presidencies. It was in the form of a supplement to the annual accounts of the Indian Government. Mr. Fawcett considered that we had no sufficient indication that local taxes were fairly audited; such taxation ought never to be imposed, except under Act of Parliament. On Mr. Fawcett requiring to know more about the "local funds," Sir C. Wingfield said he understood that the process with regard to these funds was now as follows:—The Indian Government fixed once for all the amount of its grant to meet local expenditure; if insufficient, then the provincial governments of India (such as Oude, Central Provinces, North-West Provinces, &c.), must raise, out of local taxation, what was required to make up the deficit.

After inquiring into the charges on the public debt of India, and on the prosecution of public works, without eliciting information of a special character not already known, the committee informed Messrs. Harrison and Gay that their examination was at an end.

Major-General R. Strachey, C.S.I., Inspecting Engineer for the State Railways, was next called as a witness, and examined on the cost of administering and executing railway and other public works. He summarised the history and progress of railways and public works from the year 1854 to the present time; his evidence afterwards bore upon the excessive costliness, the malversation even, and other abuses connected with the recent prosecution of public works in India. Recently this establishment, which hitherto had been administered by the presidency governments separately, had been centralised under one department, at Calcutta; to which latter has been added a new establishment, termed the Department of Agriculture, Commerce, &c. The consolidated establishment had introduced a new financial system, which enabled it to bring under proper control all expenditure on works, and, if necessary, to borrow money for their prosecution. No works in India, national or local, are carried out without a proved necessity for them has been ascertained.

While the financial arrangements of the Supreme Government of India were under investigation, it was asked by Mr. Fawcett who was responsible for the preparation of the financial accounts. General Strachey replied that he could not define the responsibility, but he himself, under Lord Mayo, had endeavoured to introduce improvements in the mode of keeping the public accounts. Notwithstanding, however, the influence of the Governor-General (Lord Mayo), and his recognition of the necessity for reform, he (Colonel Strachey) had been met by obstructions in the Financial Department itself, which prevented his carrying out the reforms he had designed. Apropos of the pernicious system of keeping the public accounts at Calcutta, Mr. Fawcett asked, "Can you, Colonel Strachey, show me any public account in which net returns as well as gross returns are entered?" The witness replied that he could do so, although he was not now prepared with any such. His evidence before the committee was being given on the basis of statements prepared by Mr. Seccombe, of the India Office.

On Friday Major-General Strachey's examination was resumed, and he imparted additional information respecting the current system of carrying out public works, civil and military. It appeared that the Department being now centralised at Calcutta regulates expenditure on public works by making distinction between absolutely necessary works (such as local, municipal undertakings, small irrigation appliances chiefly, and roads which required to be done for the social commercial benefit of the people, railways, canals, &c.), and national undertakings, which, although important, need not be proceeded with immediately, or may wait a surplus in the exchequer, or the effectuating loans to carry them out. One of the immediate needs calling for the action of the Public Works Department was military buildings, barracks, hospitals, &c. The Public Works Department, however, is not a financial body, but simply an executive carrying out the orders of the Financial Department, or the Government of India. This was the explanation given to Mr. Fawcett, who rigidly examined General Strachey on the point. The witness denied, what Mr. Fawcett chose to imply, that the Government of India was culpable for extravagant expenditure on public works, which, like the Mutlah railway and the Ganges Canal, had been enormously costly, but remained, in fact, losing concerns; and the witness disputed the principle and the figures alike of a paper put in by Mr. Fawcett, giving a list (with the individual cost) of all the national and commercial public works of India that had been constructed, but had never paid their expenses. General Strachey stated that he had proposed reforms in the Public Works Establishments to the Imperial Government, and the appointment of a minister to be responsible specially for the control of that establishment.

Miscellaneous.

THE INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION.—A great improvement is being made in the Indian Annex to the International Exhibition. The disposal of the native jewellery being deemed unsatisfactory by Dr. Forbes Watson and Dr. Birdwood, those gentlemen have wisely entrusted its rearrangement to Mr. C. Townshend, who has superintended the jewellery department of the Exhibition, and whose taste and ability thoroughly qualify him to perform the duty.

APPOINTMENT.—Mr. Alexander Rogers, of the Bombay Civil Service, has been appointed a member of the Council at the Presidency of Bombay, vice Mr. Samuel Mansfield, c.s.l.

BILLS ON INDIA.—Tenders for £600,000 in bills on India were received on Wednesday, the 5th inst., at the Bank of England. The amounts allotted were—to Calcutta, £395,100; to Bombay, £200,000; and to Madras, £4,900. Tenders on Calcutta and Madras, at 1s. 10½d. will receive about 9 per cent.; and on Bombay, at that price, about 43 per cent.; above in full.

THE ALBERT ARBITRATION.—This arbitration has progressed so far that Lord Cairns has directed the payment to the annuity contract holders in the Medical Invalid Society of the full value of their annuities, as at the date of the winding up order, and also all arrears to the same date, and interest at 4 per cent. from the date of the order to June 6, 1872, the day on which the payment was made. A dividend of 2s. in the pound has been declared in the Albert Company, and will be paid as soon as the dividend list is completed.

INDIAN APPEAL.—The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council had before them on June 4 the case of Ramcoomar Koondoo v. M'Queen, which was adjourned from May 31. The appeal was from a judgment of the High Court of Bengal, delivered in May, 1869, in respect to some land and a house under a will. Sir M. Smith gave judgment. Their lordships would advise her Majesty that the appeal be allowed, with costs. The decree of the High Court was reversed.

EXPORT OF BULLION.—The following are the latest exports of Bullion to India per the steamers of the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company:—From Southampton, per Indus, May 23, 1872. Gold, Bombay, £2,000; Madras, £5,475; silver, Penang, £800. By the Steamers of the Messageries Impériales:—From Marseilles, per Provence, May 12. Gold, Aden, £1,000. Per Amerique and Tigre, May 23. Gold, Aden, £746; Pondicherry, £272; silver, Madras, £1,056. The prices of silver have ranged as follows:—Bar, 5s. 0½d. per oz. standard. Mexican dollars: Old Die, 5s. 2d., per oz.; new, 4s. 11½d. per oz.; 5 francs, 4s. 11d. per oz.

WILLS.—The will of W. W. Kettlewell, Esq., late of Moorgate-street, firm of Kettlewell, Bullen, and Co., East India merchants, has been proved under £160,000 personalty in England by his son W. W. Kettlewell, the executor for England; J. C. Murray, Esq., of Calcutta, being the executor for India, and to whom he leaves Rs. 2,000. The will was made in 1868, and testator died 12th February last, at his residence, Upper Norwood. He has left some moderate legacies to his brother, nephews, niece, and other relatives, and to his servants, appointing his said son residuary legatee of all his property, wheresoever situate.

MADRAS IMPROVEMENT AND CANAL COMPANY. The twenty-sixth ordinary general meeting was held on May 30, at the company's offices, 8 and 9, Queen-street-place; the chair was occupied by Mr. James Thomson. The notice calling the meeting was read by Mr. John Westwood, the secretary; the report of the directors was taken as read. The chairman said the report was so full and detailed that he need not occupy the time of the meeting at any length. He referred to the application made to the public some time ago for additional funds to construct reservoirs, for which funds the directors had first applied to the Government, and been refused. The application to the public was only partially successful, and the directors did not think it prudent to go on with works of such importance and magnitude unless they were assured that the whole of the capital would be forthcoming. No doubt the time would come when they would be able to raise that capital with great readiness, and that was when the profitable character of the works had been practically illustrated. The resolution for the adoption of the report and accounts was put to the meeting and carried.

CALLS TO THE BAR.—The undermentioned gentlemen were called to the Utter Bar on Thursday last by the Honourable Society of the Middle Temple:—Raj Narrain Mittra, Esq., Anundorum Borooah Esq., and Major H. A. Brett, 43rd Light Infantry. Major Brett doubly qualified for the degree by being a pupil for two years in the Chambers of Captain Blake, officiating Judge-Advocate for the Navy and Marines, and by voluntarily undergoing and passing the general examination for call to the Bar held by the Council of Legal Education. Major Brett completed the course of study at the Staff College in 1864, and has since served on the Staff in New Zealand, at Aldershot, and in Ireland. He is about to proceed with his Regiment to India. We congratulate Mr. Romaine, the Judge Advocate-General in India, as Major Brett's thorough knowledge of the service, so exceptionally combined with considerable legal attainments, will prove him a valuable acquisition to his department. Charles James Fleming, of the parish of Sale, in the county of Chester, and of Bombay, India, the eldest son of Edmond Lionel Fleming, of Sale aforesaid, paper manufacturer, was on the same day called to the degree of barrister-at-law by the Honourable Society of Gray's-inn.

THE INDIA AND LONDON LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY.—This was an appeal before the Lords Justices, on June 3, from an order made by Vice-Chancellor Malins for the winding-up of this company, which was one of the numerous companies absorbed by the European Assurance Society. The company was established in 1846, with a capital of £250,000, divided into shares of £50 each. In October, 1854, Colonel Dyke purchased of the company an annuity of £276, payable during his life. In 1860 the India Company resolved upon a dissolution, and an agreement was entered into between them and the European Assurance Society for the transfer of the business of the India Company to the European, which was duly carried into effect, but as Colonel Dyke alleged, without his assent. After such transfer he received his annuity from the European half-yearly down to April, 1871, when the European became insolvent. He now asked that the India Company might be wound up under the provisions of the Companies Acts. Vice-Chancellor Malins having held Colonel Dyke entitled to the winding-up order, an appeal was brought on behalf of the company. Lord Justice James was rather startled at the contention raised upon the letters. He had never seen letters so conclusive against the case of the appellants as those which had been relied on in their favour. Colonel Dyke had no right to file a bill so long as he was paid, and, like any man of sense, he consented to receive his money from the European. What, then, was the meaning of the 164th clause of the deed of settlement? It was not necessary to express a decided opinion what that clause would have meant if the words "without prejudice to the rights of the parties then assured" had not been there. His lordship was inclined to think that, even without those words, the clause could never have been intended to provide for cases of novation, but only for matters between the shareholders themselves. But with these preliminary words he should, but for his experience in such cases, have thought that this was not even an arguable case. He was of opinion that the decision of the Vice-Chancellor was right, and the appeal must be dismissed with costs. Lord Justice Mellish was of the same opinion.

THE BURMESE EMBASSY.—The members of the Burmese Embassy, sixteen in number, arrived off Dover on Tuesday evening in the steam yacht Tyeska Yeen Byan, belonging to the King of Burmah, from Calais. An immense crowd assembled on the Admiralty-pier in the expectation of seeing the visitors land; but after steaming to within 300 or 400 yards of the landing-stage, where every preparation short of an official reception had been made for the disembarkation, the yacht, instead of steaming alongside, threw out two or three warps, which were straightway made fast to one of the buoys facing the pier. Communication being opened between the vessel and the shore, it was ascertained that the Ambassadors did not intend to land until noon on Thursday. The yacht is a shapely, though not remarkably handsome, craft, of about 400 tons burden, and is to take half-a-dozen guns on board in London before she leaves England. She carries at her main the Burmese flag—a crimson peacock on a white ground—and a British ensign at the stern. Her commander and other officers are English, but the crew, which number about eighty, are Hindoos or Burmese. While the yacht was being moved a boat was manned by four of her crew for the purpose of rowing one of the officers to the shore. They were dressed in white holland suits, and all wore the red flag. Their ebony faces would be pronounced decidedly good-looking and their little frames well-knit. The object of the visit now being paid to the Courts of the West is to make arrangements of a diplomatic kind with a view to advance Burmese civilisation. The Ambassadors are the bearers of costly presents from their august master, and it is said that among them is a magnificent bracelet intended for Queen Victoria, the gold of which weighs no less than 7½ lb. The names of the Ambassadors are Mengyee Maha Saythoo Kenwoon Mengyee, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary from the King of Burmah; Macha Meulah Kyoden Taden Woondok, Minister of State, second grade, and Attaché to the Embassy; Meulha Zayathoo Seraydangyee, Secretary to the Embassy; and Sir Edmund Jones, Agent to his Majesty the King of Burmah, who has accompanied the Embassy from Burmah. The Chief Ambassador is a very distinguished personage, a great ex-Pali scholar, and of refined habits. The official reception was held on Wednesday, when the Embassy proceeded to London by special train. They are staying at the Grosvenor Hotel, and during their three months' visit to England will visit Birmingham, Manchester, Leeds, Sheffield, and other important manufacturing places.

Imperial Parliament.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, TUESDAY, June 4.—THE INDIAN BUDGET.—Mr. GRANT DUFF, replying to Mr. BOURKE, said he was not able at present to give any information as to the date when he would make his financial statement.

THE HURRICANE AT MADRAS.—In reply to Sir J. ELPHINSTONE, Mr. GRANT DUFF said he was not aware that Madras was in possession of any steam-tugs or other appliances by which assistance might be afforded to shipping on such an occasion as the late hurricane, but that he was not in a position positively to say so.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, THURSDAY, June 6.—ROYAL WARRANTS.—In reply to Lord E. CECIL, Mr. CARDWELL said that the Royal Warrants, regulating the first appointments and promotions of officers in the engineers and artillery, had been sent to the Treasury for consideration, and, when they were received back they would be submitted to her Majesty. The Warrant relating to the household brigade had not been submitted to the Treasury; but the regulations with regard to the militia had already been published.

PERSIA.—Mr. EASTWICK asked the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether it had been decided that the Foreign Jurisdiction Act could be put in force in Persia.—Lord ENFIELD: It has been decided that the Foreign Jurisdiction Act can be put in force in Persia, and Sir Philip Francis, her Majesty's Consul-General and Judge in the British Consulate Court at Constantinople, has been instructed to place himself in communication with Colonel Pelly, the British Resident at Muscat, with the view of framing an Order in Council and the rules necessary for giving effect to the Jurisdiction Act, founded on the Levant rules. As, however, the Levant rules are now in course of revision, Sir P. Francis will probably delay framing rules for Persia until the revision of the Levant rules is completed.

HOUSE OF LORDS, FRIDAY, June 7.—THE ARMY.—The Duke of RICHMOND stated that within the last forty-eight hours he had had the honour of an interview with his Royal Highness the Commander-in-Chief, and the result had been of such a character that it was wholly unnecessary to move the address of which he had given notice, praying Her Majesty not to deprive of their rank certain young gentlemen who were last October gazetted to the rank of ensign and lieutenant in the Guards.—Lord ABINGER asked what steps Her Majesty's Government proposed to take to remedy the injustice that had been done to the captains of the purchase corps in consequence of their supersession by the first captains of the scientific corps.—The Marquis of LANSDOWNE said that Her Majesty's Government did not propose to take any steps, for they did not admit the existence of any such injustice as the noble lord suggested. In the first place, the position of an officer commanding a battery had hitherto been scarcely regarded as of the importance which it really possessed. A captain of infantry commanded on the average about sixty or seventy men; and a captain of cavalry about fifty; whereas a captain of artillery had in his charge two hundred or two hundred and fifty men, and material of very great value. It had therefore been determined that the senior captains of artillery should henceforth be majors. As regarded the question of injustice, the case stood thus: at present the average time an officer had to serve in the line before he obtained his majorship was, if on full pay, seventeen years and eight months, and fifteen years and six months if unattached. The average length of service of senior captains in the line was twenty years; whereas that of first captain in the artillery was twenty-four years, and in the engineers twenty-five years, whilst that of junior officers in the engineers was sixteen years. In future it was calculated by the Government actuaries that officers would obtain their majority in eighteen years in the line, and in twenty years in the artillery and engineers. The Duke of RICHMOND stated that the supersession, it was very slight, and he was told it would be of a temporary character.—The Duke of RICHMOND congratulated the noble marquis on one of the very best speeches ever made in favour of purchase. It was clear that an advantage was to be given to the scientific corps at the expense of officers of the line, who had purchased their rank on the faith that the system would continue.—Lord SANDHURST agreed that there was some truth in the complaint of the noble lord; and argued that, whilst they were abolishing the old privileged corps, they ought not to confer new privileges on the artillery and engineers, which, though undoubtedly very important arms of the service, were not more important than the cavalry and the line. After a few remarks in the same sense from the Marquis of HERTFORD, the conversation closed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, FRIDAY, June 7.—ROYAL HORSE ARTILLERY.—Colonel NORTH brought under the consideration of the House the claims for compensation of the officers of the five batteries of the Royal Horse Artillery suddenly ordered home from India early in 1871, with a view of reducing the force of Royal Artillery on the Indian Establishment, by which they, as he alleged, suffered severe pecuniary loss. The hon. and gallant gentleman justified the claim of the batteries in question to compensation on the ground that their sudden removal was not the result of a great military necessity, and that the officers were obliged to dispose of their horses and furniture at an immense sacrifice.—Sir C. WINGFIELD also maintained that this was a case for compensation.—Mr. GRANT DUFF asked if the shortness of the notice of removal were to form the basis of a claim for compensation, where were the Government to draw a line. If they once made a concession such as that which was sought in this instance, they would never know where to stop. He hoped the hon. and gallant gentleman would not press the matter, because any person possessing his large military experience could not hesitate to admit that one of the ordinary conditions of military service was that an officer might be called upon to go wherever he was required at the shortest possible notice.—After some further discussion the matter dropped.

SUPPLY OF WATER AT PESHAWUR.—In answer to Mr. STAPLETON, Mr. G. DUFF stated that measures were in contemplation for obtaining an improved supply of water at Peshawur.

A Bill introduced by Mr. GRANT DUFF and Mr. AYRTON proposes to make provision for the transfer of the assets and liabilities of the Bengal and Madras Civil Service Annuity funds, and the Annuity Branch of the Bombay Civil Fund to the Secretary of State for India in Council.

NOTICE OF MOTION.—Mr. FAWCETT gave notice that on the motion for the second reading of the East India Fund Bill, he would move a resolution to the effect that the Bill should not be further proceeded with, because it did not provide adequate security that the capital fund made over to the Indian Government would not be devoted to the purposes of ordinary income.

PETITIONS.—The following petitions from Indian officers have been presented during the last week:—By Colonel SYKES, from Capt. C. A. Moore, 2nd Regiment Bengal Light Cavalry, complaining of the stoppage of the promotion of Lieut.-Col. (Brevet-Colonel) W. W. Anderson, 2nd Bengal Light Cavalry, for three years to a colonelcy with allowance, because he is not a regimental lieut.-col. of twelve years' service, in violation of the guarantees in the statutes of 1855 and 1860, by which rule the major of the 2nd Cavalry will have served forty-two and a half years before he can get his lieutenant-colonelcy, and the senior captain of the 2nd Cavalry fifty years before he can succeed to a colonelcy, and praying for redress.—By Mr. W. H. MAXWELL, from Capt. W. Dickson, half-pay, Royal (Bengal) Artillery, complaining of loss of bonus as given by the Army Regulation Act.—By Mr. R. ANSTRUTHER, from Lieut.-Col. Briggs, Bengal Staff Corps, praying for redress of grievances connected with the amalgamation of the Indian and royal armies.—By Sir H. BRUCE, from Col. A. Bruce, Bengal Staff Corps, praying for redress.

the most efficient causes of dangerous diseases, and the most prolific source of those melancholy forebodings which are worse than death itself. A few doses of these noted Pills act magically in dispelling low spirits, and repelling the covert attack made on the nerves by excessive heat, impure atmosphere, over-indulgence, or exhausting excitement. The most shattered constitutions may derive benefit from Holloway's Pills, which will regulate disordered action, brace the nerves, and increase the energy of the intellectual faculties. Clergymen, lawyers, merchants, soldiers, sailors, and thousands of other persons have voluntarily testified to the

Summary and Review.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail are—from Bombay, May 27; Agra and Madras, May 25; Calcutta, May 24.

BETWEEN this and the next mail, the first of the monsoon ones, there will only be an interval of three of four days, in order to allow, as usual, for the adverse winds and weather of the season on that side the Isthmus.

ON the evening of the 21st May Lord Northbrook set off for Simla by special train, reaching Allahabad on the following afternoon, and Simla on the 25th, "looking none the worse for the fatigue of travel" in the height of the hot winds. Once more his lordship found great relief from exchanging his own carriage for one of those fitted up by Mr. Saunders.

BEFORE his departure he took more than one fresh occasion to express his views on Indian questions. On the 21st, after distributing prizes to the students at the Medical College, he avowed his pleasure at finding no change in the educational policy of the Government, as laid down in Sir C. Wood's despatch of 1854, which he himself "had the privilege" of helping to draw up, and which seemed still to be regarded as "the charter of Indian Education." His Lordship in effect declared himself equally attached to the three different principles therein laid down—the maintenance of a high standard of English learning as the proper vehicle for imparting Western knowledge to India; the encouragement of the "old historical languages of India;" and the wide diffusion of primary education among the people in their own daily speech. To the third of these objects Mr. Campbell said his Lordship had specially devoted himself, but it was a mistake, he added, to suppose that the same gentleman had any wish to "reduce unduly the present high standard of English education," or to discourage the study of Sanskrit and Arabic. Lord Northbrook then gave his hearers some good advice as to the uses to which their schooling might be turned in other fields than the Civil Service, notably in those of Law, Art, Civil Engineering, and Sanitary Science.

IN a written reply to the "Dacca People's Association" Lord Northbrook deals with three grievances brought forward by that body, the Income-tax, the Road Cess, and Mr. Campbell's Education Policy. Reserving his final opinion on the Income-tax, he "cannot admit that those who are subject to the tax as at present imposed, and who constitute the wealthier portion of the community," have any reason to complain. In the words we have emphasised he simply begs the whole question. With regard to the Road Cess his lordship feels sure that Mr. Campbell will use all care in carrying out the measures already sanctioned by the Indian and Home Governments; and with regard to the third grievance, he again speaks up for the Lieutenant-Governor's policy as quite in accord with that of the Despatch of 1854.

AT the Medical College gathering Mr. Campbell spoke on his own account to the same effect. A well-wisher to the higher education, all he sought was to extend the blessings of the lower sort among the people at large. In the same spirit he seems to have publicly recalled his former threats against the Sanskrit College, to have avowed his willingness to preserve the English classes in that college, and disclaimed any desire to interfere with the chair of Hindu Law. This is not the first time that the Lieutenant-Governor has struck first and listened to reason afterwards. Would it not be safer in future to deliberate first?

LIAKAT ALI, a rebel leader of 1857, has at length been brought to preliminary trial at Allahabad for his share in the rebel movements against that place. Pleading guilty to all the charges, he alleges in his exculpation that several English lives were saved by him, and that he acted against us under compulsion. He even asserts that the Nana's officers tried and convicted him at Furruckabad of loyalty to the British rule. The enquiry was still going on when the mail left.

THE outbreak of cholera at Cawnpore seems to have been promptly checked by the removal of nearly all the troops into camp. No new cases had occurred for some days.

AT Madras the Government has entered on an official enquiry into the cause of the great loss of life during the late cyclone.

SINGAPORE has at last been abandoned as a station for the Madras army; the 19th N.I. having landed thence at Nega-patam.

IT is understood that the Madras Camp of Exercise will probably be around Maloor, a place about twenty miles from Bangalore.

IT is evident from General Brownlow's report that a good deal of tact was needed to bring some of the Loshai chiefs to terms. They were equally frightened at our rifles and our offers of peace. Even friendly chiefs like Ruttun Pooya required very careful handling and plenty of free play. In such circumstances Captain Lewin, the Political Agent to the Force, seems to have proved an invaluable helpmate, whose long experience of Kookie ways had a marked influence for good both on the English General and on the suspicious Howlong and Sylhoo chiefs. Sypooea, an intelligent Southern Howlong, "so far succumbed to the animal magnetism of Captain Lewin, as to express a desire to accompany him and Ruttun Pooya on a visit to Calcutta."

A CALCUTTA telegram of June 12 states that Mr. Egerton, the able financial Commissioner of the Punjab, has been gazetted a member of the Viceroy's Legislative Council.

From another telegram we learn that Bengal Bank shares have declined considerably, in consequence, it is concluded, of the order of the Secretary of State for India that the Government connection with the Presidency banks is to close. The order, however, was not unexpected, and the derangement of the money market is believed to be the work of speculators.

THE railway people in India appear to have been working their hardest to meet the monsoon, which by this time must have set in. The great bridge across the Beas has been reopened. The new viaduct across the Tapti, near Bhosawal, on the G.I.P. line, was completed on the 3rd May, when the last pair of 150 feet square girders were fixed in their place. The method of spanning a river by girders carried over upright cylinders of boiler plate, filled in with concrete and ashlar, has here for the first time been applied to railways on the Bombay side. Mr. Clark, the chief constructor of this bridge, has gone to Agra to undertake the building of a large bridge over the Jumna, on the Rajpootana State railway. On Holkar's line the earthwork linking the Nerbudda with Khundwa is well-nigh completed, and progress has also been made on the northern side of the river. Surveys of a line from Calcutta to Darjeeling are going forward, and the construction of the line from Carwar to Hooblee awaits only the final orders of the Indian Minister. The works on the Punjab State Railway are rapidly advancing. Thirty out of the ninety wells required for the bridge over the Ravee have already been sunk, and those required for the Chenab and Jhelum bridges are in course of sinking. Most of the stations up to the Chenab are finished, and if the rails were only at hand, it is reckoned that the whole line from the Ravee to the Chenab would be laid by the end of July. Very fair progress is also making on the Indus Valley Railway.

The strange story we reproduced last week regarding the Gaikwar of Baroda appears to resolve itself into a piece of scandal concocted, as we thought likely, by an ambitious woman, the Rani of the late Gaikwar. At any rate a correspondent of the Times of India, writing from Baroda, reads the whole ingenious fabric into its component rags. Instead of being crushed to death, Bhow Sindia was carried off by a very bad type of fever which had been ravaging Baroda for some days past; while the Moonshie Habiboolla has been neither poisoned nor crushed to death, but is now alive and well; his release from prison depending only on the securities demanded for his re-appearance. We cannot of course vouch for either version of this story; but in view of the fact that the Rani has at Baroda a strong party who are bent on furthering her interests at all hazards, and at any cost to Malharao, we are safe in preferring the version which clears the latter of crimes intolerable under our rule.

In his annual report for 1871 Dr. Oldham traces the progress of Mr. Blandford's labours in search of coal on the Godavery. His boring on the British side of the river near Dumagudium led to no very promising result. The area of the rocks in that neighbourhood is very small, and the coal-beds found there are very thin indeed and most irregular. Elsewhere Mr. Blandford was more successful. By setting the wild jungle tribes to work in quest of coal, he learned the existence of thick beds of coal not very far from Pakhall, in the neighbourhood of Warangul. Disabled to some extent by an injury to his foot, Mr. Blandford had to come home at last on sick leave. Before then however he was busy helping Mr. White to test the coal-bearing rocks on the Nizam's side of the Godavery, the result of which has been to prove the existence there of more than fifty feet depth of coal. It has also been fully proved that coal exists over a long line of country in East Berar. In an easterly direction its existence has yet to be proved. For the purpose of obtaining cheap coal Dr. Oldham would prefer a railway direct to the Woon district of East Berar from Bombay, to the proposed line to Warora. The former crosses only one large stream instead of the five that would come across the latter, each of which moreover would be less practicable than the Wardah river. The supply of coal to which the shorter and cheaper line would give access, is large, but poor in quality, "breaking down very rapidly on exposure and drying." The coal from near Saster is the most durable yet raised in these fields.

A RUMOUR is already gaining ground in India, to the effect that a definite scheme for the retirement of unemployed field-officers has been sent out to Calcutta from the India Office. The scheme in question, it is said, proposes to give each applicant a sum of about £29. 12s. a-year for each year of past service; thirty-eight such sums making up £1,124, the amount of colonel's allowances due to an officer of thirty-eight years' service. This would equal a pension of about £900 a-year after thirty years' actual service; but some deduction would be made for the supposed difference in respect of life and health prospects between living after a certain age in India and at home. If the reckoning were fairly made, so as not to exaggerate the real difference, the scheme would, no doubt, tend to ease off the upper ranks of the army in the right direction. But so far as we can learn, no definite step has yet been taken to give general relief to the unemployed officers. Any scheme hitherto sent out to India refers, we believe, only to officers deemed unfit for further duty. What we do know however is, that various projects for disposing of the unemployed surplus have been laid before the Indian Council, but that nothing has yet been decided in favour of any of them.

THE Pioneer gives a flat denial to the assertion of the Indian Statesman that disaffection is rife in the Punjab. According to the former journal the Punjab, being just now remarkably prosperous, is therefore generally contented. Disaffection may exist among a small class, every member of which is known to the Government, but the mass of the people are at least as loyal as they have ever been. Recent legislation has tended merely to simplify the law and remove old burdens. With regard to new taxation, "if we must have the money, we must run the risk of some discontent in its collection." Very likely, if we must have the money; but a good deal depends on that "if."

ONE immediate result of the new regulations regarding the Santhals furnishes a striking comment on the difficulty of interfering with the regular processes of supply and demand. In order to deal with the grievances arising in the case of untutored Santhal peasants from the excessive usury of Hindu money-lenders, it was decreed, as we saw, that the rate of interest should not exceed 2 per cent. a month, and that the interest on any loan or debt should never exceed a certain limit. The Mahajans however seem not unnaturally bent on kicking against these rules, by the simple method of refusing to lend out their money at the moderate rate of 24 per cent. per annum. They are said in fact to have struck in concert over 300 Santhal villages in the southern districts alone, and it remains to see how their old customers will tide over the crisis which has come upon them at the most unfavourable season of the year. Just when he wants a few rupees to buy seed-grain for the spring sowings, the needy ryot finds the old door to help closed against him by the well-meant interference of the ruling powers. The usurers are rich and can afford to dispense for a time with their wonted gains; but the ryot as a rule is hopelessly poor and heavily indebted, and if no rupees are forthcoming he can neither sow nor reap, but must make up his mind to starve or do something politically worse. Here is a pleasant prospect for a well-meaning Government. It cannot force the Mahajan to lend his money at certain rates, nor can it look quietly on while people are slowly dying or violently asserting their right to live. Something must be done, and that quickly, to mitigate the consequences of its own act. Unless it chooses to modify or rescind the new rules, it must take prompt measures to aid their working by helping the ryots out of its own funds. State banks, as the Englishman suggests, might for instance be opened in the interior for the purpose of advancing the means of buying seed, or even of supplying the seed itself. Some such policy, for which there is ample precedent in India, would either in due time bring the usurers to terms, or drive them in search of business elsewhere.

SOME of our readers must have shared the surprise we owned to feeling at the concurrence of the Punjab Government in the opinion of the Government of India touching the Kuka executions. Certainly the language used by Mr. Davies at Amritsar towards the natives who addressed him there did not seem to bear out the statements put forth in the Viceroy's Minute. A passage quoted by the Lahore journal from the Lieutenant-Governor's despatch to the Supreme Government would likewise seem at first sight to conflict with those statements. "The authorities on the spot"—wrote Mr. Davies—"could alone correctly judge of the tendency of such demonstrations, and in his Honour's opinion the action taken by them in good faith must be supported. According to the same journal it is "a simple fact that the Punjab Government strongly objected even to Mr. Cowan's suspension, and retained the order for a fortnight after receiving it." All this however is easy to reconcile with the statement in the last paragraph of the Viceregal Minute that "the Lieutenant-Governor from the first embraced and expressed the opinion that the conduct of Mr. Cowan was unjustifiable in regard to the precipitation, illegality, and indiscriminate rigour of his proceedings," but that certain considerations induced him "to withhold an expression of blame which would have been otherwise in accordance with his sentiments." Mr. Davies in fact was for supporting Mr. Cowan without approving of his conduct. And this is the natural reading of the telegram of January 17, telling Mr. Forsyth that the Lieutenant-Governor "concurs" with him, but "approves Mr. Cowan's energy and zeal." At that time he had not heard of the executions.

In a long letter to the Times Mr. W. Forsyth complains of his brother's hard fate in being transferred under censure from the Punjab to Oudh, on account of his share in Mr. Cowan's doings against the Kukas. The gist of the defence now offered appears to be that Mr. Forsyth was fully justified, both by the facts of the case and the strong representations of the Sikh officials, in condemning to death the sixteen prisoners made over to him by Mr. Cowan. The men, we are reminded, not only belonged to a gang of murderers and had been found guilty after trial, nor was Mr. Forsyth impelled to punish them as he did solely by his unwillingness to discredit his subordinate. The chief native officers at Kotla begged him in the most earnest manner to enforce the utmost rigour of the law, and a Sikh Sirdar at Malodh solemnly assured him that the lives of the people would not be safe unless the guilty were punished with death. Mr. W. Forsyth also complains that his brother has been condemned by the Government without being fairly heard in his own defence. His letter of April 8 indeed "gave a full statement of the facts so far as he then knew them," but no further explanation was ever required of him on points which might seem to need clearing up. As the letter was written nearly three months after the outbreak, we should have thought that nothing more remained to learn or to explain. Mr. Forsyth must have known the weak points of his case without further reminding, and if he said nothing more to the purpose, it was because he had nothing more to say. It seems to us a mistake to rest his defence on a plea which implies too great a readiness to follow the lead of panic-stricken native counsellors, the very fault with which he is charged by the Indian Government. It would have been better policy to keep this point in the background, and encourage us to think of him as the victim of his own generous indiscretion in backing up the subordinate of whose conduct he inwardly disapproved. We cannot agree with the Saturday Review in regarding his punishment as something which "in no way can be called punishment at all;" but neither can we admit that, from the Government point of view, he ought not to have been punished at all. We can only hope that the censure passed on so deserving an officer will not long prevent him from resuming a position equal to that from which he has just been removed. It can hardly be that the cloud now hanging over him will not speedily pass away, or that the apparent commission of one fault, however venial, should blot out the remembrance of so many former services. The same considerations however may fairly plead for some remission of the far heavier punishment awarded to Mr. Cowan.

We are glad to hear that Sir Barnes Peacock will shortly take his seat on the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council as one of the paid Judges under the Act of 1871. Such an appointment will greatly strengthen the Indian element in the Council, hitherto represented by Sir James Colville only.

We regret that Mr. Boulderson's letter, regarding the Bill about to be introduced into the House of Commons for absorbing the Civil Annuity Funds of the three Presidencies, came too late for insertion in our present number; and we regret this all the more because the subject is one which touches "the just rights of numerous Bengal Civil Servants, living and dead, to repayment of moneys which they had contributed in excess of the half values of the annuities which they bought from the East India Company on their retirement from the service.' Even if the Bill comes up however for a first reading this week, the letter in question will no doubt lose little of its pertinence by a week's delay.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

MONDAY, June 17, 1872.

LORD ELGIN.

MR. WALROND's excellent Memoir of Lord Elgin, lately published by Mr. Murray, enables us to appreciate thoroughly the services he rendered India at a critical moment, and the loss that country sustained by his early death.* Next to the bold front assumed in the Punjab, the salvation of our Indian Empire in 1857 was mainly owing to the patriotic zeal with which Lord Elgin, on his way to China as our Plenipotentiary, answered Lord Canning's prayers for help in the hour of his greatest need. Early in June he got Canning's letter, imploring him to send to Calcutta some of the troops destined to serve against the Chinese. On his own responsibility, at no small sacrifice to himself and the objects of his own mission, he at once gave the needful orders for the diversion to India of the troops who, in the words of Sir William Peel, "relieved Lucknow, relieved Cawnpore, and fought the battle of the 6th December." Sir Henry Ward, then Governor of Ceylon, declared that he "never knew a nobler thing" than that which Lord Elgin had done, "in preferring the safety of India to the success of his Chinese negotiations." Some people may think that he only did his duty in preferring the greater to the lesser end; but the question of less or greater was not so easily settled at the time in English circles at home. We may, at any rate, allow, with Sir H. Ward, that "it is not every man who would consign himself for many months to political inaction in order simply to serve the interests of his country." There was a certain boldness, too, for which Lord Elgin should reap full credit, in thus venturing to "alter the destination of a force upon the despatch of which a Parliament has been dissolved and a Government might have been superseded."

Some weeks later he himself was on his way to Calcutta with fresh help for his countrymen, and loudly did he grumble at the misfortune which consigned him to one of H.M.'s ships, "instead of a good merchant steamer, which would be going at ten miles an hour in a direct line, while we are going at six in an oblique one." It was a good opportunity, he thought, for conferring with Canning, and learning what chance he had of getting back before the cold weather the troops he had lent the Viceroy. The arrival of the Shannon off Fort William on the 6th August was a welcome sight to many an anxious eye, and the roar of the big guns, which Peel afterwards took up with him to Cawnpore and Lucknow, sounded sweet music in the ears of Calcutta's somewhat panic-stricken citizens. Lord Elgin was not a little disgusted at the ferocious contempt of his countrymen for native suffering; and the wrathful remarks of a reverend gentleman, who could see no harm in torturing men's souls by destroying their caste as well as hanging them, but "seemed to think that a good deal might be said in favour of bodily torture as well," drew from him a scornful reference in one of his letters to the kind of pupils whom these teachers of Israel were sure to turn out.

The same cool self-reliance, promptitude, common sense, and high-minded view of things, which marked his previous career in Canada and China, come out in his subsequent acts and letters as Viceroy of India in the room of his regretted friend Lord Canning. The last two chapters of the book, which deal entirely with the twenty odd months of his Viceroyalty, show how much of ripening excellence was cut down by his sudden death. With vague forebodings which he could not conceal, he set out for India at the beginning of 1862, and his death took place in November, 1863. In that time however he got through plenty of hard, useful work, travelled over a good deal of Indian ground, and made his mark wherever he went. He reduced to a system the art of picking people's brains, by having two or three persons to dine quietly with him on all off-days. Throughout the first hot weather he stuck to his "moist unpleasant" post at Calcutta, save when drooping health sent him off for a few days to Bhagulpore. His avowed policy was, at least for a time, "to walk in paths traced out by others;" and his cool clear head was not to be inflamed or muddled, whether by the schemes of cotton-dealing friends at home, or by the popular cry in India for the maintenance of a large army, white and black. On the nice question of missionary preaching he maintains, in a letter to Sir C. Wood, that "the cause of Christian truth and charity would be as well served by preaching in a church or a building of some sort, as by holding forth in the streets in a city full of fanatical unbelievers." The Apostles, he reminds us, "had the authorities as well as the mob against them, and took not only the thrashings of the latter, but also the judicial penalties inflicted by the former like men. It is a very different matter when you have a powerful Government to fall back upon, and to quell any riots which you may raise."

With equal manliness Lord Elgin, in another letter, rails at "the follies committed by the military panic-mongers in the North-West," in places where the Europeans have "all the artillery, and at least equal the native forces in number." He has no patience with the officer at Agra who acted on the assumption that the wells were poisoned, and in the height of June he declares himself resolved, if things do not mend, to set off at once to the head-quarters of the panic, surround himself with native troops, and "put a stop to the nonsense by example." At the same time, in writing to Mr. Edmonstone, he is "firmly resolved to put down with promptitude and severity any attempt at disturbance which may be made in any part of India," not because he fears for the stability of our empire, but because peace is necessary to the progress of the country, and lenity to the authors of such outbreaks entails heavier punishment on their misguided followers. He is equally firm in refusing to reprieve a discharged English soldier who had coolly killed a Punjabi for objecting to let him carry off a particular sheep. The murder, he says, "was committed in wanton recklessness, almost without provocation, under an impulse which would have been resisted if the life of the victim had been estimated at the value of that of a dog."

Lord Elgin's calm good sense betrays itself in his handling of questions bearing on India's foreign policy and on the relations of his Government with Native feudatories. He was not for interfering more than could possibly be helped with Dost Mohammed; he could see the danger of excessive respect for "the right of native chiefs to do wrong;" and he spoke kindly of the English Press in India, and of the "interlopers" whom it is still too much the official habit to decry as a source of danger to the public welfare. The tour which, following Canning's advice and his own promptings, he took through Upper India early in 1863, gave him occasion for fresh studies and further displays of political wisdom. Instead of a hurried run through the country on his way to or from Simla, he planned to travel northwards by easy stages, spend the hot weather in the Hills, and hold a session of his Council the next cold weather at Lahore. Part only of this programme did he live to fulfil, and the thoroughness with which that part was performed enhances our regret at its destined incompleteness. His public speeches and private letters during the tour show what good use he could make of his time and opportunities. His addresses to the native chiefs and gentry whom he met in durbar contained the right sort of advice expressed in the most courteous language. At a railway dinner in Benares he foreshadowed the policy, since adopted, of dispensing with any more guaranteed lines. To the Sikh Chiefs at Umballa he spoke with happy tact of the services rendered by their countrymen at Delhi and in China, and exhorted them to render their own country the yet more important services implied in works of public usefulness. Without advocating the entire removal of the seat of Government from Calcutta, he insisted in his letters to Sir C. Wood that the Supreme Council should "meet from time to time at other places for legislative purposes, so as to qualify Calcutta local associations with other local associations." He held, too, that the heads of the local governments "should have had some training at headquarters."

On the question of dealing with the Sittana fanatics, Lord Elgin's determination to strike "a speedy and decisive blow at this embryo conspiracy," instead of waiting several months until the mischief grew more formidable, was wisely taken, however inadequately it was carried out by the local authorities. He was eager to reach Lahore, and talk this matter over with the Lieutenant-Governor, when the fatal illness which cut him off in mid career struck him down near Dharmasala, "just when," says Mr. Walrond, "the information and experience which he had accumulated were beginning to ripen into confidence in his knowledge of the country."

EUPHRATES VALLEY RAILWAY TERMINI.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—My former letters will, I trust, have indicated the drift of my purpose in writing upon this subject. What advantage is gained by shortening and removing the existing discomfords of the Channel Ferry if we are bottling up delays and miseries for too confiding Indian passengers at two other points of their journey to and from India? They have reached Brindisi and embarked in comfort at a quay; will not the prospective accommodation—viz., "only a landing place at Iskanderoon," or "a protective jetty at Karabujuk," with "merely a landing jetty at Bushire,"—seem to them mockery and delusion? To say nothing of loss of time, when it is the desire and interest of all to expedite the transit of mails and passengers.

A few remarks about winds and weather at the east end of the Mediterranean may fitly precede a consideration of the relative value of harbours along the coast of Syria. South-west gales are heaviest at Port Said; but coming off the shore, they produce no swell there, although the ports on the Syrian coast suffer from their great violence in the winter. "In January and February strong gales are frequent, and more violent than at any other season; these gales commence at S.E. with a falling barometer; the mountains become enveloped in clouds, rain soon begins to fall, accompanied by vivid lightning; after twelve hours the wind veers gradually to South and S.W., with heavy squalls." The "Sailing Directory" says:—"Strong S.W. gales are frequent at Beirut between November and March." "By all accounts westerly winds do not prevail in the winter months in the Gulf of Iskanderoon and Bay of Antioch, as in other parts of Syria, yet they occasionally do blow so as to endanger any vessel at anchor in open roadstead." "At Iskanderoon, the winds most to be apprehended are those from the N.E., and gusts from the mountains; but these rarely occur before the commencement of winter and in early spring." "You will frequently find both North and N.E. winds very troublesome. Easterly winds also come down from the mountains with great force, and frequently occasion vessels to drive from their anchors." "The ground is good for holding in every part of the bay; merchant vessels may anchor near the shore in seven or eight fathoms." I need hardly remark that the mountain gusts must have great force to make vessels drive in such good holding ground.

The Bay of Iskanderoon is represented in the Book of Directions as the best anchorage in Syria. Captain Sir John Franklin, going there in summer, with a strong sea breeze from W.S.W., found much better shelter than he anticipated. He anchored in fourteen fathoms about seven cables off shore. "Had we gone nearer the town, we should have been almost sheltered from the swell."—"We learnt that it is very unusual to have the sea-breeze so strong or so much swell as on this day."—"The water is said to be generally smooth and favourable for merchant vessels to discharge their cargoes. The Bay is open from W.S.W. to N.E.; but in the summer the sea-breezes, which come from S.W. and N.W., are said seldom to blow home." Yet the first quotation shows that westerly winds do occasionally blow in winter with dangerous violence. Of the ports from Seleucia to Sidon, we read, "Tripoli, like all the roadsteads along this coast, is only fit for summer anchorage, as the winds are generally violent during winter, and blow home."

Exceptional precautions are necessary against even purely exceptional dangers; and too much consideration cannot be bestowed upon a plan to make Alexandretta a safe and accessible terminus. It is in the direct line between Constantinople and Aleppo—a most important fact. The interests of Turkey must be considered in this matter. All classes of Europeans in India will be as much indebted to his Majesty the Sultan for the Euphrates Valley Mail Route, as her commercial men are to the Pasha of Egypt and to Ferdinand de Lesseps for the Suez Canal. This parenthetically; the value of different ports is my theme. Madras, in the late terrific cyclone, has again proved itself a gigantic blunder, a landsman's legacy to poor seamen. The original settlement was at Armegon, but a Mr. Francis Day got permission in a Sunnud dated March 1st, 1640 (a day to be remembered with everlasting regret), for the English to build a fort to the south of Pulicat; and, without waiting for instructions from the Court of Directors, he proceeded with great alacrity to the construction of Fort St. George. Had the Company's factory remained at Armegon, that presidency would have been long ago benefitted by a good harbour, and the commerce of the Coromandel Coast more developed. Beypoor and Port Canning on the Mutlah, are also blunders, and others might be mentioned. Madras, and even Bombay, Galle and Zanzibar, have all, through unpreparedness, suffered grievous loss and injury among the shipping; and these catastrophes (history warns us) repeat themselves. My desire is that precautions should be taken against even exceptional disaster.

Has anybody fully considered the practicability of making either harbour or landing-place at Alexandretta? Have those who talk of making a landing-place studied the Admiralty charts, especially that on the large scale, six inches to a sea-mile? The Gulf of Iskanderoon is the last resting-place of the Nile mud, as the Gulf of Cutch is that of the River Indus mud. Currents are the agents in both cases. That of the Mediterranean sets past Port Said, and round the Syrian coast by Tyre, Beirut, and Bay of Antioch to Gulf of Iskanderoon. S.W. gales stir up the mud and carry it onwards. The chart of the gulf, in the regularity of its muddy depths, tells its own tale about silt from the Nile and other minor streams, and also of the washings of its own amphitheatral hills. The dismal swamps of Alexandretta, the gradually-increasing soundings off shore, warn us in their mute way not to imagine that nature in her freaks will respect any harbour-works or jetties that are solidly connected with the shore. Suadieh is no better off, nor are Tripoli, Beirut, Sidon, Tyre,—indeed, these last are more liable to be silted up. Insular Tyre of pre-Alexandrian days might have been insular Tyre still had not the great conqueror approached and taken it by an artificial isthmus formed from the materials of the old city, Palæotyrus. Neither great guns nor rifles were at command to pick off his engineers; slowly and steadily the work advanced towards the island; and, when once connected, nature took care that the attachment should be permanent. The charts of this day show that the soundings of the bays on either side of the isthmus have now assumed the natural slope prescribed by the restless ocean.

But in these days we have Mitchell's screw-piles, and by them can steal a march upon nature, humouring instead of opposing her. If Alexandretta is to be the terminus, and its proximity to Aleppo marks it out as the right place—then let the question of harbour works and landing-jetties be fully considered. In my judgment it would suffice to throw out 100 or 200 yards of solid rubble pier straight from the shore; then 200 or 300 yards of open pile pier, curving round to the east; then a like length of solid built pier, trending E.S.E., in a depth of six or seven fathoms. Along the inner side of this last, or breakwater head, the big mail steamers can lie, bows to the west, whence the heaviest swell comes, and protected from the N. and N.N.E. winds, which, now in their season, render Alexandretta a lee shore. The curved pier is, of course, for the railway, the trains to come alongside the ships. This mere sketch of my proposal will suffice for the general reader; the principle is explained by Sir John Rennie in his great work on harbours—"Open jetties with breakwater heads, by which means the depth of water would be preserved, as the alluvial matter would be carried away by the passing currents." A more detailed plan might be given to the advocates of Alexandretta as a terminus of the Euphrates Valley Railway.—Faithfully yours,

A. D. TAYLOR, Commander

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—I understand a Committee is sitting at the India House to decide the vexed question of the best method to be adopted in future of spelling in English letters Indian names.

May I solicit the favour of your affording me space for a few suggestions?

It is a matter of great importance to all writers and students of Indian history that this matter should be settled once for all. But no settlement of the question can be permanent unless it is based upon intelligible and sound philosophical and scientific principles. If a system be devised based on sound principles it will commend itself to all, and be readily adopted in all time to come. But a system arbitrarily devised, even with all the authority of the Indian Government to back it, will not get generally into use, and the present and past deplorable confusion will be perpetuated.

I think the following indisputable principles may be adopted as the basis of a system which will meet the objections of every school, whether of those who follow Gilchrist or those who follow Jones:—

1. That the main object to be secured is correctness in pronunciation of names; that is, to spell them in such a way that they shall not be capable of being mispronounced.

2. If this end could be secured by a system of phonetic spelling, such a system ought to be adopted at the cost of appearances.

3. No system has as yet succeeded in effecting this, because almost every writer has been in the habit of using the systems in vogue indiscriminately, or striking out a new one of his own.

4. Gilchrist's system is more successful than any other yet devised in giving a correct pronunciation, but it is unquestionably imperfect, very unnecessarily complicated, and very ugly. Moreover, it has the fault of introducing into the English language forms which are foreign to it.

5. We should avoid introducing into the English language the system of diacritical points which is foreign to the language, inconvenient, expensive in printing, and calculated to multiply error.

6. We ought to adhere as closely as possible, but not at the sacrifice of correctness of pronunciation, to the Oriental way of spelling names. Arguments derived from European usage ought not to be applied to India. For instance, it is asked should we like to see "nismes" spelt "neem," and so on. This is no rule for us, and to apply it to India is to repeat the error that we are making every day in that country of forcing principles, habits of thought, laws, and institutions of Western civilisation upon the East, without regard to the fact whether they are adapted to the East or not.

7. Correctness of pronunciation and scientific accuracy may be secured by the following system, without doing violence to the English language, or offending the eye or the ear of the Oriental scholar, without increasing printers' bills, and raising new difficulties in correcting proof sheets by introducing diacritical and vowel points.

Let "a" retain its legitimate sound (not "ey," but), "a" long (cockney), as in "Agra," or the "ar" in artifice."

The long "ee" or "i" should be written "ee," as Seekree; the double "ee" admits of no mistake, it is an almost exact transposition from the original, and avoids the necessity of the accent over the "i." We need not in writing Oriental names in English letters trouble ourselves with nice discriminations between the long "i" and the "i zer."

In the same way, and on the same principle exactly, the sound of "oo," as in Rampoor, should be expressed always by the double "oo."

The vowel sound in "hair," "fair," "Pesh-awur," should be represented by "e."

The short "a" expressed by zubur in Oordoo, now indiscriminately written, to the utter confusion of all who are not Oriental scholars, "a" or "u," should be represented always by one "u."

The short "i" expressed by zer should be represented by "i."

The long "i," written by Gilchrist "ue" or "uy," is perfectly well represented by the English "y," as "Hyderabad."

If these few simple rules be adopted it will be found that we may follow in all cases the native mode of spelling without doing violence to the eye or ear of the Oriental scholar, and with perfect accuracy in pronunciation, as for instance Khanpoor, Futtuhpoor, Sukr, Sukur, or Sukkur (either is right, the latter being more commonly used, should be adopted on the principle of the less change the better), Hyderabad, Moorabad, Rampoor, Dukhun, Poorub, Agra, Dihli, Awadh (Oude is not admissible, it is liable to be mispronounced Ood, and is according to no rule), Cabool or Kabool, Uffghan, Meerut, Kushmeer, or Cushman, Sreenuggur, Dowlitabad, Sindh, Bruhmupootru, Muttra, Jat, Soodra, Himalu or Himalayu (both correct), Goozrat, Moghul, Ahmadnuggur, Peshawur (the accent of this word is not connected with the English spelling of it; in Oordoo anyone might read it Peshawur or Pesh-awur), Abdooluh Khan, &c.

It is useless, and will only create confusion, to attempt to discriminate for the European ear the different Oordoo consonants, which have each a peculiar pronunciation of its own, and which very few Englishmen can appreciate or imitate.

Let phonetic accuracy, simplicity, aversion to unnecessary interference to existing usage, and as close an imitation as is possible of the original, be the principles to guide the committee to a solution of this difficult question, each of the above principles having weight given to it according to the order in which I have set them down, and a system will be devised which will give satisfaction to all parties, and be an invaluable boon to writers.—Yours faithfully, LTUDUS T. PRICHARD.

BONUS QUESTION, INDIAN ARMY. TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

DEAR SIR,—There is one point of great importance which I must request you will allow me to set forth at this juncture, bearing as it does intimately on the above question.

There is an erroneous opinion prevailing, both in and out of Parliament, that the year 1858 ushered in the fatal stroke whereby the Indian purchase system was put an end to. Whereas we were then only transferred from the late Honourable East India Company's to her Majesty's direct rule, and the Act determining that transfer guaranteed to the Indian army in the most positive terms, an unconditional CONTINUANCE of all the rights, privileges, &c., established by or introduced during the rule of the late Honourable East India Company.

It was only in 1861, more than two years later, and when we were already de facto her Majesty's servants, that measures were introduced which, as the world knows, cut asunder all those rights and privileges which had been guaranteed to us on the transfer. So that it is not merely by virtue of a clause inserted in the Act of Transfer (1858), which by the way was again reiterated by the British Parliament in 1860 (before any change was made), that we have a right to redress, but by the additional fact that our institutions, rights, privileges, &c., were de facto continued for more than two years under the rule of her Majesty, and that it was only after having being made servants of her Majesty, that those changes were introduced.

Had the amalgamation ordered in 1861 been part and parcel of the Act of 1858, or in any way conditional thereon, then the late Honourable East India Company would have been bound to make or stipulate for such terms or conditions at time of transfer as would have included or provided for the compensation to which their Army was admittedly entitled, in regard to this question. But no such necessity existed then, and the entire responsibility of since initiating changes of (as now proved) doubtful expediency, rests exclusively with her Majesty's Government and the British Parliament.

Purchase of steps was carried on in the Indian Army, to my certain knowledge, in 1859 and 1860, and it is not the Act of Transfer (of 1858) which stopped it, but her Majesty's Government, in their desire to reorganise the Indian Army, regardless of the distinct guarantees given in the Act of Transfer in 1858 and 1860.

Moreover, nothing whatever of an obvious or anticipatory character was done, or known, or thought of in India till 1861, with the single exception (and that was in keeping with the spirit and the letter of the Act of 1858) of the new condition imposed on cadets who entered the Indian service subsequent to 1858.—Yours very faithfully,

FRANCIS PICTET, Captain,
Joint Hon. Secretary Bonus Committee.
13, Pall-mall, London, S.W., June 8, 1872.

INDIAN ARMY.—THE BONUS OR STEP PURCHASE SYSTEM ?—II.

This brings us to the considerations immediately bearing on the claims which for nine long years have been pending in Parliament, and submitted by officers of the late Hon. East India Company's Service, by virtue and on the strength of clearly defined guarantees inserted in the Act, whereby the Government of her Majesty assumed in 1858 the direct government of India and its dependencies. In that Act the promotion, rights, claims and privileges were purposely and positively assured to the officers so severally and collectively transferred from the service of the late Honourable East India Company to that of her Majesty. As the former had (with the sanction of the Board of Control) in 1836 officially pledged itself not to interfere with or put a stop to the step purchase system without due notice, so the latter in 1858 pledged itself that every right, claim, and privilege enjoyed under the old regime would be scrupulously adhered to and continued to the officers concerned, as enjoined in unmistakable language deserving quotation as follows:—

Act 21 and 22 Vict., cap. 106, enacts that, as regards—EXISTING ESTABLISHMENTS.

Article LVI.—The military and naval forces of the East India Company shall be deemed to be Indian Military and Naval Forces of her Majesty, and shall be under the same obligations to serve her Majesty as they would have been under to serve the said Company, and shall be liable to serve within the same territorial limits only, for the same terms only, and be entitled to the like pay, pensions, allowances, and privileges, and the like advantages as regards promotion and otherwise, as if they had continued in the service of the said Company, &c., &c.

Article LVII.—Provided, that it shall be lawful for her Majesty, from time to time, by order in Council, to alter or regulate the terms and conditions of service under which persons hereafter entering her Majesty's Indian forces shall be commissioned, enlisted, or entered to serve, &c., &c.

Article LIX.—All orders, regulations, and directions lawfully given or made before the commencement of this Act by the Court of Directors or by the Commissioners for the affairs of India shall remain in force; but the same shall, from and after the commencement of this Act, be deemed to be the Orders, Regulations, and Directions under this Act, &c., &c.

And the following was repeated in Act 23 and 24 Vict., c. 100, Aug. 20, 1860, and is called Henley's Clause:—

And be entitled to the like pay, pensions, allowances, and privileges, and the like advantages as regards promotion and otherwise, as if they had continued in the service of the said Company.

And the advantages as to pay, pensions, privileges, promotion, and otherwise . . . shall be maintained in any plan for the reorganisation of the Indian army.

To prove the principle on which the officers lay their claims in one respect alone, it is sufficient to give the following extract from the General Regulations of the Army, in force previous to 1861:—

GENERAL REGULATIONS (IN ALL THREE PRESIDENCIES ALIKE).
Section XXVII.

1. All officers shall be promoted by seniority in their respective regiments up to the rank of major, and afterwards by seniority in their respective branches of the service.

3. Promotions or removals on augmentations are to be made on the principle of removing to new corps the senior officers of each rank who may by such removal be promoted to a superior rank, or be advanced to a higher grade in the same rank, lieutenant-colonels and majors being taken according to seniority in the line, and others from the successive grades in each regimental rank, according to seniority, in the army, not adverting, however, to rank conferred by the operation of her Majesty's brevet, which gives no claim.

This is one of the regulations, whereof it is declared, in the Act of August 2, 1858, that,—

(1.) Article LVI. entitles the officers to its advantages, "as if they had continued in the service of the said Company."

(2.) Article LVII. declares them to be alterable "only" in the case of "persons hereafter entering her Majesty's Indian forces."

(3.) Article LIX. decrees that these same "Regulations, lawfully given or made," &c., "shall remain in force, &c."

Couple the organisation of the Indian army as regards promotion with the system of purchase, and the inevitable deduction arising therefrom is, that unless the promotion was continued to be obtained by seniority alone, or that (without due notice) the Government did not take any steps to impede, interfere with, or put an end to the system which was in force for more than sixty years, the officers were guaranteed the continuance of all their rights and privileges in this as well as in all other respects; and anything countervailing or operating as a breach of that guarantee clearly entitled the officers to compensation for losses incurred both in money and in prospects and expectations by the unexpected action of the Government.

In January, 1861, her Majesty's Government being desirous to remodel the organisation of the Indian Army determined to do so by adopting and introducing a scheme now known as the Amalgamation Order or Warrant, dated 16th of that month. In that one important measure was enacted, forming, in fact, the gist of the entire change, which immediately affected the system of promotion by seniority up to that time in force, and as absolutely affected the system of step purchase also universally prevailing. It was thought necessary to create Staff Corps in each Presidency, and to introduce into those corps a new system of promotion to substantive rank at fixed periods. Thus an entirely new principle of promotion was ushered in, which at once removed a large number of officers from their old to a new sphere. Those going to the Staff Corps thenceforth rose in rank and pay altogether differently from and independently of those who were compelled by various causes to so far remain attached to the old conditions. The body of officers was cut in twain; one portion acquiring new rights and privileges, the other being left a mere wreck. One became subject to a system of promotion which no amount of purchase could possibly accelerate; whilst the other was at once not only bereft of all assistance from or co-operation of, their late brother officers, but, to crown all, their rise was further impeded by the retention of Staff Corps officers' names in the cadres of their late regiments, to regulate (as it was said) the promotion of their juniors, so that had they even had the means of carrying on the purchase system (up to that time in force), they could not do so, for they would then only have purchased up, in two cases out of five, at least, the names of officers already removed from their midst, and not themselves. Both classes or portions at once lost all benefit previously calculated to accrue from the system of purchase, both in accelerated promotion and in succeeding in their turn to the bonuses to which they had previously contributed with that expectation in view.

It will be well to state here a fact that is tolerably well known, that the late Honourable East India Company had three different times taken into consideration the practicability and advisability of forming Staff Corps, on some such a plan as that set forth in 1861; but they each time came to the conclusion that it could only be done by at once severing the one set of officers from the remainder, and giving the latter the benefit of the measure consistently with the regulations in force. This they felt would involve much greater expenditure than could be afforded, and the impossibility of avoiding this without committing a breach of faith with their officers was the reason why it was not carried out before.

Further, in issuing the Amalgamation Order, her Majesty's Government felt that to introduce this new organisation would practically place a considerable number of field officers out of employ, and they consequently decided, from motives of economy, and as a matter of policy, upon granting annuities to all who would retire and forego their claims to offereonings or colonelcies. By this means the State effected a very considerable saving; though, here again, they directed that these officers' names should be retained (in italics) in the active lists, to regulate (as in the case of staff corps officers' names) the promotion of their juniors. This alone was a measure diametrically opposed to the principles on which the rights and privileges of the East India Company's army officers were based, and different also to the system followed in the Queen's service. In the latter, if officers went to the Staff Corps or on the unattached list, their names were certainly retained in the cadres in italics, but only as supernumeraries, and were not suffered to impede or interfere in any way with the promotion of their juniors. The retention of the names in these cases was with the sole object of regulating the position of those officers whose names were so retained in case they quitted the Staff Corps, or returned to active duty with their regiments. But the retention of the compulsorily retired field officers' names in the active lists of the Indian army could have but one effect, that of further paralysing promotion and consequently still more fatally staying the purchase system up to that time in force. Officers remaining could not possibly purchase if their reduced number had rendered it possible, as their doing so would not have secured them advancement, since there were two sets or classes of italic names standing in the way; and the retiring officers were on their side suddenly called upon to lose the bonuses, or prospects of such, to which they had for years looked forward, and to secure which they had themselves contributed considerable sums of money at successive periods of their service.

These are the chief points in support of the representation of the officers to the effect that the guarantees clearly enacted in the Act of Transfer of 1858 had as clearly been departed from. And it is also abundantly evident that her Majesty's Government had in 1861 made up their minds to completely reorganise the Indian army on a new basis, just as they determined in 1871 to reorganise, on a new basis, the British army; and that in the one as in the other the consequent responsibility and liability to compensate the Indian army in 1861 as the British army in 1871 are identical; indeed, I am justified in saying that the responsibility in regard to the Indian army is far greater, for the latter was guaranteed by the Act of 1858. The step purchase system of the Indian army had been officially recognised and sanctioned, and was supported by a pledge in Clause LVI., Act of 1858 (above quoted), and it is incontestable that the various orders and warrants connected with the Amalgamation did in effect, and in an even greater measure than the Act of last year respecting the Queen's, put a stop and an end to that system and the claims to compensation for its virtual, literal, and compulsory abolition by the State, are in the case of the Indian army even greater than in that of the Queen's, from the fact that one half of the former was at once actually done away with, and disbanded from financial and political considerations.

Spirit of the Indian Press.

INDIAN SECURITIES.

The Times of India, commenting on the story of the native gentleman in Southern India who lost his confidence in the Sirkar's promissory notes, does not for a moment believe that he buried his mohurs and rupees in the earth. If Mr. Elliott would be at the pains to get his friend to trace what became of the treasure which its owner feared to entrust to the Government of India, we will be bound to say that it may be discovered at this moment lent out at a rate of interest twice, or four times, that paid by the State. Here is the open secret which is carelessly overlooked by those who carp at Indian capitalists, because they do not rush to the Treasury with their spare funds, and who declaim because such a very small proportion of our guaranteed railway stock is held by the people of the country. The simple fact is, that the people can do better with their money. It is irritating to hear the sentimental regrets expressed on this subject, sometimes even by Finance Ministers, who ought to have more sense. In a country where the normal rate of interest ranges from nine to twenty per cent. per annum—forty-eight per cent. was granted in one of our High Court decrees the other day—the marvel is that any appreciable amount of native capital should be invested in Government stocks, and that the price of those stocks should be so high as at the present moment to return less than four-and-a-half per cent. to the investor. When the economic facts of the case are duly considered, the extent to which native capitalists do invest in Government paper is very remarkable, and shows that the political and financial distrust alluded to by Mr. Elliott has as yet made but very little progress indeed. Unfortunately the data with which the Financial Department ought to supply the public in connection with this interesting topic is wanting. No one can say with any degree of certainty what proportion of Government stock and railway shares are held by native, and what by European investors. The point has not been referred to in recent financial statements. The proportion of railway capital in native hands has sometimes been stated in Mr. Danvers's annual report, but the current number omits to mention it. The only definite statement on the subject that we have at hand is in a Parliamentary paper of 1869 (vide p. 711 T. of I. Calendar of 1871), where it is shown that of the then "registered debt of India," Rs. 62,82,72,000, about 14½ crores were in native hands, or more than one-fifth of the whole. Much of this is held for the obligatory purposes of trustee and securityship, which, together with the inherent advantages of convenience and ready negotiability, have far more to do with native holding of Government stock than the consideration of the rate of return yielded by the paper. Were this last the only point which the native investor has in view when putting his money into Government paper, the total would be very much smaller than is now the case. The disinclination to lend money at less than five per cent. when twice as much can be obtained on mortgage, and three or four times as much on fair personal security, does not betoken the slightest want of respect for or lack of confidence in British rule. It is the veriest political conceit and sentimentalism to repine, because the capitalists of the country do not prove their ardent loyalty by passing vows of monetary abstinence and making financial martyrs of themselves. We cannot expect water to run up hill; and it is absurd to expect that the people's investments will flow very freely in the four-and-half channel, when other runlets marked ten or twelve are open and thirsting to be filled.

FALSE ECONOMY.

The Madras Times thinks that the "penny-wise and pound-foolish" spirit of the Government may be seen everywhere. It is not confined to one department or two, but every one has to lament over it. The Government is often carried on in a regular see-saw manner, at one time the most lavish expenditure is practised, and at another time the greatest economy is carried on; and thus the game goes on. Of course false economy leads to extra expense afterwards; for works are stopped, and people are sent away, and perhaps the next month the work has to be recommenced, and the men have to be re-engaged at a higher rate than they were working at before. But let us take a few instances. Some public works are going on, and the engineer in charge hopes shortly to bring them to completion. Everything is going on well, and the master is rejoicing in the work of his hand, when like a bolt out of the blue, he receives an order to stop the works at once. With sorrow he has to obey, and the works have to be given up. A month or two passes, and then comes an imperative order to go on with the works. But what has taken place during the short time that everything has been stopped? The workmen have been scattered in all directions and have been engaged on other works, and when they are required they are not forthcoming, and the country has to be scoured in order to find others to take their places, who when they are found require higher wages than were given to the former workmen. Such cases as we have pointed out are not at all unfrequent, and the reason is that at the time of stopping the works it is imagined that there is not money enough to meet the expenses connected with the works. If a moment's thought were given to the subject, it would be seen that it would be cheaper to go on with the works than to let them stand still; but those who order such things are not of this way of thinking. We will give an instance of false economy with regard to military matters. A few years ago during a time of scarcity a Colonel of a European regiment stationed up-country wrote to the Government to say that the wages of native servants of every description must be raised, and he named the lowest sum that ought to be given to them. The question was discussed and the conclusion that was arrived at was that one-third of the sum named by the Colonel ought to be given. The consequence was, as anyone might have expected, the servants went away to districts where provisions were cheaper, and others had to be engaged at far higher wages. The Colonel had pointed out that the health and even the discipline of the troops depended upon the proper number of servants being maintained. But this did not weigh with those who had to settle the question. Economy was everything, and they were economical after a fashion. The only error was that such economy proved to be terrible extravagance in the end, and so will all such kinds of economy prove. The heads of departments will often do their best to save a few annas from the pay of a peon or a sweeper, while they will lavish thousands on useless projects. It is amusing to read the correspondence that is carried on about a transaction that may perhaps cost a few rupees, while lakhs are being thrown away in some useless undertaking or other, and no notice whatever is taken of the waste. In some cases we feel assured that the cost of stationery and stamps exceeds the value of the subject written about, while a large failure is often allowed to pass without a word of comment. False economy is at the bottom of all.

TRAVANCORE.—A sum of Rs. 40,000 is to be paid by the Travancore Government to the Government of India, as compensation for the loss sustained by the importation of goods through British India into Travancore during the year 1871-72.

PROGRESS AMONG THE PARSEES.—The following remarks were addressed to those present at the exhibition of the Girls' School of the Students' Literary and Scientific Society, held on Saturday last, by the Hon. Mr. Justice Gibbs:—"I can well remember the time when none but females of the lower orders were ever seen in the streets of Bombay, and when even the Parsee ladies never went out except in closed carriages separated from their husbands, brothers, and sons. Such a thing as a native gentleman and his wife driving together, much less walking together, was unheard of, and the Hindoo ladies were kept even more secluded than their Parsee sisters. What a change has taken place since then. Now the shores of the island are every evening gay with the bright and picturesque dresses of Parsee ladies, who join their husbands or brothers in their evening walk or with their children, enjoying the sea breeze on the open shore. Hindoo ladies also may be seen mixed with them and adding to the gay scene. This is all the effect of education, &c." Referring to these remarks the Bombay Samacha says:—"A hollow show of reform among Parsee males and females has induced foreigners and especially Englishmen to believe that this sect has advanced considerably in civilisation and social reform. Unfortunately it falls to our lot to dispel this misleading impression. The Parsees have really been making but little progress in reform. That which dazzles the eyes of foreigners is mostly external. Such a well-wisher of the natives as Mr. Justice Gibbs exults at the idea of Parsee and Hindoo ladies walking in public with their husbands and brothers. But the honourable gentleman is mistaken in measuring the progress of reform from this only. The number of Parsee ladies coming daily to the band-stand and the Backbay seashore does not exceed two dozen; even of these the majority is uneducated. Again, some of them only go there from superstition, to propitiate the sea, and they are generally accompanied, not by their husbands, as Mr. Justice Gibbs supposes, but by their servants."

STATION TALK.

SIMLA, May 17.—More liberal arrangements, for the mail constitute not only some of the shadows which coming events cast before them, but also enable me to send a few lines which I feared would have been too late for to-day's despatch. Last night gave us several hours' abundant rain, hail, thunder and lightning, and the wind is somewhat tempered to the shorn lambs of the Council who now crowd the train and the road. A Punjabee official had his house burnt last night. It is yet a moot point whether the lightning was guided by the weird Ram Sing, or whether the occurrence was attributable to the mere every-day agency of a hot flue or a spark on the carpet. The incident should be turned to profit by the Assurance Companies in either event. All sorts of well-known faces throng the dawks, and all Departments of the Government of India are busy unpacking boxes of stationery, erecting ominous pigeon-holes, and hanging their several sign-boards on the outer walls. Men who have ridden in to-day say that the roads continue good in spite of the heavy rains, but the heat in the day trains is said to be awful. When the guard of honour is marched in, Simla will begin to put on her grand airs. The chief pleasure is to admire the tone and colour of the children, pleasant and beautiful adjuncts to every Indian landscape, more especially enjoyable at the Bandstand of a hill station, and we live in hope and faith of an early Bandstand.—Bombay Gazette Correspondent.

CANPORE, May 17.—You will regret to learn that cholera has appeared in the cantonments at Canpore. There were seven deaths on Sunday among the European community, and two or three deaths have occurred daily since that date. An officer of the 18th Regiment was attacked, but has recovered. In most of the cases death has followed the first attack very rapidly. One-half of the battery of artillery has moved into camp, and it is expected that the other half may follow. There is no epidemic in the city of any unusual character, and it is not impossible that the disease was brought from the infected tracts of country in Pertabpurg and elsewhere by the east wind which commenced to blow with considerable force on Sunday, the first day on which the epidemic appeared.—Pioneer Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

DENGUE FEVER.—Dengue fever is becoming worse in Serampore. Scarcely a house, we believe, has escaped. In our own office no fewer than thirty-one men are at present suffering from the disease and absent from work. In the Hindoo Patriot office last week nearly the whole of the establishment were "down" with the fever, and the editor had to apologise for the delay which occurred in the despatch of the paper.—Friend of India.

RIFLE VOLUNTEERS.—A new rifle association has been started at Cachar, and is to include members residing at Sylhet, Cachar, and other frontier stations. It is to be called the North-East Frontier Rifle Association, and at present numbers about fifty members. W. Charles Loraine, Esq., is the honorary secretary, residing at Cachar. It is probable the new association will form a branch of the Rifle Association of Northern India, and, while competing for its prizes, will hold meetings for local prize-shooting.—Pioneer.

PROPOSED GREAT EXHIBITION AT CALCUTTA.—The proposition of the Indian Daily News, to hold a Great Exhibition in Calcutta, is one which we should be glad to see strongly advocated. Already we see in what numbers Europeans and Americans are taking India as a part of the grand tour which a hundred years ago meant only Europe but now includes the whole world. The articles of Indian manufacture shown in so many Great Exhibitions in Europe have always attracted the greatest admiration; but if to the fact of vastly finer articles being shown in Calcutta is added the greater pleasure of seeing them in their own country, and exhibited by the actual producers themselves, it is not too much to expect that, for the tens who now visit India, we may expect hundreds or even thousands in the Exhibition year. The spectacle would certainly be unique.—Pioneer.

MILITARY.—It was arranged in December 1864 that the officers of the local army who were then in excess of military requirements might, if willing, be employed in the Public Works Department, on the understanding that their military pay and allowances should continue to be drawn in full in the Military Department, their travelling allowances as Assistant Engineers only being treated as a Public Works charge. This was a temporary arrangement intended only to facilitate employment of officers in excess of military requirements, and which, the Government of India are of opinion, should now cease. With this view, therefore, they have resolved that the Circular of 1864 sanctioning the above arrangement should now be considered as cancelled, and any officer who may, at present, be employed in the Public Works Department, whose pay is debited to the military estimates, should be directed to return to military duty.

VISIT OF LORD NORTHBROOK TO THE JETTIES.—On Thursday morning at six A.M. his Excellency went on the river and inspected the river fire-engine. He was accompanied by his Aide-de-Camp, and proceeded as far as Huttcollah Ghaut. At half-past seven he was received by Mr. W. D. Bruce, the vice-chairman of the Port Commissioners, and Mr. Munro, the Superintendent of the Jetties, and inspected the same before his return to Government House. At five P.M. his Excellency went to inspect Mr. Theodore Jensen's paintings at the Dalhousie Institute.—Indian Daily News, May 18.

DETENTION OF MAILS.—Last week the Calcutta mails were detained in Bombay nineteen hours. Calcutta, of course is, indignant, and Madras is in much the same state; the Mail tells Major Bourke that if he cannot mend matters in that particular he will soon have nest of hornets about his ears. It has been stated, apparently on good authority, that the office to which Major Bourke succeeds is a sinecure. It ought not to be so, and certainly never would be so in Mr. Tweedie's hands. The last English mails reached Bombay in seventeen and a half days, the shortest passage on record. But where is the good to Calcutta, Madras, and the intervening places?—Friend of India, May 24.

THE NEW SYSTEM OF TREATING LEPROSY.—The Inspector-General of Hospitals has been requested through the Government of India to give a careful trial to a new system of treating leprosy advocated by Dr. Beauperruy in a treatise recently published. The experiments are to be made at either the District Charitable Society's Leper Asylum in Amherst-street, or under Dr. Mantell in the Leper Ward attached to the Burdwan Jail, or otherwise as the Inspector-General may think best, and the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal will be ready to sanction any reasonably moderate sum for giving the treatment a fair trial. The result of the steps taken by the Medical department is to be reported to the Bengal Government.—Englishman.

ARTISAN CLASSES AT DACCA.—A true reformer is Baboo Denonath Sen, the head-master of the Dacca Normal School. He has opened carpentry classes, which he supervises himself, and at which some thirty students of the school, besides outsiders, already attend, and are learning carpentry out of school-hours. It is proposed to extend the usefulness of these classes by granting small artisan scholarships to lads who have lately passed the vernacular scholarship examination, but whose means do not enable them to continue reading in any school. The artisan scholars will attend the General Normal School lessons in arithmetic, drawing and surveying only, and the rest of their time will be spent in learning the use of tools and in learning to work in wood according to scale and pattern. His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal has sanctioned a grant for the maintenance of these artisan classes.—Pioneer.

THE EFFECTS OF THE STORM ON THE EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.—On Saturday night last the sudden storm which was experienced at Calcutta was felt at about the same time severely for over a hundred miles westward, where the Government and the railway telegraph lines were torn up and blown across the line, especially so as to dangerously impede the passage of the down mail between Manukoor and Canoojunction. Here the European guards, the driver, and the fireman had to stop the train for the purpose of removing the obstructing lines, eight in number, on one side, and six lines more on the other side entwined together by the violence of the wind; while telegraph communication was interrupted for a considerable time before and after the accident to the electric lines, thereby causing a delay in working the trains. Simultaneously with the foregoing accidents, the main signals at the roadside station of Saktighur were blown down and across the line.—Englishman, May 24.

THE CHOLERA IN THE DARJEELING TERAI.—Dropping cases of cholera continue to occur among some of the tea plantations in the Terai and at Punkabarry, and even as high up as Kurrison. One of the gardens near Punkabarry had been almost entirely deserted by the panic stricken coolies, and several had fled from the Singell estate. Some of the sick men had taken up quarters by the side of the cart-road, but the authorities promptly put a stop to this objectionable proceeding. We are glad to learn that it seems likely that the worst is over now, and that the frightened men are returning to work. Nevertheless, there has been sufficient mischief done to show how urgently necessary it is to provide more readily accessible medical aid for these large groups of tea plantations in the vicinity of Kurrison and the Terai. Either Kurrison or Punkabarry should be, we think, the head-quarters of a first-class dispensary, under the direct management of a resident medical officer.—Darjeeling News.

A PLEA FOR MR. FORSYTH.—The case for the degradation of Mr. Forsyth seems to us not to have been made out. He acted within his legal power in sentencing to death men who had been guilty of rebellion, robbery, and murder; and the Government of India does not assert that any innocent person was punished, or that the punishment of the guilty was too severe. For what offence, then, has Mr. Forsyth been censured and removed from the Punjab Commission? For none other than that, acting on the principle of concealing from the natives any differences of opinion among their rulers, he, after the deed was done and could not be recalled, wrote to Mr. Cowan:—"My dear Cowan, I fully approve and confirm all you have done. You have acted admirably." If Mr. Forsyth erred in adopting this view of the relations that ought to be maintained among comrades in the public service, his error was shared by the Punjab Government, and he ought not to be punished for having failed to take the lead in denouncing a subordinate whom he had vainly counselled to refrain from doing an illegal action.—Bombay Gazette.

COURT-MARTIAL ON CAPTAIN WELCHMAN.—In the month of February last Captain A. J. S. Welchman, of the 19th Bengal Cavalry, so far lost his temper as to strike a sowar of his regiment at Mooltan five times with a spear, wounding him three times slightly; and this having been done when the regiment was under arms for the inspection of the general officer commanding the Lahore division, Captain Welchman was of course tried by court-martial for his offence. By the court-martial he was sentenced to be severely reprimanded and to lose his army rank by being placed at the bottom of the list of captains of the Bengal general list; but on the sentence being sent up to the Commander-in-Chief in India for his approval and confirmation, his Excellency made a minute to the effect that he confirmed, but could not approve, such a light sentence for so grave a military offence. Lord Napier ordered Captain Welchman to be released from arrest, but that he should not return to duty pending further orders; and remarked that till Captain Welchman shall have given ample proof that he has learned to control his temper he cannot be entrusted with any command.

KABUL.—Our own advices point to the chance of renewed contention between the Ameer Sheer Ali and his Absalom, the Sirdar Yakooob-Khan, who, it was supposed, had been completely pacified by being made Governor of Herat. He is now said to have closed the gates of that city against the Ameer's recruiting sergeants. It is also represented that he encourages the people in their resistance to the poll-tax, levied by orders from Cabul. The pressing difficulty of the Affghan State is its overgrown military system, which, as soon as the Ameer strives to modify it, turns in upon him and deranges all his authority in the provinces out of easy reach of the capital. It is not at all probable that before long we shall hear of another outbreak of those internal dissensions which have so long distracted unhappy Afghanistan. The Ameer has already commenced recruiting operations on a large scale. In the neighbourhood of the city of Candahar one in every four men is to be enlisted, and in the more distant villages, as many as are considered fit to carry arms. This sweeping conscription has naturally created great discontent, and it is much feared that in case of another collision between the Ameer and his rebellious son the oppressiveness of the Cabul policy would breed wide spread disaffection among his subjects. The officers in Shere Ali's army are being taught the words of command from an English book on drill instruction, which has been recently translated into the Affghan language. From another source we learn that the Ameer is about to establish a weekly newspaper, printed in the Persian language, in his capital, and that he contemplates sending his son, Sirdar Ebrahim Khan, to govern the province of Affghani-Turkistan.—Times of India.

MUNICIPAL.—It appears that Colonel Ritherdon, and not Major Ellis, has been appointed to act as President of the Municipal Commission, Madras.

A TIGER AT CLOSE QUARTERS.—We are informed that while a gentleman and two ladies were taking a walk last evening in the cinchona plantations on Dodabetta, they observed a tiger also taking an evening ramble. The surprise and consternation of the party may be imagined.—South of India Observer, May 20.

RELIGIOUS RIOTS.—The Mahomedans and Hindus of Shikarpore in Mysore appear to have had a terrible row. The Hindus were the aggressors, for from some cause or other they threw a number of boys' heads into a mosque. In revenge the Mahomedans circumcised a number of the Hindus. The case is now in the hands of the Magistrate.

THE GOVERNMENT.—It is believed that the Madras Government's trip to the Hills will last longer than it has hitherto. Lord Hobart, it is said, has received the sanction of the Secretary of State to remain on the Hills during four months of the hot weather instead of three. The several establishments will begin to move about the middle of next month.

MEDICAL.—The Madras Mail is surprised to find that Dr. Furnell, F.R.C.S., is appointed to act as surgeon to the Governor, "without prejudice to his other appointments." Those other duties, our contemporary imagines, are in themselves particularly onerous, as they include the superintendence of the Eye Infirmary and the Professorship of Ophthalmology and Physiology at the Medical College.

SECUNDERABAD.—The heat at Secunderabad (Deccan), we are informed by a correspondent, is almost unbearable, and besides the cases of sunstroke, which we mentioned yesterday, we are informed that Lieut. Marrett, of the Hyderabad (Nizam's) Lancers, has also died from a stroke of the sun. For some days past the thermometer in the shade has stood generally at 107 deg. between two and five in the afternoon, and has never been lower in the afternoon for the past fifteen days than 103 deg.—Madras Times, May 22.

LORD HOBART.—The Madras Mail devotes a leading article to "Lord Hobart's first blunder," the appointment of Mr. John Charles Loch, President of the Madras Municipality, as his Private Secretary. The Madras Times, on the other hand, thinks that Mr. Loch's wide knowledge of the world and of business, and a patient and laborious disposition, joined to a pleasant and equable temperament, are surely as likely to make a man a good private secretary as a full knowledge of civilian intrigue in the districts; and concludes that Mr. Loch possesses many qualities likely to make him a good secretary.

DENGUE AT QUILON.—It may perhaps interest our readers to know that the disease called "dengue" prevails to a great extent in the regimental lines at Quilon. We hear there are about 200 in hospital with it, and almost all the families of the sepoys living in the lines are suffering from it. Assistant Surgeon Cooke, who is at Trichoor now, is on his way to Quilon. Colonel Cooke, commanding the 23rd Regiment L.I., passed through Trichoor on Saturday last to take command of the regiment.—Cochin Western Star.

THE LATE CYCLONE.—The Madras Government having telegraphed for a naval officer of experience to go over and report upon the state of the Madras roadstead and the wrecks by the late cyclone, Captain Morland, L.N., has been selected by the Government of Bombay to fulfil this important duty; and he left for Madras on Tuesday morning. We (Madras Mail) understand that the committee of inquiry into the circumstances connected with the late disastrous wrecks at this port will be presided over by Mr. Carmichael, acting second member of the Board of Revenue, and that the mercantile community will be represented by Mr. W. B. Liddell, of Messrs. Walker and Co.

THE PEARL FISHERIES.—The attention of the Madras Government has more than once been directed to the failure of the pearl fisheries of Tuticorin. For the past few years these fisheries have proved failures, and all the endeavours of the Government and the marine authorities to bring about a satisfactory state of affairs has proved ineffectual. The Master Attendant of Tuticorin and the Collector of Tinnevely were, over and over again, asked to inspect, and report on the pearl banks, but the Government were greatly disappointed with the reports. When the oysters were numerous, and the fisheries were extensive, the revenue to the Government was about five lakhs per annum. This source of revenue has now been lost, but the Government of Ceylon have been successful in their fisheries. We learn from the papers of that colony that there is every likelihood of the pearl fisheries being successful in 1874 or 1875. For about twelve years the Ceylon fisheries brought no revenue to the Government, and in the past two seasons the Government anxiously watched the progress of affairs, which now promise success.—Madras Standard.

HARD LINES.—It seems hard lines on the suitors whose appeals were dismissed because their lawyers could not get to Court on the day of the cyclone. Mr. Justice Holloway seems to have gone on the principle that if he could get to Court anyone else could, and that there was consequently no excuse for the non-appearance of counsel on that day of flying trees and smashed carriages. Now, this is not quite fair. Mr. Justice Holloway lives inland, and it was comparatively easy to get from his house to the High Court; but the majority of the barristers concerned live at St. Thome or the Adyar, from which it was simply impossible to get to town when the storm was at its height. Besides, it is not everybody whose carriage, loaded or unloaded, is so well ballasted as that of Mr. Justice Holloway. We believe the Judges have no power to re-admit appeals that have been dismissed, but it was decidedly hasty to dismiss them when the parties were prevented from putting in an appearance by reason of an act of Providence. The only consolation is that, had the cases been heard, they would in all probability have been dismissed, as ninety-nine out of every hundred regularly are.—Madras Times, May 22.

STATION TALK.

KURRACHEE.—May 15.—It is with the deepest regret I have to announce the death of Mr. White, Judicial Commissioner of this Province, who died this morning after a painful illness, which was borne with great patience, and even cheerfulness, to the last. His loss is keenly felt, and the sympathy for his family and the universal regret felt by all was evinced this evening in one of the largest funerals I have ever seen here—indeed I do not think there was an absentee. All the flags were half-mast high throughout the day, and the whole place seemed as if it was in the deepest mourning. Mr. White only belonged to the province for a few months, but in that short space he had endeared himself to all. He was an able and conscientious judge, with great tact combining that suaviter in modo which, while a man carries out his duty with great strictness, still endears him to all who come in contact with him. His death is truly a loss to the province and will not easily be replaced.—Bombay Gazette Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

DEODORIZING PROPERTIES OF COFFEE.—It will perhaps be useful to know that after numerous experiments with roasted coffee the result proves that it is one of the most powerful means, not only of rendering animal and vegetable effluvia innocuous, but actually destroying them. A room in which meat in an advanced degree of decomposition had been kept for some time was instantly deprived of all smell, on an open coffee roaster being carried through it containing a pound of coffee newly roasted. In another room exposed to the effluvia occasioned by the clearing out of a cesspool, so that sulphuretted hydrogen and ammonia could be chemically detected, the stench was completely removed within half a minute on the employment of three ounces of fresh coffee. The best mode of using it as a disinfectant is to dry the raw bean, pound it in a mortar and then roast the powder in a moderately heated iron plate until it assumes a dark brown hue, when it is ready for use. This is really worth remembering.—Poona Observer.

BOMBAY PORT TRUST.—The committee of the Bombay Chamber of Commerce have circulated to the Members of the Chamber a report on the proposed Port Trust, in which they declare their opinion to be that the new burdens that have been placed on the trade of the port in consequence of the purchase of the Elphinstone property are greater than it can well bear, and that therefore it is incumbent on Government that the deep water basins required for the accommodation of ships and steamers frequenting the port should be proceeded with at the expense of the Government of India, without any charge being made for interest on the outlay while the works are in progress. When the basins are ready for use the port may fairly, the committee think, be called upon to pay the interest on the capital expended, but not till then. The committee also think that the works should be carried on vigorously, so as to be brought to completion as quickly as possible, and that this should be done under local management, free from Government control in all matters of detail. The members of the Chamber will meet on an early date to discuss the question.

THE BOMBAY SETTLEMENTS.—In noticing the fact that a revision of Settlements is going on in Mysore upon the Bombay system of Survey and Assessment, Allen's Indian Mail quotes the testimony of the late Commissioner, Mr. Bowring, that the Bombay system is "the only settlement in India, of which it can be said that the Government revenue always increases under it, that the waste land is invariably taken up for cultivation, and that the assessments never break down." That is high praise, says the Mail, from a Bengal civilian, but our contemporary adds, "the Bombay system, be it remembered, assesses the land revenue mainly on the heads of villages, and the assessment runs for thirty years." Our contemporary is here at fault. The distinctive feature of the Bombay system is that the settlement is made with each individual cultivator, and not with the "heads of villages." The plan of dealing with the Patel or malgoolzar, head of the village, is the system on which the Central Provinces were settled, and is not the Bombay plan at all.—Indian Economist.

STRONG LANGUAGE.—The Arga Mitra, a Guzerati weekly, launches out in the following denunciation, which is surely sweeping enough to satisfy any taste:—"If injustice and crime prevail in the native States, the tyranny and high-handedness of the British officials in Kattiwar are not less. Even the lowest officer of the Agency thinks it a part of his duty to put the state in the worst light. Burra Sahab and his assistants, and even the native officers, are up to everything; proud, greedy, and exacting. A native, when he gets a responsible post, is worse than an Englishman. Over the whole of Kattiwar about half-a-dozen Dukshanees and a couple of Mahomedans reign supreme. It is a shame to the British Government. The Dukshanees, most of them beggar Brahmins, are the real rulers. Government posts in Kattiwar are given as if by lottery. Many of the officers are uneducated. A certain department is filled up with Brahmin cooks and water carriers. Again, a responsible post of honour, which was hitherto enjoyed by an English captain, is now given to a Mussulman who knows not a word of English, and was but a sowar some five years ago. He gets about 700 rupees per month, and has power to imprison a person up to two years." No doubt some intense feeling of caste rivalry has prompted this diatribe.

THE GAIKWAR'S TRAMWAY.—At the Parell workshops of the Bombay and Baroda Railway may now be seen three tiny engines, with carriages and waggons en suite, which have been built to run on the Gaikwar's 2ft. 6in. gauge tramway near Baroda. This tramway has cost his Highness a good deal of money. The rails were laid at first for cars to be drawn by bullocks, but when the line was complete the Gaikwar insisted on having it worked by steam-power, and the weight of the steam-engines crushed the light rails to pieces. The tramway has since been re-constructed, and a set of rolling-stock specially designed for it has been supplied by the B. B. and C. I.

Railway at a cost of about Rs. 40,000. On Tuesday Colonel Hancock, R.E., Captain White, R.E., and the principal engineers and locomotive superintendent (Mr. Carroll) of the railway, went out to Parell to see the toy train run on rails which have been laid down for a few hundred yards beside the workshops. The little engine did its work bravely; and the carriages, though very uncomfortable in comparison with the splendid broad gauge carriages, are not much more inconvenient for passengers than an ordinary London omnibus. There are two classes of passenger carriages, and on Tuesday a train was composed of a second-class carriage filled with natives (there was room in it for eighteen seated), of an empty upper class carriage, and of two trucks, one crowded with coolies, and the other loaded with bales of cotton. The engine went off with this load at a pace of fully ten miles an hour; and the inspection was declared to be quite satisfactory. The company present afterwards went over the spacious and well-arranged workshops, where Mr. Carroll is now putting together some of the rolling-stock for Holkar's metre-gauge railway.—Bombay Gazette.

FREIGHTS.

To Liverpool—Cotton and Wool, £2 15s. Seeds, £1 nominal per ton.
To London—No ship.

IMPORTS.—BOMBAY, May 27.—Prices have advanced As. 1 per piece on nearly all descriptions of Grey Cloth. For Dyed and Printed Cloths we nominally quote slightly higher figures. Twist continues firmly held, and we make no change in quoted rates. Metals are still in good request, and generally have an upward tendency.

EXPORTS.—BOMBAY, May 27.—Cotton: For two days the buying for export by European houses was very large, at an advance of Rs. 3 to 4 per candy. Since then, however, dealers show rather more anxiety to sell at slightly under the highest rates previously paid. The total purchases reported since last mail left amount to about 18,000 bales. Wool has again given way Rs. 10 per candy, owing to the unfavorable advices from England.

MONEY MARKET.—BOMBAY, May 27.—EXCHANGE: An advance of 1/4 per cent. has been established, closing rates to-day being as follows for six months' sight paper on London, viz.: Bank Bills, 1s. 11 1-16d.; Credits, 1s. 11 5-16d.; and Documents, 1s. 11 1-16d. per rupee. On Calcutta there has been but a moderate business doing, and the demand rate may be quoted 1/4 to 5-16 per cent. discount. On China 60 days' sight Mercantile Bills have advanced to Rs. 22 1/2 per 100 dollars.

ALLOWANCES TO MEDICAL OFFICERS.—Under instructions from the Right Hon. the Secretary of State for India, the Right Hon. the Governor general in Council is pleased to notify that G.G.O. No. 1,192, dated Dec. 21, 1870, is cancelled, and that all allowances granted by that G.O. will cease from May 31, the rates of pay, &c., laid down in 1864 being intended by H.M.'s Government as remuneration in full for all duties which may devolve on medical officers of the British army serving in India. 2. The extra allowances admissible under the provisions of G.G.O. No. 370, dated April 4, 1867, to medical officers of the Indian service already holding permanent charges or staff appointments on account of the extra medical charges therein specified, will, however, be passed also to those officers of that service who, having no substantive appointment or permanent medical charge, may temporarily hold those extra charges, and the allowances laid down in the G.G.O. of Dec. 21, 1870, for the medical charge of native batteries, will also be specially continued to officers of the Indian medical service, viz.:—For the additional charge of a field battery of native artillery, or a mountain battery, Punjab Frontier Force, Rs. 25 per mensem; and for the additional charge of any other battery of native artillery, Rs. 10 per mensem.

With having, at Mooltan, on the 6th March, 1872, five times struck with a spear, and three times slightly wounded, Nowrung Sing, sowar of the same regiment, the said Nowrung Sing being then and there mounted and in uniform for the inspection of the General officer commanding the Lahore division.

Sentence.—The court sentences the prisoner to be severely reprimanded, and to lose army rank by being placed at the bottom of the list of captains of the General List of Bengal Infantry.

H. ROWLANDS, Colonel 41st Regiment, President.

I confirm but cannot approve the sentence passed on Capt. Welchman, which is inadequate to meet the very great military offence of which he was guilty, in repeatedly striking with a spear a soldier of his regiment when under arms and attending at military exercises.

Capt. Welchman will be released from arrest, but will not return to duty pending further orders; until he shall have given ample proof that he has learnt to control his temper. Capt. Welchman cannot be entrusted with any command.

Robert Hayne, of the same regiment, in substance and to the effect following—that is, to say, that Lieut. Hayne had acquired a very bad character among card players; that he, Captain Liot, would never play with him again, and that he had heard other gentlemen make the same remark; one of them was Capt. E. J. Macchell, royal artillery, who, during a game of écarté, had called him, Lieut. Hayne, “a damned leg,” and said he, Captain Macchell, would not play cards with him, Lieut. Hayne, any more.

A gale of extraordinary violence swept the Presidency, and almost all the shipping in the roads was driven on shore. The loss of life has been serious, but would have been infinitely greater had it not been for the zealous exertions of the troops in garrison. They were the first on the scene of disaster, and at once applied themselves to the humane task of saving life. This they maintained throughout the day with the utmost zeal, devotion, and endurance. The Commander in Chief embraces this opportunity of thanking the officers and men of the Royal Artillery and North British Fusiliers for their admirable conduct, and congratulates them most heartily on the success which attended their endeavours.

RECRUITS FOR INDIA.

The following is the report of the Committee, consisting of Major-Gen. Edwards, C.B., Inspector-General of Recruiting; Major-Gen. Armstrong, C.B., Deputy Adjutant-General; Col. Sir Garnet Wolseley, C.B., K.C.M.G., Assistant Adjutant-General; Sir T. Galbraith Logan, K.C.B., M.D., Director-General Army Medical Department, and T. G. Balfour, M.D., Deputy Inspector-General, appointed to consider the age of recruits sent to India.—

The Committee assembled on the 27th of January, 1872, and received instructions to adjourn till the Report of the Committee on the proposed organisation of the land forces could be considered. Having reassembled on the 19th April, and considered the Report, the Committee is of opinion that eventually, when the proposed organisation is complete, the facility of transferring men, as regards infantry, from one battalion to another, either of the same regiment, or of linked regiments, may obviate any difficulty in procuring the men for foreign service of the age mentioned, but till then there can only be one method, and that is by calling for volunteers, as was done for the drafts for the season 1871-72 just embarked. This practice is not recommended, nor generally approved of. The transfer of men under fifteen months' service from other corps, under Clause 6 of the "Army Enlistment Act, 1870," will not complete the numbers required, as these men are now mostly under twenty years of age. The Inspector-general of Recruiting reports that the necessary number of recruits who will fulfil the conditions of age have not been obtained for the infantry drafts for the season 1872-73, as they must now be enlisted at a (declared) age of nineteen years six months, and they are not offering for enlistment; but the cavalry have been completed without difficulty. It remains to consider with respect to the medical examination of these drafts, which, last season, was based first upon the actual age of twenty, whether it might not be desirable to substitute a certain length of service, whereby the physical constitution of the recruits may become fully known, for a simple declaration of age, which is often deceptive. The Committee having ascertained that the declared age shown in the recruit's attestation can be no sufficient guide, as it is in the recruit's power to make that declaration according to his desire to proceed abroad, and that this declaration cannot be proved in most cases by baptismal certificate, nor can any experienced medical officer give any definite opinion as to the age between eighteen and twenty-two years, recommend that till the new organisation has come fully into play, the decision of the fitness for foreign service rest, not upon declared age, but the knowledge of the physical constitution of each man, acquired by not less than a period of twelve months' effective service, which can be fully ascertained by the commanding officer and surgeon in medical charge of the regiment or depot. The Committee suggest that, as far as possible, as regards service in India, newly arrived regiments should at once be sent to the hill stations; and would further remark that there is no reason to suppose that young men under twenty will suffer in the Mediterranean, Dominion of Canada, or the Cape of Good Hope, and recommend that no restriction as to age be at present put on recruiting to complete the drafts for regiments stationed at those places.

THE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN FINANCE.

On June 7 Major-General Strachey's examination was resumed, and beyond our brief summary of the day's proceedings the following detailed information was given:—The examination turning upon the new State railways, the witness gave explanations, from which it appeared that they are likely to pay well, as offering a fair field for permanent investment, while the national benefits to be derived from them must be great, as the State lines will act as feeders to the main lines. With regard to the Mutlah or Port Canning Railway, the witness confirmed the evidence already given by other witnesses, viz., that it had been a mismanaged affair from the beginning; and the Imperial Government itself had made a mistake in originally sanctioning this particular line. He (General Strachey) would not say that the government at Calcutta took no trouble to check expenditure, or that they acted with negligence, or neglected to pay attention to remonstrances. If one member of the Government was culpable in this respect, all were. Nor would he admit that because military buildings, such as barracks, were so hastily run up as to fall down before the mortar was dry, the Government was responsible for this. The real responsible parties were the engineer and the contractors. He had heard of Lord Mayo's severe "memorandum," animadverting on the Public Works Department for allowing nefarious contracts to be carried out on military buildings which would not stand inspection when built. He (witness) was unaware that Lord Strathairn had written lengthy minutes on the management and failures of the Public Works Department in his time. Being asked how much capital was to be raised to be spent on State railways, the witness replied (as we understood) between eight and nine millions. The last Budget statement on Indian Estimates gave the exact amount. Colonel Trevor's report on the capabilities of certain portions of India to support new railway lines or branches was referred to by the chairman as containing the proposals on which the Indian Government were acting in regard to the routes of several new railways in course of construction exclusively by the State. The lines when completed might pay 4½ per cent. The Government proposed to borrow money at 4½ per cent. for the purpose, while Mr. Fawcett suggested that the State might borrow at 4½ per cent., but their railways would not be likely to pay 3 per cent. The witness mentioned in the course of the day's examination that he had advised the sum of fourteen millions to be spent on further improving the canal communication and irrigation works of India.

On June 11 Major-General Strachey, as chief engineer of the new Indian State railways, underwent examination by the committee, and a severe cross-examination by Mr. Fawcett, on the railways and canal speculations and expenditure of the Indian Government, over a period of years. The same facts came out again regarding the Ganges and Orissa canals and the great irrigation works of India as have been already reported. The general tendency of the inquiries and evidence rendered more and more apparent the inextricable confusion the Calcutta Government accounts had been somehow got into. For the complicated state of those accounts it was considered by the committee that the Government was culpable in permitting so much negligence and neglect of system in their accountants, who were all well paid for their services, and therefore their incapacity was the more provoking.

The Committee suddenly, and it was thought temporarily, adjourned shortly before two o'clock, through hon. members being called away to hear Mr. Gladstone's statement on the American claims and the state of the arbitration question. Although Major-General Strachey remained in attendance until four o'clock in the committee-room, hon. members did not return to continue the examination of this important witness, and the time was therefore lost, while no explanation was given of the cause of the continued absence of the Committee. It would have been more satisfactory to all parties had the Committee definitely adjourned upon this occasion, giving every one a holiday. Indeed, the labourious tediousness of the finance inquiry has become so oppressive alike to witnesses and examiners, that even half-an-hour's adjournment for refreshment at two o'clock would be decidedly acceptable to all parties.

On Friday Major-General Strachey's examination was resumed and lasted throughout the day. The subject was the prospective advantages of the State railways. The witness showed by reference to the means of land transport in the interior of India that the State railways, like the existing Indian railways, would facilitate transit, such as of salt and other commodities, thus contributing to the development of the commercial resources of the country. The route of the new Rajpootana railway to the Punjab, now in course of construction by Government, ran in the direction of the salt producing districts. Mr. Fawcett asking for information regarding the specific objects of the State railways, the witness said there were two:—1. To facilitate the transport of troops; 2. Extension of traffic and commerce. A lengthened inquiry followed, to ascertain what was the distinction between "ordinary" and "extraordinary" public works in course of being carried out in India; the witness replying generally that the terms had been used to distinguish works paid for out of revenue, and works carried out by means of borrowed money. The terms were purely financial expressions. They were categories of the Finance Department, not of the Public Works Department, which was only an executive body. The witness was understood to say that under the system now in use great national works would not be made in future out of subscribed capital, but out of revenue funds. The witness concluded his evidence by offering the opinion that the solution of the Indian Railway Financial problem might be found in the State purchasing up all railway property, and taking the entire control of the system, trusting to the development of the resources of the country for future profit.

Miscellaneous.

MR. H. RIVETT-CARNAC, the eminent cotton commissioner, is now in England. Mr. Carnac has taken the leading part in India in the collection of suitable articles for the Exhibition at South Kensington.

SAFETY OF DR. LIVINGSTONE.—The following telegram concerning Dr. Livingstone has been received by the Chairman of the Submarine Telegraph Company to India:—"Stanley arrived at Zanzibar, having left Livingstone alive and well."

SIR BARNES PEACOCK, who has recently returned from India, has been appointed the fourth paid judge under the Act of last year on the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and on being sworn in will take his seat. The salary is £5,000 a year, including the pension as a retired Indian Judge.

DEATH OF DR. JEREMIE.—Dr. Jeremie, who has been Dean of Lincoln since 1864, died in London on Wednesday. He had previously filled the posts of classical professor at Haileybury, Christian Advocate and Regius Professor of Divinity in the University of Cambridge.

COMMERCIAL.—We are requested to state that the books of the four Telegraph Companies—the Anglo-Mediterranean, British Indian, Falmouth, and Marseilles—will be closed on the 24th inst., for the purpose of enabling the directors to prepare certificates of shares in the Eastern Telegraph Company, in exchange for the shares and stock in the separate companies.

OUDE AND ROHILKUND RAILWAY.—The report of the Oude and Rohilkund Railway Company states that the only length of line worked during the half-year ending December last was the forty-two miles of the Lucknow and Cawnpore branch. There is every prospect of at least 400 miles being opened and carrying traffic at a fair profit by the end of the present year.

VOYAGE OF THE "EUPHRATES."—The voyage of the Euphrates, which reached Portsmouth on Saturday week, has been somewhat remarkable, as she is the first of the Indian troopships that have come home round the Cape of Good Hope, and is probably the first ship that has circumnavigated Africa in the same voyage, having gone out via the Suez Canal. From Bombay to the Cape the heat is reported to have been almost intolerable—far surpassing that of the Red Sea. It was relieved only by light airs, accompanied throughout by a heavy swell, which kept the vessel in a continual roll. The losses by deaths were sixteen men and sixteen children, of which seven of the former and fourteen of the latter occurred after leaving the Cape.

CONVICTION FOR FORGERY.—A young man named Neale pleaded guilty at the Central Criminal Court to forging his father's name to a bond for £100. He had been employed in the Bengal Civil Service at a salary of £700 per annum; and, on returning to England found his income much diminished. Being thus embarrassed, he determined to go back to India, and raised £100 to pay his passage. His father refusing to become surety for the loan, the son forged his name, thinking he should be able to repay the loan on his arrival in India. He fell ill, after having paid his passage, and so the fraud was discovered. He was sentenced by the Recorder to one month's hard labour.

ORIENTALS IN LONDON.—A large and influential meeting was held at the Medical Club, Spring-gardens, on Monday evening, the 10th inst., of ladies and gentlemen interested in promoting friendly and social meetings with Indians and Orientals temporarily resident in London. Present—The Dean of St. Paul's and Mrs. Church, the Master of the Temple and Mrs. Vaughan, Mr. Chesson, Sir Roundell and Lady Laura Palmer, and other gentlemen and ladies, to the number of about 100. Sir Roundell Palmer pointed out the great advantages to be anticipated from the establishment of such a society as the one proposed, both to Europeans and Orientals. He concluded by proposing the appointment of a provisional committee to carry the project into effect, consisting of the following ladies and gentlemen:—Mr. Chesson, the Master of the Temple and Mrs. Vaughan, Mrs. Deane, Professor and Mrs. Amos, Major-General Vaughan, and Mr. Bunting.

CEYLON COMPANY.—The report of the Ceylon Company, to be presented at the meeting on June 18th, states that the net profit for the year, including £4,267 brought forward, amounted to £51,062, and recommends a dividend at the rate of six per cent. per annum, free of income-tax. This, with the interim dividend paid in December, the interest on debentures, and £5,000 carried to reserve, will absorb £50,007, and leave £1,055 to be carried forward. The crop of coffee from Ceylon, season 1871-72, now in course of realisation, of which the result will appear in next year's accounts, is exceedingly small; but that which is now ripening (1872-3) promises to be far above the average. The sugar crop in Mauritius for the past year, although not so large as was at one time expected, has been a fair one, and the result is satisfactory. That for the present year will, it is anticipated, be even more so.

MADRAS RAILWAY.—The following is from the report of the directors of the Madras Railway, to be submitted at the annual general meeting on Friday, the 21st inst. The audited accounts of the capital and revenue expenditure for the six months from the 1st of July to the 31st of December, 1871, are now submitted to the proprietors, and, when compared with those of the corresponding period of last year, show a satisfactory improvement in almost all the branches of traffic. During the period referred to no addition was made to the length of line opened for traffic, but the mileage worked over was 832, compared with 715, the average of the latter half of the year 1870, or an increase of 16·3 per cent. The aggregate receipts exhibit an increase of 29 per cent. in the gross receipts, as compared with the same period of last year; while the net receipts have improved by more than 46 per cent.; and it is satisfactory to observe that, although there was so large an augmentation of the work done, there is nevertheless a diminution in the outlay for maintenance of the permanent way chargeable to revenue during the last six months. The chief causes of the additional traffic above noted are stated to be an increased demand for the conveyance of cotton and food grains, the former due to an improvement in trade, and the latter attributable chiefly to the late famine in Persia and the apprehended scarcity in the neighbourhood of Sholapoor and Goolburga. The correspondence relating to the amalgamation is submitted to the proprietors in accordance with the request of the Secretary of State for India in Council. It will be found to contain a full statement of the reasons which have prevented the board from recommending for adoption the proposal of the Secretary of State for a general amalgamation of the three companies now engaged in the construction of railways in South India. The directors have only to express their hope that the course which they have pursued in defending what they consider to be the interests of their shareholders will meet with their approval, which the adoption of the report will be held to signify.

LIEUT.-COL. W. D. BUSHE.—The death of this officer occurred at Aberystwith, from oedema on the lungs, on May 26. Col. Bushe obtained his first commission as a cornet in the 7th Hussars in Feb., 1846; passed by rapid promotion through the intermediate ranks, until, in March, 1860, he became lieutenant-colonel in the regiment, and succeeded to its command in the following year at the age of thirty-four. He served with distinction through the Indian Mutiny of 1858-59, having been present at the chief incidents of the campaign, including the action of Nawabgunge, on which occasion his name was honourably mentioned in despatches for "conspicuous gallantry." For his services in the field he was promoted to the brevet ranks of major and lieutenant-colonel, and received the medal with clasp. Colonel Bushe retired from the service in April, 1864, and for two years before his death had been in failing health. He leaves a widow to lament his loss.

GILCHRIST v. HERBERT.—A compromise was effected in the romantic case of "Gilchrist v. Herbert," which came before the Lords Justices last week by way of an appeal from a decision of the Master of the Rolls. According to the evidence of Mrs. Gilchrist, her deceased husband, in order to induce her to become his wife, promised in writing to give her half his property. At his death it was found that he had devised the whole of it to a daughter by a former wife. The letters in which the promise was made were not forthcoming, having been thrown overboard in a box during a cyclone which happened when Mrs. Gilchrist was on a voyage to India. Evidence was brought forward, however, of persons who had seen these letters; and, on their testimony, the Master of the Rolls made a decree declaring the widow entitled to the moiety she claimed. This was the decision appealed against; and when it had been heard the case was stopped by an announcement that Mrs. Gilchrist had consented to accept a fourth instead of a half of her late husband's property.

BOMBAY, BARODA, AND CENTRAL INDIA RAILWAY.—The report of the Bombay, Baroda, and Central India Railway Company states that the total expenditure for works, way, rolling stock, &c., on the main line, amounted to £6,738,669, and for stores in hand and in transit to £512,106; together, £7,250,755. The directors regretted that they were unable to report a settlement of the question as to this company's terminus in Bombay and the approach to it; but they trusted that the matter would be satisfactorily and finally disposed of in a short time. The traffic receipts during the first three months of 1872 have shown an increase of upwards of £44,000, or 35 per cent. over those of the corresponding period in 1871, arising partly from the opening of the extension line and partly from the early cotton crop in some of the districts traversed by the railway. The directors fully concurred in the strongly-expressed opinions of the company's agent and chief resident engineer, endorsed by the Bombay Chamber of Commerce and other public bodies, as to the importance and necessity of the completion of the shortest railway route between the port of Bombay and Delhi and Agra via Rajpootana, and that this could not be better done than by the extension northward of this company's line from Ahmedabad to meet the State line now in course of construction. The establishment of a provident fund for the benefit of the company's officers and servants in India had received the sanction of the Secretary of State, and as a nucleus to this fund the directors had authorised the transfer of it of £1,200 from the Indian fines fund.

GREAT INDIAN PENINSULA RAILWAY.—The report of the directors of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company states that the total number of miles open for traffic during the half-year was on the company's railway 1,273½, on the State railways worked by the company 13½—total, 1,287 miles. The gross traffic receipts for the half-year ending the 31st of December last amounted to £765,271, and the expenditure to £557,077, leaving as net profit £208,194, which was £75,193 more than was earned in the corresponding half-year. The total expenditure on revenue account amounted to £513,831, against £410,335, showing an increase of £103,496. In addition to the expenditure there had been charged to the half-year £43,246 to the credit of the special funds. The balances at the credit of the special funds on the 30th of June last were £90,741 for the permanent way materials renewal fund, £62,406 for the extraordinary casualties to works fund, and £10,569 for the fire insurance fund; total, £163,717. Fuel continued to form a very large item in this company's locomotive expenditure. It was equal to 47 per cent. of the expenditure in the locomotive department for the last half-year. The average cost of English coal delivered in Bombay was over 22 rupees per ton. The total quantity of coal obtained from the Nerbudda Coal Company during the half-year was only 2,191 tons, at a cost of rather more than 11 rupees per ton; but as the branch line was nearly completed to the Nerbudda Company's coalpits, it was hoped that considerably increased supplies might shortly be derived from that source. The capital account showed that £24,265,665 had been received, and £21,496,278 expended for works and rolling stock, and £1,520,428 for stores, leaving a balance of £1,248,961. The forty-fifth half-yearly meeting of shareholders in the above undertaking was held on Saturday at the Cannon-street Hotel, Colonel Holland in the chair. The report, of which the above is an abstract, was discussed and adopted.

Imperial Parliament.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, MONDAY, June 10.—STAFF APPOINTMENTS IN INDIA.—Sir P. O'BRIEN asked the Under-Secretary of State for India whether, in appointing to military staff appointments in India, a preference was accorded to such officers as had passed through the Staff College.—Mr. GRANT DUFF: I have no means of knowing the exact grounds on which staff appointments are filled up in India by the authorities in whose patronage they are, but have no reason to doubt that the rules respecting the qualification of applicants are duly attended to. My hon. friend is aware, of course, that the great majority of staff appointments in India are given to the staff corps, whose members cannot in the nature of things go to the Staff College at Sandhurst.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, THURSDAY, June 13.—INDIAN LABOURERS IN THE MAURITIUS.—In reply to Mr. GILPIN, Mr. KNATCHBULL-HUGHES said it was quite true that Indian day-labourers in the Mauritius were obliged to pay £1 for a licence, the object being to prevent vagrancy. Sugar planters were not subject to that licence, because they were not likely to become vagrants.

THE SUEZ CANAL.—Replying to Mr. NORWOOD, Mr. C. FORTESCUE said it appeared to be correct that the Suez Canal Company had notified that on and after the 1st of July next the toll of ten francs per ton now levied on the net tonnage (or cargo capacity) of steamers would be charged on the gross tonnage. The Foreign Secretary had, within the last few days, taken steps to obtain certain information on the subject. No opinion of the law officers of the Crown had been taken as to the power of the Company in this respect under the terms of its concession, and he doubted whether Government would think it right to take such opinion as to a concession given by a foreign Government to a foreign company.—Mr. NORWOOD asked whether the right hon. gentleman was aware that the Italian Government had taken diplomatic action in the matter.—Mr. C. FORTESCUE said that Government had received no information to that effect.

PROMOTIONS TO BE REGIMENTAL MAJORS.—In answer to Mr. P. HERBERT, Mr. CARDWELL said the number of first captains of artillery who would be promoted to be regimental majors under the proposed New Warrant was, on the Imperial establishment 155, and on the Indian establishment 128; the number in the case of the Royal Engineers being on the Imperial establishment seventy-two, and on the Indian sixty-seven. When the new battalions for the engineers were completed there would be sixteen more. The increase of regimental pay and allowances would be, in the artillery 4s. 4d., in the field garrison 4s. 8d., and in the Royal Engineers 6s. The increase in the Army Estimates for the numbers so promoted would be, for the Royal Artillery £13,084, and for the Royal Engineers £7,600, making on the whole £20,684. He was not precisely informed as to what the increased cost would be to the Indian Government. Provision had already been made in the estimates for the cost, in this country, falling in the present financial year.

No day has yet been fixed for the discussion in the House of Commons of Colonel SYKES'S motion on the Bonus Compensation question.

The Select Committee of the House of Commons are inquiring into a new line of railway communication between England and India by way of Turkey.

PETITIONS PRESENTED.—By Mr. M'LAGAN, from Lieut. col. M. S. Herries, Retired List, Bengal Army, and from Capt. G. H. Cherry, Madras Army, complaining of loss of regimental bonus, and praying for compensation as granted to those officers of the Indian Army who entered the non-purchase regiments by the Army Regulation Act, 1871.

NAUTICAL INCIDENTS.

The Dunloe, Burns, which arrived at Dundee, June 8, from Calcutta, had to let go both anchors at the Skerries, to prevent the vessel going on the rocks, and was subsequently compelled to slip, losing one anchor with all chain attached, and the other with sixty fathoms chain.

The Timave (s.), from Bombay to London, in bringing to in the Downs, June 11, is reported to have parted the chain, thereby losing an anchor and part of chain; she proceeded on June 11.

TEA IN THE TERAI.—The Darjeeling Terai is now-a-days coming to be considered the best field for tea enterprise in India. Its rich soil, its moist climate, give it all the advantages of Assam, while its easy access, twenty-four hours from Calcutta, and abundance of free, cheap labour, give it the one thing that Assam needs. Among these Terai gardens, the Panchanai in general opinion carries the palm up to date, but there are others that may in a year or two eclipse it. About second to the Panchanai is the Adulpore Company's garden, which has lately been rising very rapidly in the "share list." On enquiry we find it is not so much to its tea prospects, however brilliant they may be, but to a neighbour having unwittingly planted a large area of good tea on the land of Adulpore. Should this be true, and those who ought to know are confident of it, this garden will be worth half as much again. Twelve per cent. per annum is guaranteed on this garden for four years. Lucky shareholders! It is worth while to glance at the future of these Terai gardens; they boast at present that they can put their tea in the market at Rs. 4 less cost per maund than the Hill gardens, but with the present rush to this district, it is not unlikely that in a few years there will not be enough labour for all the gardens, and they will be reduced to an equality with Assam. We are aware that our gloomy prognostications command no attention from the planters; at the worst, they say, it will last our time. It would be better for the permanent prosperity of the district if this matter received more attention. Suppose heavy railway works were commenced? Let them, is the reply. Our railway embankment is already made; from Titaliah upwards all the different railway schemes propose to follow the present Ganges and Darjeeling road. So no workmen will be required to throw up an embankment, which is the heavy work, demanding lots of coolies. Tired of raising objections, we say "he that will to Cupar maun to Cupar."—Darjeeling News.

PROFESSIONAL OPINIONS SUPPORTING AND RECOMMENDING THIS SYSTEM.

I have much pleasure in bearing my unqualified testimony to the admirable system of military exercises as given in Sergeant-major B. Browne's book. I can speak confidently of it, having had personal experience of its value. I am in the habit of recommending it to all those under my care, who require this additional mode of treatment for developing their frame.

C. M. MILLER, M.D.,
Assistant-surgeon, London Rifle Brigade.

Mr. BROWNE.—Nothing can be more true, in my opinion, than all you say in favour of training all our boys to military exercises. Its usefulness cannot be overrated, either to the boys themselves or to the nation, which would thus find, in a short time, and without any inconvenience or effort, the best part of its educated population prepared to take part in the defence of the country, almost without training, and should their services in this way happily never be required, the country would still have the satisfaction of seeing its young male population immensely benefited in health, strength, appearance, and general manliness. If carried out as all schools, it would become the favourite pastime of the boys.

H. EYRE, Lieutenant-general.

Birkbeck Schools, Kingsland, N., March 7, 1871.

For some years past all the boys and girls of these schools have been put through a course of systematic drill, such as that laid down in Sergeant-major Browne's book. The results have been in the highest degree satisfactory. Not only is the physical condition of the children greatly improved, but the discipline of the drill-ground produces habits of obedience and attention, which, carried into the school-room, conduce greatly to the mental progress of the children, as well as materially aid in maintaining order. Until the time shall come when the Government shall wisely insist upon every child being efficiently drilled, schoolmasters who have not yet tried the experiment will do well to do so without delay.

Of course it is of the utmost importance that the drill-instructor should not be a mere marionette. He must be able to convey his instructions clearly and pleasantly;
have an unlimited supply of patience, and show that he really takes an interest in his work.

It has been our good fortune for some years to have secured the services of Sergeant-major Browne, the author of this little book ("Setting-up Drill," &c.), who is not only assiduous in performing his duties, but who is fond of his work, and shows it, and therefore succeeds admirably.

JAMES RUNTZ, Head Master.

Kingsland Middle Class Schools, Sandringham-
road, March 7, 1871.

Physical exercise is undoubtedly one of the requisites
of youth, and if such exercise be conducted with a purpose, it is not only productive of health to the body, but also induces habits of order and energy. In our schools
the system of drill instruction has been adopted with the best results, and I am quite convinced that any school would be the better for its introduction. Of course a great deal depends upon the drill-instructor; but if such an one as ours (Sergeant-major Browne, who is thoroughly fond of the work, and at the same time a strict disciplinarian and a perfect gentleman), be obtained,
the result will be all that can be desired.

ROBERT LANE, Head Master.

Southgate-road Middle Class School, De Beauvoir-
town, N., March 6, 1871.

It is fortunate in the present day there is but little need for insisting upon this physical training of youth, as its importance is so generally recognised. To insure success, however, it is indispensable that it should be conducted by well-qualified instructors, such as are apt to teach, of gentlemanly manners and good disciplinarians. From my observations of Sergeant-major Browne, I am able to testify to his possession of those qualifications, and have very great pleasure in recommending his system of drill to those who may be desirous of introducing physical exercises into their schools.

THOMAS WILSON, F.R.G.S., Head Master.

Finishing Establishment for Young Ladies,
Bonyon-house, 32, Cullford-road, De Beauvoir-town, N.,
March 6, 1871.

Mrs. Aldam has great pleasure in bearing testimony to the efficiency of Sergeant-major Browne's method of drilling, and as possessing not only great patience, but also consideration for the strength of the pupils, that no undue fatigue is occasioned, no too sudden a strain upon the muscles of growing children, eager, perhaps, to outdo their schoolfellows, a point too frequently overlooked, when a large number are being drilled.

CRUISE OF H.M.S. "GALATEA,"

CAPTAIN H.R.H. THE DUKE OF EDINBURGH, K.G., IN 1867—1868.

By the Rev. JOHN MILNER, B.A., Chaplain; from Sketches taken on the spot by O. W. BARNARD. 8vo. 16s.

"It is written in a lively and spirited style, and, putting aside the interest it gains as the history of the hearty and loyal reception which the Prince everywhere received, it is a very readable volume of travel. . . . It is throughout interestingly written, and will well repay perusal."—Standard.
"The book is full of adventures, and will be read with interest by all."—Observer.

MORSON'S EFFECTUAL REMEDIES

Are Sold by Chemists and Druggists throughout the World.

PEPSINE.—The popular and professional medicine for Indigestion is MORSON'S PEPSINE, the active principle of the gastric juice. In Powder, Lozenges, Globules, and as Wine.

CHLORODYNE has now obtained such universal celebrity it can scarcely be considered a speciality, its composition being known to most European practitioners. The combination of Chloroform quickly relieves the pain and spasms of Cholera, Diarrhoea, Dysentery, and in fact all acute and nervous pains, and chronic Coughs; frequently small doses will produce this beneficial result. Many of the Chlorodynes of commerce are not of uniform strength; this has induced MORSON and Son to compound their preparation. Sold in 4-oz., 1, and 2-oz. bottles.

GELATINE.—The purest preparation of this nutritious agent extant is MORSON'S.

PEPTIC FOOD for Invalids and Infants, digestible, nutritious, and palatable. Sold in 4-lb. and 1-lb. tins.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS.

However wise our sanitary councils, however good the arrangements for carrying them out, they will never altogether get rid of disease; under it sufferers may turn to these remedies for effectual aid. In the sad hours of sickness it is cheering to know that a remedy does exist, and that it can be procured at a little cost. Holloway's Ointment and Pills are always useful in relieving pain, in reducing inflammations, and regulating disordered actions. They never can be misapplied, nor can they, under any circumstances, cause mischief. They are a blessing to the rich when tormented by indigestion, gout, skin diseases, &c., and a precious boon to the poor when struck down by illness.

Reporter on the Products of India.

Folio, half-morocco, with numerous coloured Photographs. £3. 5s.

This work—by affording a Key to the Fashions of the People, and to the Cotton, Silk, and Wool Textiles in actual use in India—is of special interest to Manufacturers, Merchants, and Agents; as also to the student and lover of ornamental art.

"We congratulate Dr. Forbes Watson on having produced so useful and so practical a work, and on having diffused knowledge upon all material points connected with the clothing of the people of India, which heretofore had been unattainable. His book is written in a clear and thoroughly intelligible style throughout; it is handsomely got up, and embellished by numerous coloured photographs, from which the various styles of costume and portion of clothing, male and female, will be more readily understood than from mere description. The colours, too, of the various fabrics are given from the articles themselves, and we would in particular invite attention to the plates at page 118, all or most being figures of respectable Mohammedans in Upper India, in rich dresses, as conveying excellent impressions of colour and effect in Native Indian costume."—Times.

Summary and Review.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail, which arrived here more than a day after time, are—from Bombay, May 31; Agra and Madras, May 29; Calcutta, May 28.

THE news by this, the first of the Monsoon Mails, is only four days later than last week's, and is more than proportionally barren of interest. The dengue fever is raging everywhere, from Bombay to Burmah; and cholera, sunstroke and small-pox have been swelling the weekly death-list of Englishmen as well as natives. At Mhow and Cawnpore the cholera appears to have been wellnigh stamped out before it carried off many victims. The same disease is said to have shown itself at Poonah. The report of its appearance at Umballa is evidently premature; but it would be rash to reckon upon the immunity of any station through which the pilgrims returning from Hardwar may pass. Many cases of sunstroke and heat-apoplexy are reported from the Upper Provinces. The dengue fever has become so common that in Gujarát every one salutes his neighbour with "have you had the dengue?" while the Rangoon editors apologise for the scantiness of their original matter on the plea that nobody is well enough to write. In Calcutta an application was made to close the High Court for a week, because counsel, attornies, and suitors were all down with the fever.

ON the 24th May Lord Northbrook paid a visit to the Lawrence Asylum at Sanawar, near Dagshai, on his way up to Simla. His Lordship was accompanied by the Committee, General Huyshe, Mr. A. Lawrence, C.S., and Dr. Cunningham.

THE Punjab paper, Public Opinion, terrifies its readers with "confidential" reports of the exultation visible among the Kukas, when the tidings of the Government sentence on Mr. Cowan "spread like wildfire throughout the country." A poll-tax has been established with the consent of the entire sect, and large sums of money are being collected for some unknown, but of course atrocious purpose. The religious ceremonies, suspended since the middle of January, have now been revived. The Punjab Government has likewise been "warned by its most distinguished officers that another Kuka outbreak is certain before long." Unluckily the Punjab Government, in the person of Mr. Davies, remains perversely deaf and blind to all such warnings, and prefers for the present to take its ease among the deodars of Simla.

WE learn from a Calcutta paper that the Indian Government have resolved to show honour to Lord Mayo's memory by placing a full length portrait of him in Government House, and a monument in St. Paul's Cathedral—St. Paul's that is in Calcutta.

CAPTAIN MORLAND of the Indian Navy has arrived in Madras from Bombay for the purpose of reporting upon the state of the Madras Roadstead and the wrecks caused by the late cyclone.

RAMPUR appears to have come in for a terrible cyclone, which entirely destroyed the Nawab's camp, forcing him to take shelter in a mosque.

ACCORDING to the Times of India, the Indian Government have at length agreed to create the post of Judicial Commissioner in Katiawar, in satisfaction of a want long felt by the Political Agent, whose hands are overfull of legal business. The new post is said to have been conferred on Mr. J. Jardine, C.S., hitherto First Assistant to Colonel Anderson.

THE Bombay papers announce the death of Gopalrao Mairal, Dewan or chief minister to the Gaikwar of Baroda. He was a wealthy banker of Baroda, whose name for honesty was well known throughout the Bombay Presidency.

AMONG the passengers by the last mail from Bombay was Sir Michael Westropp, Chief Justice of the High Court, who left only a few hours after he had passed judgment on cases which had been waiting from two to five years. Sir Charles Sargent takes his place. Mr. J. B. Peill succeeds Mr. Hope as Municipal Commissioner of Bombay.

AT a meeting in Bombay, attended by more than a thousand natives, it was resolved to memorialise the Government against certain clauses of the new Municipal Bill. The speakers insisted with much force upon the need of a large infusion of the educated native element in the Government of India, on the ground that natives knew more of their own countrymen than Englishmen could do. The memorial urges the establishment of a Corporation of at least one hundred members, elected by residents in Bombay, and of a Town Council numbering twenty-four members instead of twelve. It also demands that the salaries of executive officers to the Municipality should be fixed by the Corporation, that the Municipal Commissioner should not sit in the Town Council, and that Municipal funds should not be expended on hospitals, asylums, public halls, offices, libraries, museums, schools, or colleges.

ACCORDING to the Bombay Gazette a pretty sharp correspondence is going on between the Indian Government and that of the Nizam, touching the employment of Europeans and East Indians in the Nizam's service. That ruler, it appears, would secure the services of Mr. Keay, late agent of the Bengal Bank, as treasury officer of the Nizam's new Treasury, the opening of which will probably entail the closing of the branch Bank of Bengal at Hyderabad. Spurred on, it seems, by the Bank's friends, the Indian Government have called the Nizam to account for employing British subjects without their sanction, in breach of treaty arrangements. As the Nizam's Minister, Sir Salar Jung, is on this matter upheld by the British Resident, Mr. Saunders, we may hope that the correspondence will soon come to a satisfactory close.

A CALCUTTA telegram of June 22 gives further information regarding the bills purchased on London by Mr. Dickson of the Bank of Bengal. It appears that the Government authorised him to purchase a certain number of Government Securities at stated prices, which he exceeded. He is also declared to have purchased heavy bills on England without authority. These proceedings Lord Northbrook stopped at once upon his arrival, and called for details of what had been done. It was deemed best however to accept the purchases already made, in order to avoid legal complications and to allay the excitement in the money-market. Some of the Bank Directors were accused of selling shares after they had heard of Mr. Dickson's retirement. An official enquiry into this matter has resulted in clearing the Government Directors of any share in such a transaction.

FROM the same telegram we learn that obstacles in the way of a settlement of the Seistan boundary question had been raised by the Persian Commissioner; but that General Goldsmid, who is now at Teheran, hopes to remove them by further negotiation.

WE hope that, when the Indian Civil Annuity Funds Bill comes up before the House of Commons, the case of Mr. Harvey and his fellow-sufferers will be brought into becoming prominence by their friends in the House. It remains to us a mystery, how so simple a question should have been so cruelly entangled in a heap of legal cobwebs. The Court of Directors, many years ago, agreed that every retired Civilian should receive a certain pension, on condition of having first paid up "half the value of his annuity and no more." Of course so long as he remained in the service, he had to keep on paying his monthly subscription to the fund; but when he retired and took his annuity, he naturally claimed a refund of all payments in excess of the "half-value." That this was due to him in accordance with the manifest meaning of an arrangement which expressly aimed at placing all annuitants "so far on an equal footing," is proved from the sanction expressly granted by the Company to the proviso inserted to that very effect in their respective rules by the managers of the Civil Funds in Madras and Bombay. On the principle of paying "half the value of his annuity and no more," the late Mr. Harvey, of the Bengal Service, claimed a refund of Rs. 95,852 paid in excess of the half-value. Several other civilians dead and living have similar claims on the Indian Revenues. But for nearly twenty years past one Court after another, from the Supreme Court of Calcutta to the House of Lords, has thrown out these self-evident claims for all manner of unintelligible reasons. A more wonderful collection of sophistries under the guise of legal judgments we have never seen than the pamphlet in which they are strung together, and to which we drew attention a few years ago. Several judges of the highest repute ruled that no claim to a refund of over-payments could be allowed in the Bengal Service because nothing was actually said about refunding in the original Despatch. With the provision about paying half the value of one's annuity "and no more" staring them in the face, and with the rules of the Madras and Bombay Funds to guide them to a right interpretation, my lords Campbell, Westbury, and Cranworth, wander away from so simple an issue into a perfect fog of legal subtleties and impertinences, which may be good law, but are sadly at variance with that common sense of which law is fondly supposed to be the highest expression.

"A SUFFERER," writing to the Broad Arrow, complains that several officers who have served under both the old Pension Rules of 1835-37 and those of 1854, "have not in either case been allowed to count any time passed on leave in England" towards their retiring pensions. They have been told, it seems, that under the rules of 1796 there are certain periods of leave deducted from service entitling to pension, which periods include even "the usual leave granted in winter to all other officers." The writer in question belongs to one of the new Line Regiments, which perhaps accounts for his reference to winter leaves, instead of Indian leave in the hot weather. Be that as it may, the gist of his grievance seems to be that the later rules of 1835 and 1854 have been ignored in the answer sent to the officers in question, who are compelled to put up with the older rules of 1796, in which little if any allowance is made for leave. If this be so, some injustice has perhaps been done, for the later rules must have superseded the older, in the case at least of those who entered the service after their enactment. In a note to the Furlough Rules of 1796, it is declared that these rules "do not apply to officers who entered the service after the 1st February, 1854." In the Furlough Rules of 1854 it is laid down that all officers then in the service may remain under the old rules, "provided they signify their wish to that effect when they next apply for furlough or leave of absence;" but having once done so, they "will not be entitled to any other choice." Those on the other hand who may not have taken leave since February, 1854, will "be entitled" on retirement to all the advantages of the new rules. The Rules of 1868 again are made "applicable to all officers who may elect to adopt them."

ON Friday the members of the Burmese Embassy, a number of gentlemen with mysterious and unpronounceable names, were introduced to her Majesty by the Duke of Argyll. A letter from his Majesty of the Golden Foot to the Queen was read, in which he expresses his "earnest desire for the confidential intercourse which independent sovereigns should have with one another," and his great anxiety to employ "the best means for causing the great friendship that exists between Burmah and England to be placed on a secure, lasting, and firm basis." The Ambassadors were also present at the opening of the Bethnal Green Museum on Monday.

ONE more relic of the old fighting days of the East India Company has just been taken from us by the death of Colonel W. H. Sykes, for many years a Director of the Company he once served with distinction, and for the last fifteen years a member of Parliament for the city of Aberdeen. Entering the Bombay army in 1804, he came in for the fighting around Bhurtpore in 1805 under General Lake. In the Mahratta campaigns of 1817-18 Colonel Sykes commanded his regiment which took part in the battle of Kirkee, and the capture of Poonah. From 1824 to 1831 he was employed as Statistical Reporter to the Bombay Government. Like many old Indian officers he employed his spare time in studying the unwritten records of the country in which he spent the prime of his life, and his researches bore good fruit in papers contributed to learned societies on the geology of a part of the Dakhan, on the caves of Ellora, on the ruined city of Beejapore, and the Buddhist caves near Joonur. His elaborate paper on Atmospheric Tides and the Meteorology of the Dakhan, read before the Royal Society in 1835, contained the ripe results of close observations ranging from 1825 to 1830 on the climate of Western India. Later researches in the same field he summed up and turned to good account in 1850 in his remarks on the climate of the Nilghiri Hills. Returning to England in 1831, he became a Director of the East India Company in 1840, and obtained the chairmanship in 1857, the year of his election for Aberdeen. In Parliament he proved himself a steady friend of the country in which he had won his earliest laurels. His efforts to promote education in the Bombay presidency were acknowledged many years ago by a public testimonial from that country; and his steady championship of the invaded rights and privileges of his old comrades in the Indian army will not soon be forgotten, whether by those who have already reaped or those who are still looking to reap the fruits of his Parliamentary battles. It is not long since the officers of the Indian army presented him with a handsome silver candelabrum in hearty recognition of labours hardly appreciable save by those who shared or profited thereby. His last illness and his lamented death will have put off for another year the justice he has long sought to win for some hundreds of officers, hitherto denied a fair amount of compensation for the rights and privileges lost to them ever since the transfer of India to the Crown. Few men have worked so hard and so disinterestedly, or died in harness at so ripe an age, as Colonel Sykes has done. His tall figure and kindly, yet keen, eagle-like face will be missed not only from the benches of the House of Commons, where he was heard, if not with general eagerness, at least with a certain respect; but also from the meeting-rooms of many learned societies, of which he was a useful, sometimes a leading member. The "good grey head which all men knew," has been laid in the dust at an age which few men may hope to reach; but its disappearance will be none the less sincerely mourned by a large circle of friends and grateful clients.

OWING to the illness and death of Colonel Sykes, the cause he had so long and generously upheld in Parliament, the Bonus Claims, that is, of the Indian Army, must lie over, we fear, for one more session. To this question the Colonel, in spite of his great age, had devoted himself with his usual zeal and mastery of the subject. He had already succeeded in impressing a great many members of the Lower House with a firm belief in the substantial justice of these claims, and he had hoped to crown his Parliamentary career with the victory due to a righteous cause persistently upheld. If this last achievement was denied him, he died at any rate in the comforting belief that his labours would in due season bear good fruit in the hands to which he knew they would be entrusted. For this session however it is not likely that anything more will be done. It would be dangerous to bring the question forward in the middle of July, the earliest date now available, when only the Ministerial benches will remain steadily filled. It has therefore been arranged, we believe, to postpone the next move until the first weeks of the coming session. Meanwhile some of our readers will be comforted to hear that a strong feeling in favour of these claims has been steadily gaining ground for some months past, a feeling which is not likely to be weakened by a little more delay. From all we know and hear on this subject, we would strongly advise the Government to give way betimes on a question where victory, however possible, would bring them even more discredit than defeat.

In our last issue the name of Lieut.-Colonel J. G. Palmer, who, we are glad to hear, is alive and well, was inserted, through no fault of ours, instead of his wife's name, in the week's obituary.

FURLOUGH RULES OF 1868.—The following paragraph of a military letter from the Right Hon. the Secretary of State for India, No. 70, dated April 4, is published for general information:—Para. 5. I have, therefore, to request that you will republish Clause XV. of the Furlough Rules of 1868, in the following terms:—"If the aggregate of two years' furlough be exceeded, whether on medical certificate or private affairs, the officer will vacate his appointment, such extension being, in the case of private affairs, without pay, and in that of medical certificate with English furlough pay, for a third year only." This is in supersession of the ruling in G.G.O. No. 1 of Jan. 2, and order books will be corrected accordingly.

COURT-MARTIAL.—At a district court-martial, assembled at Meean Meer, on Feb. 28, 1872, Asst. apoth. J. O. McKimm was arraigned on the following charge:—Perjury, in having, at Meean Meer, on Dec. 11, 1871, when sworn and examined as a witness before a general court-martial, then being held for the trial of Asst. apoth. John Dullard, wilfully and corruptly made the following statement material to the issue before the court, in answer to a question put to him, that is to say, "Can you state positively that it was impossible for Mr. Dullard to have been the person who assaulted Mr. Vyall?" To which question he replied as follows:—"It was impossible; Mr. Dullard was standing at my door when Mr. Vyall shouted for help," the said statement being false, as he, the prisoner, well knew. Finding: The Court finds that the prisoner is guilty of the charge. Sentence: The Court sentence the prisoner to be dismissed the service; and, further, to be imprisoned with hard labour for 168 days. Revised sentence: The Court, having attentively considered the observations of the revising officer, and the whole of the proceeding, do now revoke their former sentence, and sentence the prisoner to be dismissed the service.—C. COOKWORTHY, Colonel, President. Approved and confirmed, NAPIER of MAGDALA, General, Commander-in-Chief in India.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

MONDAY, June 24, 1872.

LORD ABINGER'S VICTORY.

THE efforts of the War Office to readjust the rates of promotion in the artillery and engineers, by giving the first captains the rank and pay of majors, have just met with a serious check from an adverse vote in the House of Lords. A small majority of three in a thin House have carried Lord Abinger's demand for an inquiry into the alleged injustice of superseding captains of cavalry and infantry by the promotion of first captains in the scientific arms to the rank of field-officers. The Peer who led the movement against the new War Office programme, Lord Abinger, is himself a glaring example of the injustice he never felt until Mr. Cardwell tried to remedy it in the only possible way, by turning the tables in favour of the many against the few. As a captain of the Guards after three years' service, his Lordship must have superseded hundreds of officers in the Ordnance Corps. For five years past he has been a full colonel, while artillery and engineer officers of twice and three times his standing, and of infinitely higher deserts, still adorn the list of captains. His Lordship however cannot see the substantial justice of a measure which seeks to remedy a great and ancient wrong, at the least possible cost to the more favoured but really less important branches of the service. We should have thought that no reasonable being could begrudge the officers of the superior arms—for it is absurd to deny their general superiority—a moderate amount of redress for the irrational injustice which has long ranked the command of a battery with that of a troop of horse or a company of foot. In relative importance the two commands in the English army differ as widely as the duties of a lieutenant-colonel in the line from those of an ordinary captain. The most grudging estimate would at least place the commander of a battery in the same scale with the field-officer in command of half a battalion, while a more liberal allowance might even raise the former to a level with the commander of a brigade of foot.

What even Lord Abinger shrank from asserting, except perhaps in the form of a comparison between the relative number of field-officers in a battalion of foot and a brigade of guns, Lord Sandhurst with amazing boldness attempted to prove. By way of showing that the responsibilities of artillery captains are not greater than those of captains in other branches of the service, he compared the extreme case of a line-captain in the trenches commanding four or five companies with that of an artillery captain 1,200 yards in the rear. Not content with such an insult to the common sense of his hearers, who might have retorted with the Marquis of Ripon that a captain before the enemy was by the like reasoning in a much more important and responsible position than a general officer commanding troops at home, his lordship asked with a grave face whether such an officer should be superseded by "a gentleman who has large stores to take charge of, but whose command does not cover a larger number of men than go to form a single company of infantry." One would imagine from words like these, that mere numbers formed the sole test of an officer's position, and that captains of engineers and artillery never mingled in the stern realities of a storm or a fight at close quarters, but kept well in the rear of the actual combatants. Has Lord Sandhurst already forgotten the performances of our guns and gunners at Goojrat, before Sebastopol, Delhi, Lucknow, wherever in short they have had a fair chance of distinction? It is hard to suppose than an officer who has seen some little service in India could have talked in this way from pure ignorance or stupidity, but the alternative conjecture, if less extravagant, is not a whit more tolerable. The one thing certain is that a general officer, who ought to know much better, coolly sets himself to prove that a first-captain of artillery with six guns, stores, waggons, and two hundred or more men under his charge, and the duty of protecting two battalions of foot besides, has no greater relative importance than the captain of eighty or a hundred foot-soldiers who has little to do except obey orders from his colonel, and keep his men together in their proper place. His sneer at the engineer officer is equally preposterous, not to say disgraceful. It must, by his showing, be quite a mistake to suppose that strong places like Delhi and Ghazni have frequently been taken mainly by the cool daring of English engineers, or that many a hard fight has been won by the dauntless energy and cool aim of English gunners under a crashing fire. The best of it is that Lord Sandhurst stultifies himself. Almost in the same breath in which he runs down the artillery captain, he declares that the duty of placing guns in position is "too serious to be relegated to an inferior officer, and is almost invariably performed by field-officers, or by the general officer in command of the corps d'armée." This will be news, we fancy, to many an old artilleryman, but it serves at any rate as an undesigned argument for converting first-captains of artillery into majors.

THE BONUS COMMITTEE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—Some misconception would seem to have arisen from the mere fact of my having taken upon myself, in the interests of the cause, to issue a notice and to address you, chiefly dating from 13, Pall-mall. This has led some of your interested readers to ask which Committee I represent in my communications, as though there were more than one. As unity is an essential desideratum just now, I trust you will allow me space enough to say that I have simply joined THE ONLY Bonus Committee that has ever been formed or taken any action in regard to this material question—I mean the Committee over which our worthy and untiring chairman, Colonel Phillips, has so long presided. I am merely doing, as a subordinate, what lies in my power to press on every inch of canvas at command; and I have given an additional address, with the simple object of extending our field of operations, dividing the work, and avoiding confusion. 55, Parliament-street, is, strictly speaking, the St. Martin's-le-grand, while 13, Pall-mall is the west central branch of the Committee.

You will, I doubt not, let me take this further opportunity of urging on every officer who has a claim to come forward fearlessly in supporting a strong case, and seeking from Parliament that simple justice to which we are entitled. There is nothing to be lost, but, on the contrary, a great deal to be gained by each one coming forward to uphold our efforts.—I remain, yours very faithfully,

FRANCIS PICTET, Captain,
Joint Hon. Secretary, Bonus Committee.

THE CIVIL SERVICE ANNUITY FUNDS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—There is a Bill to be introduced in the House of Commons shortly to transfer to the general revenues of India a very large sum—upwards of two millions sterling—at present standing at the credit of the Civil Annuity Funds of Bengal, Madras, and Bombay. The absorption of this sum, without previous adjustment of the just rights of numerous Bengal civil servants, living and dead, to repayment of moneys which they had contributed in excess of the half-values of the annuities which they bought from the East India Company on their retirement from the service, we consider highly dishonest.

Those claims, it is true, have undergone the tests and decisions of various Courts of Justice, ending with that of the House of Lords. But as those decisions were given in the very face of admissions by the East India Company in our favour, we feel certain that if we could procure any public hearing, we should find our claims justified and have our property, so long withheld, restored to us.

By far the greatest part of the large sum now proposed to be credited to the general revenues of India is fair and legitimate profit to the Government, arising from the operation of a scheme, set on foot by the East India Company, for providing retiring allowances to their civil servants. And with this their successor, the English Government, might be reasonably content, without robbing us of what is to us a considerable sum.

The Bill proposes to do away with the "machinery" of the Funds. It is a most proper term. Had it been kept in view, perhaps the injustice we have suffered would not have been inflicted. For the "Funds" indeed were but the machinery which was adopted to keep the accounts between the contracting parties, viz., the East India Company on the one side, and each individual subscriber on the other. Much of our case has been injured by "the Fund" having been regarded as a substantiality; and it was asked how, if the contract we contended for were allowed, and the "Fund" thus impoverished, the annuities to other members could be provided? But now the phantom, having answered its purpose, in one respect is re-transformed into mere "machinery." Still however injuriously to us, for the abolition of this "machinery" involves the abolition of our individual accounts, showing the balance to the credit of each of us when we left the service and took the annuity. We hope, therefore, that the Bill may not pass. But there are few to speak for a class of men who have been much envied, and thought to have been too much favoured.

Let me quote an instance. The scheme of retiring annuities was shortly to provide an annuity of £1,000, one half of which was to be bought by the retiring member, and the other half to be given as pension, the boon being shackled with the condition that if before getting the annuity the subscribing member died, or resigned, or was dismissed, all his contributions lapsed to Government. Well; the late Mr. J. J. Harvey, of the Bengal Civil Service, had contributed, when he retired from the service, a sum of Rs. 1,44,456; the half value of his annuity was Rs. 48,603; leaving Rs. 95,853, or £9,585 sterling, of which he has been, in plain words, plundered.

It is no wonder the Government of India seek to obliterate the records of such transactions.—Your obedient servant, 17, Gloster-square, June 15. H. J. BOULDERSON.

P.S.—I enclose a small pamphlet, "Remarks on the Judgments of the Various Courts against our Claims." The only ground not satisfactorily rebutted which they exhibit is the fact that in the Bengal rules or bye-laws alone, the omission of a distinct rule to return the excess of contributions is to be found. At the other Presidencies the civil servants had the sagacity to insert it.

THE TRUTH ABOUT LIAKAT ALI.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

DEAR SIR,—At the risk of being thought troublesome, I herewith send a few remarks about the Moolvie, "Liakut Ali," his, and others' doings at Allahabad in June, 1857, during which month I was at that place taking a part in the affairs thereat, and thereabouts.—Yours faithfully, J. B.
June, 18, 1872.

Vide Times, June 17, 1872, &c.

Admitting that Liakut Ali, alias the Moolvie's "great aim throughout was to save the European lives," &c., I would, if near him, ask if such were his aims at Allahabad, when he sent his (reputed) nephew to the fort, where the said nephew, declaring himself sent by, and on the part of, the Moolvie, was received as a chief of the rebels, and requested to remain quietly (unmolested) in another room for a few minutes; and, instead of complying therewith, he at once seized a sword and attempted to cut down a European (to whom he had asked for an introduction) and others inimical to their, the rebels', success.

Seeing that, as one witness states, "Liakut Ali was the chief person in authority among the rebels," and, as another states, that "for eight days, viz., from Monday to another, the Moolvie was supreme on the rebels' behalf," &c.; also, as native residents of Allahabad and others were admitted and held conversation with one or more in and near the fortress on, and daily from Monday, June 8, 1857; it would not have been difficult, even after the first failure, for the Moolvie himself, or any of his confidential messengers, to have made known to the Europeans his wishes and aims, had these been favourable to the British.

One man did, on the aforesaid Monday, offer to bring in supplies and some "lakhs" of rupees, and trust such to me for the use of Government; all of which were, however, civilly declined for the time being, purposely that it might not appear we were in want. This being reported to higher authority, the man and his property escaped molestation; in fact, his property was protected, and himself, I believe, eventually rewarded.

Again, if this Moolvie's "aim was to save European lives," why did he not assist (or inform us of the state and whereabouts of) the Europeans wounded and helpless about Allahabad, instead of sending emissaries to cause greater destruction and misery.

Liakut Ali had, on the 12th, 13th, and 14th of June, 1857, as also before and after, ample time and opportunities for coming in to the British, if he had wished to do so, as a friend or neutral.

The "Nana Sahib" being defeated, why did not this well-aiming Moolvie make his way to the British camp? Also, after his trial and escape by the Mussliman's pleading for him, why did he not send some one or more of his men to the British officers to entreat for him, as did others at Cawnpore, and as did the "Nana Sahib" whilst a refugee on the Nepaul Frontier? No; he chose rather to do what mischief he could, and then remain in secret until betrayed; so unlike the ex-Katwal of Cawnpore, Hoolas Singh, who, finding his game lost (also on the Nepaul Frontier), allowed himself to be surrounded, taken, and tried, and who, although he (this ex-Katwal) was said to be "guilty of enough to hang half a dozen people," escaped to his home to afterwards laugh at the British and their law. The easy access of visitors into our Indian jails, I believe, very much facilitates the working of the silver thread, and corruption of evidence in serious cases such as the present.

Who is this "Bhola Sing," the only witness I find named? He may be (or he may not be) very trustworthy; still who is he, is he a Hindoo of Hindostan, or a Seikh of the Allahabad "Goordwana"? If the latter, he knows this writer, and the writer probably knows him; in this case he ought to be able to give good clear evidence, as well as to bring forward other eye-witnesses to much that was done at and about Allahabad in June, 1857.

The following may not, perhaps, be considered out of place or season here:—

It has been erroneously stated, and which statement has of course become history ere this, viz.:—"A rebel chief having been brought before the Commanding Officer within the Fort, he made an attempt to cut down Colonel Simpson, then commanding that garrison, Allahabad."—Vide many Papers and Sir J. Kaye's Book.

Whereas the facts were, are, and should be shown that, the rebel chief under advection, representing himself (when outside) as nephew of, and messenger from, the Moolvie "Liakut Ali," and wishing to communicate something of importance to the Officer Commanding the Seikhs (Regiment of Ferozepore), he was brought before that officer, Lieutenant (now Colonel) Brasyer, and after a little moderate conversation, the man was directed (by Lieutenant Brasyer) to wait in another room a few minutes; instead of doing as directed, he (the nephew, &c.) seized the sword of an orderly present, and made an attempt to cut down Lieutenant Brasyer (Colonel Simpson being at the time in another part of the fort). Lieutenant Brasyer being too near the man to make use of his own sword, closed in upon and grappled with his adversary; struggling with each other they together rolled and tumbled down ten or a dozen steps; the European officer overpowering his antagonist, held him down, and although he tried to save the man's life, the bystanders, one a Mahomedan, and the other a Seikh, rushed down the steps and literally knocked out the native's brains with their musket butt-ends and their boots. All this is easy of proof in India.

"TEMPORA MUTANTUR."

The Madras Times observes that once, in the early days of John Company, every person in the British isles who took an interest in the East knew the fame of the factories of "Madras," and the commerce of the Hoogly. Now we are called the benighted Presidency, and Bombay has eclipsed Calcutta. It needs a cyclone to attract the attention of England to our town. The second city by name in India, and possessing a history more eventful and splendid than any other, we are nothing now to our young Western brother. If we look at our Presidency, and compare it with those of Bengal and Bombay, we have much more reason to be proud. But its misfortune to have such a capital as Madras has thrown a shadow over it—in short "benighted" it. We can say a few things for ourselves.

... But the unalterable laws of nature and circumstance have coursed us with two irreparable disadvantages. The minor one is, they have given us a capital in an unsuitable locality on the Coromandel, and not on the Malabar Coast. And the major one is, our portion of India is further from England than Bombay. It is of the highest moment that the capital of a country, and its chief towns, should be in suitable situations. The great desire of Russian statesmen is to acquire Constantinople for the capital of their Empire, as it is the gate to the south and the east. Moscow was long ago abandoned, and Petersburg is now found unsuitable. Bombay is even more, by natural position, suitable to become the capital of India than Constantinople is to become the capital of Russia. Both are frontier cities, it is true. But the old days when it was desirable to be situated in a central position with regard to a nation have long ago passed away. Railways and telegraphs have altered times. Now, more than ever, it is absolutely necessary for Indian statesmen to turn their eyes westward, but our present capital turns its back to the west, as it were, and looks eastward, as if it feared danger or expected salvation to come from over the wild ridges of Burmah! Bombay, in the event of future wars, would bear the same relation to Hindustan as a drawbridge to a fort. The Indus, and not the Ganges, would flow red with blood of the combatants. Calcutta and Madras will probably retain their merely commercial prosperity for many a long day. But their prestige and pre-eminence are fading away. Concerning the future of Calcutta we have nothing further now to say. We have little doubt that our gloomy anticipations of the future of Madras will be proved correct. In fifty years—perhaps in twenty—we shall have sunk to the level of Allahabad. The head-quarters of the future Lieutenant-Governor of Madras will probably be at Bangalore. The day perchance is not so distant when the choicest residences in Adyar and Egmore will be tenanted by retired Chetties, whilst a Moolvie bawls the Koran on the steps of the banqueting hall; or it may come to pass—who knows?—that a scion yet unborn of the house of Hobart may visit in a dhony the city which his forefather ruled, and, standing by the ruins of Government House, sadly ruminate on the vicissitudes of local fortune which had transformed the once famous capital of a Presidency into a miserable native fishing village.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

The Bombay Gazette remarks that nothing strikes an Anglo-Indian who has been in England for some time on his return to India more than the increasing insolence of demeanour affected by the lower classes of natives towards Englishmen. In many cases it will be the only sign of progress that he observes. Emancipative measures have done this for them, that although no nearer to the English standard of civilisation and intelligence than they were fifty years ago, they hold themselves as good, if not better, than the Sahib logue, whence, as we have before remarked, an estrangement of intercourse between the governing race and the governed highly undesirable for many reasons too patent to require quotation. And this feeling, we regret to think, is spreading itself even into the army, where the sepoys have no longer that childlike confidence in the superior ability of their European officers that once led them to follow an Englishman into any service of difficulty or danger confident of victory. There it becomes positively dangerous. We hold the Indian native army in discipline and subjection mainly through our prestige, but when that is weakened, as it now is by a ridiculous encouragement of the natives to hold themselves as good as Englishmen, we invite trouble for ourselves, and court an insolence that we may rest assured is far more easily nourished than suppressed. If we were assured of the affection of the natives to our rule, or could under all circumstances count upon a strong British garrison for India, we might afford to ridicule this absurd assumption of equality with Englishmen which the lower classes of natives are copying from their wealthier and better educated countrymen; but we are assured of neither one nor the other, and must regard it seriously as one of the signs of the times not to be ignored by emancipators who would fair place the whole Indian Empire in peril could they only gratify their whimsical hobbies thereby.

MR. G. DICKSON.—There are many odd and some wild rumours flying about, both in this city and in Calcutta, respecting the cause of Mr. George Dickson rather suddenly taking leave and going home without his having told everybody a month since of his intention to do so. But we are in a position to state that Mr. Dickson's state of bodily health is such as to compel him to depart to the West at once. Whatever may have occurred in connection with the recent large and unusual transactions by the Bank on behalf of the Finance department, it is quite certain that Mr. Dickson would have proceeded to Europe, as he is now doing, if those transactions had not taken place. Though Mr. Dickson was constrained to leave India for his health's sake, it is no use concealing the fact that the once all-powerful Bank Manager, the confidant of the Finance department, left Calcutta under a cloud arising from other than physical causes. In what those causes consist we must wait for fuller information ere we can state, but we do not think there is anything in them that need cause uneasiness to Bengal Bank shareholders.—Times of India.

Bengal.

BANK OF BENGAL.—The rates of interest and discount of the Bank of Bengal were on the 30th May reduced one per cent. all round. At the same time the margin of loans on Government paper was raised one per cent.

A RAID INTO CACHAR.—The Deputy Commissioner of Cachar reports that three houses in the Cachari village of Kangdang have been looted by a party of thirteen Angami Nagas, and that the property of about eight traders was also taken.

THE WEATHER AT UMBALLA.—We have the most extraordinary weather for this time of the year. Whilst the denizens of the Ditch are sweltering from the heat, we are having pleasant weather up here. The mornings and evenings are deliciously cool. The change has been occasioned by heavy downpours which we have had for the last few days. The natives say that the rain will prove injurious to the crops.—Mofussilite, May 25.

A NEW MEDICAL COLLEGE FOR LAHORE.—It is rumoured that part of the money contributed by the young Nawab of Bhawalpore in honour of the Duke of Edinburgh's visit to the Punjab, which was to have been expended on an ornamental tank, is to be devoted to the building of the new Medical College which is about to be erected. The site is opposite the Cutcherry and quite close to the Anarkullee Dispensary.

THE WEATHER IN THE PUNJAB.—Dust-storms, followed by heavy rain with thunder and lightning, have been frequent this last week, and the air is cool and moist. There are indications, to reason from the record of past years, that this year will, so far as Lahore is concerned, be one of unusual heat and also rain. If this apparently paradoxical prophecy prove correct, October will be more than usually unhealthy.—Indian Public Opinion, May 24.

A DODGE DISCOVERED.—A new device for concealing murder has been discovered in the Central Provinces. The body of the victim is placed in the jungle, and a report spread that he has been killed by a tiger. On searching for the body, and examining the spot, the pugs of the tiger are distinctly visible, and the story is believed. Unfortunately for the inventors of the scheme, a sharp policeman has lately discovered wooden imitations of tiger's paws, which have been used for making the traces of the tiger.

CONTROL OF GUARANTEED RAILWAYS.—There is a rumour of a probable alteration of the Andie Departments of the Scipdo, Punjab and Delhi Railway and East India Railway as a preliminary to more complete control of guaranteed railways. Though far from complete, the reports of last year threw so much light on the causes of receding merchandise traffic that new committees are being formed this year with larger powers, extended field of observation, and more time allowed for preparation and submission of their reports.—Indian Public Opinion, May 24.

STORM AT AGRA.—From 3 P.M. on Thursday afternoon there was evidently something brewing in the shape of an atmospherical change. A heavy dust-storm came on, which necessitated the use of lights. This was followed by very heavy rain until the evening. During the night a storm arose of considerable violence; the wind blew very strongly, the lightning was appalling, the thunder was deafening; the heavens seemed ablaze with light. About 11 o'clock the anger of the elements subsided somewhat and a calm ensued, as grateful as it was refreshing. We have heard of casualties having occurred, but are not in possession of authentic information. Yesterday it was very close indeed, and it felt as if no storm had occurred, the atmosphere being quite oppressive. It looks ominous.—Delhi Gazette, May 25.

AMENITIES OF THE PRESS.—The Pioneer wishes that the Friend had been a daily. We would advise the Pioneer not to wish too strongly. As a daily we might be tempted to notice its six-line fallacies and fantasies which we now pass over. A few days since the Pioneer had the following paragraph:—"The litany stands in need of emendation, for the Friend of India threatens to become a daily." There are two kinds of jokers in the world, humourists who can extract real fun from passing events, and men who, in place of humour, simply tell—well "fibs." You find the latter scattered all over society, persons who enter into company and retail some grose fiction, thinking it humour or fun. The Pioneer's six line hits are in print what the pseudo jokes are in life. Nine-tenths of the paragraphs are pure lying—in plain statement or by inference, and at least a third of them are simple and intentional misstatement. The above is a specimen, though not one of the worst class. It does nobody any damage, but it is of the kind that passes for humour and liveliness in the Pioneer. Could not the paragraph manipulator manage, for once or twice, instead of picking a few lines here and there out of the articles of other papers, in order to distort their meaning, to make something on his own account? He might do it by hard trying, and it would be pleasant even for the novelty's sake. Any literary cobbler could take three or four lines from a leader, and turn it into a meaning different from the one in the leader. The Pioneer has a rare gift in that way, and seems to enjoy the thing—one can almost see the paragraphist chuckling as he says—"See!"—that is, see the size and consistency it has assumed—the fiction. Wonderful gift—if man is content to live and die a cobbler!—Friend of India.

PRATT MEMORIAL.—It is estimated that in a few weeks the subscriptions to the Archdeacon Pratt Memorial Fund will amount to Rs. 30,000. Rs. 24,000 have already been paid into the Bank of Bengal.

AN OLD REBEL.—A native paper mentions that the brother of Tantia Toppe, a famous Mahratta rebel, who took refuge in Nepal, having cheated the widowed Ranees of Nanhao Rao and Bajee Rao Peshwa out of their jewels, worth hundreds of thousands of rupees, has at last been turned out of the dominions of Nepal by Sir Jung Bahadur. Since his expulsion he is said to have passed through Benares and other places, and, after receiving back his valuables from the mahajuns with whom they had been deposited, to have gone to Bithoor. The editor thinks Government ought to confiscate the rebel's lands and property.

THE SEND, PUNJAB, AND DELHI RAILWAY.—The Government, it is said, propose doing away for the future with the offices of Agent and Traffic Manager as separate appointments, and wish to amalgamate the two offices, getting out a man from England who will undertake the work on a very reduced salary. This, however, is strongly objected to by the Board of Directors, and I fancy will not be carried out. The under-officer of the Traffic Department is already too unpleasantly experienced by the public, and it seems very remarkable that such a proposition should have ever been seriously entertained by the Government, with a line of six hundred miles in length, with a good deal more traffic than a man with the dual duties of Agent and Traffic Manager on his hands could manage.—Lahore Correspondent of Pioneer.

DARJEELING TEA.—We learn from the local News that some time ago two gentlemen finding a tea tree near the top of Mahalderam took some seed from it and planted it at Kishap. With the exception of a slight rib round each seed, it resembles in size and appearance ordinary tea seed. The indigenous tea is strong and full of tannin; in comparison with it China tea has no strength. A few of the indigenous leaves mixed with ordinary Darjeeling tea would give it the strong taste of Assam, but spoil the delicate flavour of the cultivated plant. The Darjeeling indigenous shrub differs from that of Assam and Cachar, in that it has a smaller leaf, and the seed has a mark like a circle round it.—Bengal Times.

THE WEATHER AND THE CROPS.—The following epitome of the reports on the state of the season and prospects of the crops for the fortnight ending May 23, 1872, appears in the Gazette of India:—There is little to record for the past fortnight. The rabi harvest may now everywhere be considered complete, and preparations for the kharif sowings are being made in most provinces, if sowings have not actually begun. Except in Eastern Bengal and Mairur there has been little rain. In Sindh prices have fallen somewhat; in Gujrat, the Deccan, and Southern Maratha country a slight rise is apparent; in Khandeish and Nasick the price of bajra has fallen; in Mairur and Coorg prospects seem to have improved. Elsewhere things are much the same as they were a fortnight ago.

THE GALE AT PONDICHERRY.—We hear that all the craft that put to sea from Pondicherry, except one, have been accounted for. With the exception of two vessels that turned up strangely enough at Cocanada, all have either foundered or been abandoned at sea.—Madras Times.

CIVIL.—The Madras Times says:—"There has for some days been an hourly expectation here of a telegram appointing the Hon. A. J. Arbutnot a member of the Governor General's Council; but it has not yet arrived. It is strange that the vacancy is not filled up, for the Council is at present illegally constituted, by reason of insufficiency of members."

VISIT OF CEREMONY.—On the evening of Saturday his Exoellency Lord Hobart paid a visit of ceremony to his Highness Prince Azeem Jah Bahadour, Prince of Arcot, at the Shawdee Mahal, Triplicane. A salute of seventeen guns was fired from the saluting battery on his Lordship's arrival, and a similar salute was fired on his departure.—Madras Athenæum.

BANGALORE SMALL CAUSES COURT.—The Government of India have sanctioned a revision of the establishment of the Small Causes Court at Bangalore, which will be attended with a saving of Rs. 8,496 per annum, consequent on the reconstitution of the Court in accordance with the provisions of Act XI of 1865.—Indian Daily News, May 25.

WILD DOGS IN TRAVANCORE.—We hear from a correspondent that wild dogs are plentiful in the Travancore hill forests, and that samsar often break into the open clearings of the coffee planters on these hills in the vicinity of Trevandrum, hotly pursued by these fierce animals, in a pack of ten or twelve; and, further, that the planters now and again succeed in beating off the dogs, and secure the hunted animal for themselves, thus illustrating the old adage, sic vos, non vobis.—Madras Times.

THE GOVERNMENT INQUIRY.—It is hardly possible to speak too strongly on the impolicy of holding the inquiry respecting the cyclone with closed doors. We suppose it will be admitted that the inquiry is being held for the satisfaction of the public as well as of Government. What kind of satisfaction will be obtained from a secret inquiry? Somebody is to be blamed, and however impartial the committee may be, the public will not be able to get rid of a suspicion that the wrong scapegoat may have been selected. Anywhere else than here, in India, we should talk of the rights of the public; but it is of no use talking of rights which we have no means of enforcing. — Madras Times.

DEATH OF COLONEL CARPENDALE.—We are sorry, but not surprised to hear of the death of Colonel Carpendale in the Red Sea. As we stated a week ago, Colonel Carpendale had had several fits before reaching Aden, and it was then considered improbable that he could live out the voyage. He died one day this side of Suez, and was buried at sea. Colonel Carpendale fell a victim to Bright's disease, than which there is hardly any more deadly and hopeless disorder. By this casualty the Secretaryship to Government in the Public Works Department becomes vacant, and no doubt Colonel Walker will be confirmed in his acting appointment. Colonel Carpendale's death will be sincerely mourned by a large circle of friends who equally admired his official qualities and his private virtues.—Madras Times.

THE BARD NUISANCE.—A native paper says that about ten thousand bards assembled at Rajcote in honour of the prince's wedding. Bards of this description are to be found in this Presidency as well, as in Bombay. Whenever they hear of a wedding about to take place in the family of a Zemindar they arrange to be there. Sometimes they come from a distance of two or three hundred miles. The sum they receive may be very small, but they make up the difference by demanding money from people on the way. They are a good deal dreaded by the common people, for they can curse with a vengeance, and the people think that their curses are sure to tell.

We believe the Zemindars look upon them as a nuisance, but they are afraid to do anything to offend them. Standard & Times, May 29.

STATION TALK.

GOA, May 20.—Housebreaking, robbery, and murders are the order of the day at Goa; nothing is safe here. The Governor-General of all India, Ethiopia, Arabia, Africa, Persia, &c., &c., has no time to look after these insignificant things or to suppress high-handed lawlessness in his dominions. I hear that some not unknown individuals are planning these marauding expeditions, and although a few have been discovered, yet no steps are taken to punish them. In spite of all this, the Portuguese papers laud the Governor-General to the skies.

BUSHIRE, May 6.—Colonel Pelley returned from Muscat on the morning of the 25th ult., by the gunboat Kwangtung. Affairs there have assumed a quieter appearance. On the 30th ult. the sad intelligence was received of the death, from a pulmonary disease, of Mr. Alison, the British Minister at the Court of Persia. The flag of the Residency was consequently lowered half-mast; and on the 3rd inst. the Acting Governor and the Persian foreign agent paid Colonel Pelley a visit of condolence. Remittent fever still rages in this town and its vicinities, and numerous fatal cases have occurred amongst the natives. Grain of the new crop is beginning to be brought in from the neighbouring villages. Fresh Dashtustan wheat sells now at from 9 to 11 krans per Hashum maund (124 lbs.). According to general opinion, the price may be expected to undergo a considerable reduction after about a month. The relief committee are vigorously pursuing their labours among the sufferers by famine.—Times of India Correspondent.

KHANDALLA, May 25.—We have had delightful weather and cool refreshing breezes. The breeze is still cool, but the sun is hot, and our lovely mornings are quite spoiled by the early appearance of the sun shining with all its strength out of a clear cloudless sky. My walk

Official Papers.

(Gazette of India, May 4.)

H.E. the Viceroy and Governor general in Council is pleased to direct the publication of the accompanying letter from the Quartermaster general, dated the 26th ult., forwarding by direction of H.E. the C. in C. copies of despatches from Brigadier gens. G. Bouchier, C.B., and C. H. Brownlow, C.B., commanding respectively the Left (or Cachar) Column and the Right (or Chittagong) Column of the Loshai Expeditionary Force, detailing the operations carried out under their command, which have resulted in the successful accomplishment of the objects which led the Government of India to organise and despatch the force.

The Governor general in Council concurs with the C. in C. in highly appreciating the excellent services which have been performed, and desires cordially to congratulate H.E. on the satisfactory conclusion of an expedition which owes much to the thoughtful and unremitting interest his Lordship has throughout taken in the operations.

H.E. in Council wishes also to acknowledge the material assistance rendered by his Honour the Lieut. governor of Bengal and the officers employed under his Honour's orders, especially Mr. Hankey, commissioner of Chittagong, in applying the resources of the province in aid of the military requirements.

To Brigadier generals Bouchier and Brownlow the Governor general in Council offers his sincere thanks for the great skill and energy they have displayed in the conduct of the troops under their command, in the face of great difficulties, and for which they have so justly received and merited the marked commendation of the C. in C.

To Lieut. col. F. S. Roberts, v.c., and Capt. C. J. East, of the quartermaster general's department, the two senior army staff officers with each column, and who are both very specially mentioned, to that experienced officer, Deputy Inspector general of Hospitals H. B. Buckle, C.B., and Surgeon major F. F. Allen, the heads of the medical department, to Lieut. col. R. Davidson and Major A. Mackenzie, of the commissariat, to Capt. H. Thomson and C. E. Bates, brigade majors to the columns and to the officers of the staff and departments accompanying the force the Governor general in Council desires to convey an expression of his appreciation of their valuable services.

It further affords the Governor general in Council high gratification to express entire concurrence in the testimony borne by the C. in C. to the efficient and zealous support afforded to their generals by the officers commanding regiments and corps, as named below; and H.E. in Council cordially recognises the unflinching cheerfulness and good conduct of all ranks under circumstances of much fatigue and exertion. The Governor general in Council especially thanks all those who are named by their commanders:—

Col. T. Rattray, C.S.I., commandant 42nd (Assam) N.L.I.

Lieut. col. J. M. Nuttall, commanding advance wing, 44th (Sylhet) N.L.I.

RIGHT (OR CHITTAGONG) COLUMN.

Lieut. col. J. Hills, v.c., R.A., commanding R.A.

Lieut. R. M. Hyslop, commandant No. 3 company Sappers and Miners.

Lieut. col. J. Doran, commandant 27th (Punjab) regt. N.I.

Lieut. col. J. A. Tytler, v.c., commandant 4th Ghorkha regt.

H.E. in Council desires to convey to Mr. Edgar and Capt. Lewin, who accompanied the force in a civil capacity, a full expression of approbation for the valuable services rendered, and not less for their cordial co-operation with the military commanders.

The valuable results of the labours of the officers of the survey department, under Major Macdonald, are fully appreciated by the Governor general in Council.

The successful construction and maintenance by the telegraph department of its lines of communication demands full recognition.

The Governor general in Council has pleasure in acknowledging the zeal and ability of Major Moore, whose exertions were most successful, Major Brown and Capt. Hedayut Ali, who organised and superintended the Transport Coolie Corps, whose services were so valuable to the Expedition, and H.E. in Council fully recognises the good service of the police under Mr. Daly and Mr. Crouch.

The approbation of the Government of India will be communicated through the proper department to the Rajah of Munnipore for the ready assistance rendered by him to the British Government in furtherance of the object of the expedition.

The Governor general in Council will have much gratification in bringing the services of all concerned to the favourable notice of her Majesty's Government.

From Col. P. S. Lumsden, C.S.I., Quartermaster general, to the Secretary to the Government of India, Military Department, No. 497, Loshai "Field Operations," Army Head-quarters, Calcutta, April 26, 1872.

I am directed by the Right Hon. the C. in C. to submit to Government the despatches from Brigadier general G. Bouchier, C.B., and Brigadier general C. H. Brownlow, C.B., commanding the columns of the Loshai Expedition, detailing the operations which led to the successful accomplishment of the objects of Government, as set forth in military department letter No. 294, of July 13 last.

2. These operations have been conducted with the view of preventing the recurrence of the raids and outrages which for many years have been committed by the Loshai tribe on the British frontier of Eastern Bengal, and for permanently establishing the security of the Cachar and Chittagong borders.

3. The officers commanding were especially instructed that the object of the expedition was not one of pure retaliation; that while punishment should follow the proof of guilt, the surrender of all British subjects held in captivity should be insisted on, and every effort made for their deliverance; the main end in view was to show these savages that they are completely in our power; to establish friendly relations of a permanent character with them; to make them promise to receive in their villages, from time to time, our native agents; to make travelling in their districts safe to all; to convince them of the advantages of trade and commerce; and to demonstrate to them effectually that they have nothing to gain, and everything to lose, by placing themselves in a hostile position towards the British Government.

4. The Government of India deprecated the employment of a large force. While it impressed economy upon all concerned, it at the same time required that "nothing should be omitted in the organisation of the force which the military authorities might consider necessary to make complete success a certainty.

5. Our knowledge of the country to be operated in, and of the character of the enemy to be opposed, was limited. Certain facts were known, viz., that the climate in the lower lands was deadly; that dense tropical jungles covered the whole of the lower ridges; that some of the mountain ranges reached heights from five to six thousand feet; that water communication existed to the contemplated bases of operations; and that the physical difficulties to be overcome were of a nature which would test the utmost skill of our commanders and the endurance of the troops.

6. The Governor general in Council was pleased, on H.E.'s recommendation, to place the entire political and military conduct of the operations in the hands of the military commanders.

7. The C. in C., in the earliest consideration of the operation, felt that its success depended more upon the efficiency of carriage than on any other contingency. The sudden and severe outbreak of cholera which attacked the coolies proceeding to the bases of operations during the month of November threatened the success of the expedition, and its continuance from the commencement to the close of the operations has been the cause of much anxiety and delay.

8. Notwithstanding disease, the opposition of the enemy, and the physical difficulties which the formidable nature of the country presented, the operations entrusted to Brigadiers general G. Bouchier, C.B., and G. H. Brownlow, C.B., have, by the energy and discriminating judgment of these officers, been, in his Excellency's opinion, carried to what the C. in C. hopes the Government will consider a most successful issue.

9. The detailed reports of these officers, together with the despatches now submitted, have placed the Government of India in possession of their progress, terminating in the realisation of all the objects required by Government. These reports show that no smaller force could have accomplished the task of creating and maintaining such long lines of communications, and have supplied a body in advance sufficient to overcome all opposition, and ensure success.

10. Throughout the expedition, whenever opportunity offered, conciliatory measures superseded all recourse to force, but when those failed, and when from fear, or with ulterior objects, the Loshais disregarded the demand for release of captives, restitution of plunder, or compensation for past offences, the destruction of their stockades, villages, and jooms was imperatively necessary. It is only by making all the members of the tribes which are devoted to aggression feel the pains of war, that a strong public opinion in favour of peace can be created.

11. Payment of the fines and tribute demanded, together with the entire submission of the tribes of Vonolel, and those of the Howlong and Sylhoo factions of the Loshai race, the recovery of Mary Winchester, and the restoration to our ally, the Rajah of Munnipore, of more than two thousand of his vassals, with the rescue from slavery of several hundreds of our own subjects, has been the result of the operations.

12. The Right Hon. the C. in C. desires to commend to the notice of Government Brig. gen. G. Bouchier, C.B., and Brig. gen. C. H. Brownlow, C.B., commanding the respective columns, for the able manner in which they have exercised their commands, in which, in H.E.'s opinion, they have evinced high military qualities.

13. Brig. gen. Bouchier advanced 193 miles from Cachar, and 110 from his first base in the enemy's country at Tepai Mookh, until he reached the stronghold of Lalboorah, the most powerful of the Northern Loshai chiefs.

14. Brig. gen. Brownlow advanced 213 miles from Chittagong, and 83 miles from his first advanced base into the Howlong country, and his progress was only arrested by the complete submission of that powerful tribe.

15. For four months their lines of communication were maintained, and the columns left for the last and crowning operations were reduced to 400 and 300 infantry respectively. The C. in C. would more particularly invite notice to the spirited action of Jan. 25 of the Left Column on the Moorthlang range; the surprise of Lal Gnoora's stockade on Jan. 3 by the Right Column, with the subsequent dash of the latter into the South Howlong country.

16. H.E. would solicit especial notice of the very marked manner in which these general officers have described, in their despatches, the efficient and zealous support which they received from the regimental, departmental, staff, and medical staff officers attached to their respective columns.

17. The C. in C. entirely concurs with the general officers commanding the columns in the commendation of the troops of their respective commands; but H.E. will not enter into the details of the services of particular corps or individuals, which have been so fully reported. H.E., however, cannot refrain from one exception in the conduct of the two soldiers of the 2nd Goorkha (the Sirmoor rifle) regiment, Lulleetum Mull and Martbur Thappa, who defended their dying comrade against overwhelming numbers of the enemy, and whose gallantry reflects so much honour on their regiment and the native army.

18. The valuable results of the labours of the officers of the survey are brought to the notice of Government; these officers have made a very important addition to the geography of India.

19. The telegraph department successfully constructed and maintained the lines of its communication.

20. H.E. entirely concurs in the terms in which the general officers have mentioned the civil officers attached to their columns.

21. The assistance afforded by the police has been most creditable to the officers and men of that service.

22. The Rajah of Munnipore appears to have taxed the resources of his country to the utmost in order to equip efficiently the column which co-operated on the left of Brigdr. gen. Bouchier's line of operations, and to have earned the approbation of Government.

23. The services of the transport coolies were invaluable, and the Government are much indebted to the meritorious officers by whom they were organised and superintended.

24. In conclusion, the C. in C. trusts that the Government will feel satisfied with the success that has attended the expedition.

OUDE AND ROHILKUND RAILWAY (LIMITED).

The half-yearly general meeting of this company was held on June 19 at the City Terminus Hotel, Cannon-street; Mr. W. Dent, the chairman, presided.

Major-General C. C. Johnston, the managing director, having read the notice convening the meeting, the report, an abstract of which has already appeared, was held as read.

The Chairman, in moving the adoption of the report, said that the progress made might be considered very satisfactory. They had already commenced the new line, and he congratulated them that the open line, which had so long remained at forty-two miles, had now expanded itself into 120 miles, with a prospect of a further considerable expansion to 289 miles before the expiration of the current year. The unprecedented floods of the last two years had prevented the completion of the larger bridges over the Ganges and other rivers, and it would probably be two years more before those bridges would be opened for traffic, but long before that time the whole system of lines would be working the traffic, having temporary bridges over the crossings at the rivers to convey it to its destination. The whole of the works had now so nearly approached their completion that it had become possible to estimate accurately what they would cost, and he thought they might congratulate themselves that, notwithstanding floods and delays, the very moderate expenditure of £10,000 per mile of railway would not be exceeded. Experience had shown that the natives of India would not pay for extra comfort, and would only travel at the lowest fare. The country through which their lines passed being almost entirely an agricultural one, it followed that their passengers would mainly consist of the lower class, and the object was that no carriage should form part of a train which did not pay for its haulage, the lower class portion of the vehicle, it was expected, would always do that, besides when full giving a profit, and the receipts from the upper class portion would of course be pure profit. The claims of the upper class passengers had not been overlooked, because, by paying extra for a certain number of places, whole compartments might be obtained. The locomotives sent out had given much satisfaction, and although weighing only forty tons in steam, including tender, they could easily draw 400 tons. Great credit was due to Mr. Cooke, their able superintendent, for the care which he had bestowed on their design. The carriages which had been made in Birmingham had also given great satisfaction. They had to deplore the death of their late consulting engineer, Mr. Heppel, who from the commencement had been associated with them, and they owed much to him for the care and forethought with which he had worked out their system of permanent way, and for the attention and ability he had at all times bestowed on all matters referred to him. They had appointed Mr. Leslie, C.E., to the post of consulting engineer.

Mr. J. Pender, M.P., a director, seconded the resolution for the adoption of the report, which, after some observations by Mr. Robinson and other shareholders, was agreed to unanimously.

The retiring directors, Mr. W. Dent and Mr. L. R. Reid, were re-elected; and also the retiring auditors, Messrs. Turquand, Youngs, and Co., and Mr. W. B. C. Maxwell. A gratuity of £500 was voted to the family of Mr. Heppel, and the proceedings concluded with a vote of thanks to the chairman and directors.

BOMBAY, BARODA, AND CENTRAL INDIA RAILWAY.

The half-yearly general meeting of this company was held on June 14, at the London Tavern; Lieutenant-Colonel P. T. French, the chairman, presided.

Mr. J. A. Baynes, the secretary, having read the notice convening the meeting, the report, an abstract of which has already appeared, was held as read.

The Chairman, in moving the adoption of the report, said they had prepared the accounts in accordance with the requirements of Parliament, which he hoped would be considered satisfactory. The report informed the proprietors that £512,000 had been expended for stores, a great portion of which he trusted they would get back by the disposal of some of them to the Government of India for the State railways. They would see by the report of the engineer that a great deal of work had been done in respect of sidings, bridges, and other works. The gross receipts for the past half-year amounted to £197,918, as compared with £174,537 in 1870, showing an increase of £23,380 as compared with the corresponding half of 1870. They were told in the report that £15,431 had been expended for special works of repair, which, under ordinary circumstances, would have been charged to capital account. They did not object to the Government putting the charge against revenue, as it did not affect their dividend. Were it not for that extra or special charge, the working expenses would have been 64.42 per cent. instead of 72.74 per cent., but if it were not for certain reserves the working expenses would not have exceeded 55 per cent. for the whole year. The Wud-wan Extension had been opened a further distance of forty miles on the 25th of last month, nearly within the contract time. The extension line had been constructed for £6,000 per mile, and was one of the cheapest lines in India; it would become a first rate feeder to their main line at Ahmedabad. The salt field extended to Cutch, and they were making the Patree salt branch for the Government, and they would work it for the Government at cost price of salt per annum when the line was completed. There would be 80,000 tons to convey from that line, which would come on their line at Ahmedabad, where there would be salt stores, and also at Broach and other places on their line. The Guicowar's tramway would also be a feeder to their railway. The traffic receipts during the first quarter of the year 1872 showed a satisfactory increase of more than £44,000 over those for the corresponding period of 1871. The report referred to the extension of the main line northwards from Ahmedabad to Deesa, and on to Ajmere to join the State line there. Whenever that was done, and the State line completed to Delhi, there would be a large traffic over their railway. If they could raise the rates on the Baroda line to the same amount as those charged on the Great Indian Peninsula Railway they would have a much larger net profit on working, but they were restricted by the sea competition along the coast to Bombay. If they were allowed to extend their main line to Deesa and Ajmere, it was probable they would earn something more than the 5 per cent. guarantee.

Mr. Hartridge, deputy chairman, seconded the resolution for the adoption of the report, which was agreed to unanimously.

The retiring directors, Mr. W. Hartridge and Mr. J. S. Wilde, were unanimously re-elected; and also Mr. R. Fisher, the retiring auditor.

On the motion of Mr. Harris, it was unanimously agreed that a special grant of £21 be made to the auditors as an acknowledgment of their services in connection with the audit of the accounts of the Veerungaum-Wudwan Extension.

On the motion of the Chairman, seconded by Mr. Hartridge, resolutions were unanimously adopted approving the establishment of the provident fund for the benefit of the company's officers and servants in India; of the contribution thereto of £1,200 from the Indian fines fund, and also of a further contribution out of the surplus profits above five per cent., agreeing that all the H shares fully paid up on the 30th inst. be converted into stock, and that all the extension shares fully paid up by the end of June be converted into extension stock.

The proceedings concluded with thanks to the chairman and directors for their attention to the interests of the company.

THE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN FINANCE.

On June 18, after waiting for some time before a quorum could be formed, the committee sat (Mr. Ayrton in the chair, supported by Mr. Grant Duff), and Sir John W. Kaye, K.C.S.I., Secretary to the Political and Secret Department at the India Office, was called as a witness. Sir John Kaye's examination commenced with inquiries into the subsidies and allowances to Indian princes. It appeared that Sir John had come prepared with the means of imparting information in detail upon this subject; but when the questions of the chairman (which are always the inaugural ones to a new witness) were put, Sir John found that he had not, practically, the means at hand of verifying his answers by reference to the proper accounts. Consequently it was agreed that he should have an opportunity of obtaining the requisite papers or documents from the India Office. Sir John W. Kaye, therefore, withdrew; after which a short adjournment took place, and after some delay, General Strachey's examination was renewed. The expenditure on military hospitals and barracks was taken up again. The old story of the building of tumble-down barracks through the supposed nefarious agency of dishonest contractors, and the collusion of dishonest officials was gone into; and Lord Mayo's famous "minute of censure" on the Public Works Department in reference to the useless barracks recalled. But the issue of the many questions put on this subject was that General Strachey, while allowing that mistakes and mismanagement had occurred with regard to military buildings, stated that barracks recently constructed and finished were now in occupation, and had been found perfectly tenable and eligible buildings by the soldiers and their families who occupied them; their health had been good in their new locations and homes, and the sanitary condition of the barracks had proved good.

Mr. Grant Duff next examined the witness, putting some questions regarding the value and importance of the railway system of India generally: its capacities for political, social, and commercial development in conjunction with irrigation works and canals. To these inquiries the witness gave answers to the effect that he believed in a successful future for the railways of India, although, of course, they had drawn heavily upon the Indian Exchequer for their construction, and certain mistakes and failures had occurred. He showed, by reading from a paper of calculations he had made, that the carrying power of the Trunk railways must ultimately prove more and more profitable, as the goods traffic increased. The increase of traffic would be met with reduction of expenses. It was anticipated that goods might be carried at less than the rate of one penny halfpenny per ton per mile, which was the present cost. It was calculated that the cost might be reduced one-half, viz., to three-farthings per ton per mile. When the transport charges get to that moderate rate, considering the immense material resources of India, the railways must pay well. The witness expressed an opinion that, had Lord Mayo lived, some important reforms in the organisation and financial arrangements of public works would have been inaugurated. The witness next proceeded to refer to papers which showed that the land revenue had increased year after year with the growth of railways and canals; and that the latter had growingly developed every natural resource of India, while they had politically and socially done service, having ameliorated the terrible calamity of famine by carrying grain, &c., to the suffering districts. Thus, railways had been made a means of snatching myriads of lives from the maw of famine. In the midst of General Strachey's elaborate explanations—

Mr. Fawcett interposed to ask whether the witness was reading his evidence!—(cries of "order").

The Chairman said no complaint could lie against the witness so simply refreshing his memory from notes.

In answer to questions put by Mr. Grant Duff, the witness said he must confess that he thought the Committee had taken too great an advantage already of his willingness to give evidence; and drawn from him the expression of views and opinions of his own he might not have voluntarily offered. Whenever anything, especially or even ordinarily defective in the financial or engineering systems of India cropped up, hon. members tried to induce him (witness) to cast reproaches on the Government for its failings and shortcomings. But he (witness) believed that the Governments of India had not been amenable to blame, but rather deserved praise for their general policy and action in regard to the railway system.

Mr. Fawcett here moved that strangers withdraw.

On returning to the room we found General Strachey again under examination. He entered into further speculations showing how rail and canal in India must ultimately work for the material, moral, and political benefit of the country, and its vast aggregate of populations.

The witness acknowledged that he was a supporter of Sir Bartle Frere's views as to the establishment of local native councils, and that he was opposed to the permanency of the income-tax.

Towards the conclusion of the evidence General Strachey went into calculations to show that about eighteen millions sterling of public money had been saved at least indirectly by recently improved modes of collecting the revenue, and the careful check kept over the outlay on public works. He also pointed out the amazing increase of imports as a proof of the material prosperity of India, which had been developed by railways, canals, and irrigation works, &c. All this proved that the administrative system of India had, with all its faults, its preponderating virtues. In answer to Mr. Fawcett, General Strachey said he would come prepared at any future day with papers explanatory of the actual imports and exports over a period of ten years. Adjourned.

On Friday General Strachey's examination was continued, and lasted the whole day. Mr. Fawcett instituted a long cross-examination, going seriatim into almost every previous statement made, or opinion expressed, by the witness on the financial arrangements of the Indian Government. We can only revert to leading subjects. Mr. Fawcett reiterated his complaint that immense sums of money (eleven millions for barracks alone) had been spent on public works latterly, and paid for out of revenue instead of by means of loans, which might have relieved the Exchequer from a heavy burthen. General Strachey replied generally that it was matter of opinion how public works should be paid for; but he could not blame the Government for going into the great undertakings of railways and canals for water and irrigation purposes, which must ultimately tend to the development of the immense material resources of India. In reply to questions as to who had originated the Godavery navigation works, the witness repeated his answer, that they were due to the initiation of the Madras Government.

The next topic taken up was the propriety of the repeal of certain Irrigation or Canal Acts for the North-West Provinces, Oudh, and the Punjab. It appeared that these clauses were exceedingly arbitrary, and enforced compulsory labour on the works, besides imposing taxation for them until they were self-supporting. The witness said that the repeal of the compulsory and rate clauses in regard to certain districts was under the consideration of the Government. Another leading subject of complaint was that important accounts should be so inefficiently kept in the Public Works Department as they had been proved to be. The witness admitted there was room for reform, and repeated that he had himself made an effort to correct the clerical defects and shortcomings of the Department, but without success, as he had found that he could not move the Executive to effect the necessary changes in their present imperfect system of accounts. General Strachey moreover reverted to his scheme for the entire reorganisation of the Department, financial, administrative, and executive, and which had met with the support of Lord Mayo.

Miscellaneous.

DARJEELING COMPANY.—At a meeting of the Darjeeling Company a dividend at the rate of 8 per cent., free of income-tax both in India and England, was declared.

BILLS ON INDIA.—Tenders for £600,000 in bills on India were received on Wednesday, the 19th inst., at the Bank of England. The amounts allotted were—to Calcutta, £483,300; to Bombay, £90,000; and Madras, £26,700. The minimum price was fixed, as before, at 1s. 10½d. on all the Presidencies. Tenders on Calcutta and Madras, at 1s. 10½d. will receive about 6 per cent.; above in full. On Bombay, at 1s. 10½d. in full. The average rate on Calcutta is 1s. 10 7/16d.; on Bombay, 1s. 10 6/25d., and on Madras 1s. 10 7/16d.

GENERAL PENNEFATHER'S WILL.—The will of General Sir John Lysaght Pennefather, G.C.B., colonel of the 22nd Foot, Grand Cross of the Legion of Honour, Commander of the Order of St. Maurice and St. Lazarus, late Governor of Chelsea Hospital, where he died on the 9th ult., aged seventy-three, was proved in London on the 7th inst., under £9,000 personalty in England, by his relict, the sole executrix and the universal legatee of his effects. The gallant general executed his will at camp, near Koslica, August 23, 1854, written on a scrap of paper in his own hand; witnessed by F. P. Harding, C.B., then captain in the 22nd Regiment, and J. E. Thackwell, C.B., also captain in the 22nd Regiment.

SCINDE, PUNJAB, AND DELHI RAILWAY.—The report of the Scinde, Punjab, and Delhi Railway Company, to be presented to the meeting on the 28th instant, states that the gross receipts of the line during the half-year ending December last amounted to £215,114, while the working expenses reached £194,180.

THE LATE DR. NORMAN M'LEOD.—The Rev. Dr. Norman M'Leod, of the Barony parish, Glasgow, died suddenly on June 16th. For some time past the doctor had been complaining, but his illness only assumed a more serious form within the last few days, when effusion of the pericardium occurred. Consequently his death, though sudden, was not unexpected by his relatives. Dr. M'Leod was born in 1812, and had just entered his sixtieth year. He was educated at Glasgow and Edinburgh Colleges, and also studied in Germany. His first charge was as minister of Loudon, Ayrshire, to which he was ordained in 1838, and which he left for Dalkeith in 1843. In 1851 he became minister of the Barony parish, in Glasgow, as successor to the late Dr. Black. Dr. M'Leod was well known all over the country. Since the establishment of Good Words, in 1860, he acted as editor. He recently proceeded to India, in the interests of the Scottish Mission, and to report on the progress of the mission in India. He has published a number of works which have been extensively read, especially in Scotland. He was one of her Majesty's chaplains for Scotland, and Dean of the Order of the Thistle.

RAILWAY COMMUNICATION BETWEEN RUSSIA AND INDIA.—The Russian Academy Gazette discusses in a long article the various projects for establishing a railway communication with India. It says that the great fault of all the English projects of this kind is that they are too political, and do not sufficiently provide for commercial interests. The only plans worth mentioning are that from Scutari, by Erzeroum, Tauris, Teheran, Meshed, Kandahar, and Shikarpore, and that from Scutari by Angora, Diarbekir, Mossul, Teheran, Meshed, Kandahar, and Shikarpore. If a bridge were constructed on the Bosphorus, these two lines would establish uninterrupted communications between Europe and India; but the nature of the ground over which the railway would have to be built presents enormous difficulties. Of the Russian projects the writer thinks the best is that of M. Romanoff, who proposes to construct a line from Petrovsk, on the Caspian (which in two years is to be connected with the European railways by a line to Rostoff, on the Don, via Vladikarkay) by Bakou and Teheran to Shikarpore or Peshawur. The length of this line would be 3,480 versts (including 870 on Russian territory), or 1,200 less than the proposed Rawlinson line; it would not require a bridge over the Bosphorus, and the country through which it would pass is level, orderly, and relatively prosperous. The expense would, no doubt, be considerable, but it would not be greater than that of the Pacific Railway in the United States.

THE LATE COL. SYKES, M.P.—Death has just carried off a well-known member of the House of Commons in the person of Col. William Henry Sykes, M.P. for Aberdeen. He was a man of high attainments in more than one branch of science, and his former connection with the Direction of the old East India Company, before the transfer of its powers to the Crown, will be fresh in the memories of all who have been brought into connection with our Eastern empire. The late Colonel Sykes was the son of Mr. Samuel Sykes, a representative of a branch of the Sykeses of Yorkshire, and was born in the year 1790. Having received his education privately, he joined the Bombay Army in 1804, and in the following year served under Lord Lake at Bhurtpore. At the battle of Kirkee, in 1817, he was in command of a regiment of native troops; and we find him again actively employed in the Deccan 1818. In 1824 he was engaged by the Government of Bombay as Statistical Reporter, a position which he held till he finally quitted India in 1831. Two years afterwards he attained the rank of colonel, and in 1840 he was elected to a seat at the Board of Directors of the East India Company. He had already given his services to the public gratuitously as a Royal Commissioner in Lunacy. In March, 1854, he was elected Lord Rector of Marischall College and Aberdeen University. He was subsequently chosen deputy chairman of the East India Company, and served as chairman in 1857-58. He had represented the City of Aberdeen in the advanced Liberal interest since 1857, having been rechosen at each general election since that date. He was a Fellow of the Royal Society and of many other learned societies at home and abroad, and he had held the presidential chairs of the Royal Asiatic Society, of the Statistical Society of London, and of the Society of Arts. In 1856 he received from the citizens of Bombay a medal in recognition of his strong advocacy of a system of education for the natives; and only a year or two since a handsome silver candelabrum was subscribed for and presented to him by the officers of the Indian Army, "in grateful appreciation of his persevering and disinterested advocacy in the House of Commons of the rights and privileges" of that body. Colonel Sykes was the author of numerous works on scientific and literary questions of the day, including "Notes on the Religious, Moral, and Political State of Ancient India," "The Origin and Progress of the Taeping Rebellion in China," "The Organisation and Cost of the English and French Armies and Navies," and of upwards of sixty papers published in the transactions of various learned societies, mainly on the ancient history, antiquities, statistics, geology, natural history, and meteorology of India.

Imperial Parliament.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, MONDAY, June 17.—THE BANK OF BENGAL.—Mr. G. DUFF, in answer to Mr. CRAWFORD, said that, though no full and official account had been received, he was aware that certain purchases both of bills and Government securities had been made by the Bank of Bengal on behalf of the Government of India. For such purchases there had been no sufficient authority; but, under the circumstances, the Government of India had not thought in necessary to cancel the transaction. It had intimated, however, that in future no such transactions should occur without special sanction. What had happened would not interfere with the regular drawings of the Secretary of State for India.

MISSION FROM TALIFOO.—Mr. G. DUFF, replying to Sir S. NORTH-COTE, said a communication had been received from the Government of India with respect to a mission which had been sent from Talifoo, and the proper arrangements were being made.

HOUSE OF LORDS, TUESDAY, June 18.—THE ENGINEERS AND ARTILLERY.—Lord ABINGER again complained of the injustice done to the captains of the late Purchase Corps by their proposed supersession by the first-captains of the Scientific Corps, and moved for a Royal Commission of Inquiry.—Lord LANDSOWNE replied to Lord ABINGER, and gave explanations on behalf of the War Office. The supersession involved in the promotion objected to was only of slight amount and temporary character, and was not to be compared with the wholesale supersession that had hitherto gone on under Purchase. The War Office was bound to offer some remedy for the stagnation and promotion in the Ordnance Corps.—The Duke of CAMBRIDGE said that great difficulties had been admitted on all hands to exist, owing to the slowness of promotion in the Artillery and Engineers. It was the intention of the Secretary of State to bring up promotion in the Line to the level of that in the Scientific Corps.—Lord SANDHURST could not accept the statement that the supersession of officers of the Line was a slight one, and believed that a fair case for inquiry had been made out.—Lord RIFON replied to some points raised by Lord Sandhurst. The Government could not accede to Lord Abinger's motion, because the matter ought not to be taken out of the hands of the Executive, which was responsible to the Army and the country.—Lord DE LA WARRE opposed the motion for an inquiry.—The Duke of RICHMOND said that if the supersession were described as a system of retirement it was a sham, because it did not deal with the whole case. He should vote for an inquiry.—Lord LANDSOWNE disclaimed having drawn any invidious distinction between the officers of the Line and the Scientific Corps.—Their Lordships divided, when Lord Abinger's motion for a Royal Commission was carried by 42 Contents, against 39 Not-Contents.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, TUESDAY, June 18.—THE SHAH OF PERSIA.—Lord ENFIELD, in answer to Mr. EASTWICK, said no official information had been received of the reported intentions of the Shah of Persia to visit this country.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, THURSDAY, June 20.—ENVOY EXTRAORDINARY IN PERSIA.—Lord ENFIELD, replying to Mr. EASTWICK, stated that Mr. Tylour Thompson had been offered the appointment of Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary in Persia, in succession to Mr. Alison, but the Secretary of State had not yet heard whether he would accept it.

PROMOTION OF FIRST CAPTAINS.—Mr. CARDWELL, replying to Sir C. O'LOGHLEN, said the address to her Majesty—carried in the other House by a majority of three—having reference to the promised advancement of the first captains of the Royal Artillery and Royal Engineers to the rank of field officers, was directed against an arrangement for which provision had already been made by this House.—(Hear, hear.) He had not had an opportunity of considering with his colleagues what answer her Majesty ought to be advised to return to that address. Perhaps his right hon. friend would renew the question on Monday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, FRIDAY, June 21.—THE SUEZ CANAL.—Mr. BAILLIE COCHRANE gave notice that on the 24th of June he would ask the Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs whether his attention had been called to the proposed increase of the dues levied by the Suez Canal Company, contrary to the spirit of the concession under which that company was established, and to the interest of the British shipowners; and whether he was aware that the French Government had claimed jurisdiction in all questions which may arise between those who use the Canal and the Suez Company, which claim is entirely opposed to the existing capitulations.

PETITIONS.—The following petitions from Indian officers have been presented during the past week:—By Mr. WETHERED, from the widow of Colonel F. Gottreux, C.B., late of the Madras Army, complaining of losses by the destruction of the bonus system in the Indian Army, and praying for redress; also from the widow of Major F. J. Paterson, with similar prayer. By Mr. M. SMITH, from Major C. Batchelor and Colonel Robert Richards, late East India Company officers, praying for redress of grievances.

Spirit of the Home Journals.

THE LATE COLONEL SYKES.

The Daily News remarks that a familiar and characteristic figure has quietly dropped out of Parliament and this world at once, after fifteen years of laborious public service, in debates and on committees, begun and continued at a time of life when most men, except Prime Ministers and the great dignitaries of the law, are glad to seek an interval of repose between the tumult and the glare that have been left behind, and the silence of the night that cannot be far off. Colonel Sykes had sat in the House of Commons as member for Aberdeen for the last fifteen years, and it was at the ripe age of sixty-seven that he was first returned by the electors of that intelligent city, who never afterwards changed their minds or repented of their choice. They found in their venerable member an apt representative of their own best qualities: energy, perseverance, tenacity, acuteness, ardour, and integrity. The gallant old soldier of John Company's army was not a dazzling intellectual luminary; he was not particularly vivacious or versatile; he was no brilliant speaker; he was not remarkable for rhetoric or repartee. But he was full of various knowledge and experience; eminently patient, painstaking, and enlightened; conscientious and trustworthy in all his words and ways. In his early youth, in the first year of the nineteenth century, he had served with a steady and sustained reputation under illustrious commanders in Indian wars, always respected by his superiors in rank, always regarded with kindness and esteem by his brother officers throughout his modest and meritorious career. Thirty-one years ago he left India for ever, and received the rank of colonel after he had settled down to the study of public affairs and to the pursuits of a civilian at home. The great Company, which seldom erred in the estimate of its servants, and seldom let exemplary character, conduct, and capacity be lost to its councils, twice elected him as a director; and when its rights and privileges of empire were about to be merged in the sovereignty of the Crown, it placed him in the chair, and confided its interests to his discerning judgment and solicitude. The electors of Aberdeen ratified by their votes that signal testimony to the worth of their fellow-countryman, while the University conferred its honours upon the devoted friend to learning and science. To the House of Commons the colonel brought all his natural diligence, his native seriousness, and tenacity of purpose. It would doubtless be too much to say that when he rose to speak (and he rose pretty often, and sometimes at the hour of dinner) he was heard gladly, or listened to with eager attention. But he was heard at least with sufficient respect by all parties, by whatever Ministers might be sitting on the Treasury Bench, and, what is scarcely less important, by the gallery; and if he was not always fully reported, the sense of what he said (and what he said was always sensible) was fitly and intelligently recorded. His views on public questions were his own; he was a voice and not an echo, though latterly the voice was weak and the bodily presence ineffectual; and to the last his mental activity and alertness, and his keen sympathy with all the tendencies and objects of liberal legislation, shone out of the large and sunken eyes, and defied the approaches of infirmity and decay. Upon domestic questions he was a Reformer of the economic school, and was all the more a man of peace that he had seen much of war. In Indian politics, wherever the relations between the rulers and the subject populations were concerned, he was the constant advocate of justice, moderation, and humanity. Perhaps the dominant characteristics of his mind and his career were rigid moral honesty, singleness and simplicity of purpose, and a good-humoured fervour in expounding to a prejudiced or careless audience what he believed to be the inexorable logic of his own convictions. There may be some contemporary legislators more attractively endowed with the gifts and graces of persuasive eloquence, but probably few whose example of independence and fidelity to public duties and public interests will deserve to be more gratefully remembered.

PAY AND ALLOWANCES.—It has been decided by the Government of India that Indian allowances are in no case to be passed to an officer of a British regiment who may be detained in India to hand over an office with its records, &c., for a longer period than six weeks, unless the Governor general in Council shall have previously sanctioned an extension of the period, which will, however, not be allowed unless on the clearly exceptional ground of unavoidable necessity.

GYMNASTICS.—The C. in C. desires to call the attention of officers commanding British regiments to the orders of the Bombay army, G.G.O. No. 496 of 1866, and G.O.C. No. 74 of 1871, and to express a hope that they will avail themselves of the opportunity thus afforded them of maintaining the full complement of qualified instructors, so that the gymnastic instruction of the men may be carried on regularly and uninterruptedly. In view to the more efficiently carrying out gymnastic instruction, the C. in C. is pleased to authorise the appointment of an officer of British cavalry, artillery, or infantry, to superintend the gymnasium, whenever such is established and in working order. As the services thus rendered will be unremunerated, H.E. sanctions the officer so employed being exempted from the performance of garrison and regimental duties, whenever his services can be conveniently spared. The names of officers willing and qualified to hold the above appointments will be submitted through the director of gymnastics for the approval of the C. in C. Horse Guards' G.O. No. 26, gymnasia, dated March 1, is republished for general information and guidance:—I. Medical officers in charge of regiments that have been quartered long enough at any station possessing a gymnasium to enable the men to undergo a training will specially report on the effects, if noticeable, of such training on the muscular development and health of the men on their leaving the station, and as to the general influence of gymnastics in promoting a vigorous constitution. In furtherance of this duty they will frequently visit the gymnasium, and witness the measurements of the recruits on entering the course, and also the measurements on its termination. II. The principal medical officer will refer to the subject in his annual sanitary reports, giving the substance of the information furnished to him by regimental medical officers with any remarks thereon that he may deem necessary concerning the utility of gymnasia.

THE HISTORY OF THE BRITISH EMPIRE IN INDIA.

FROM THE
APPOINTMENT OF LORD HARDINGE
TO THE
COMPANY.

BY
LIONEL JAMES TROTTER,

Late of the 2nd Bengal Fusiliers.

The first volume of this History embraces the period from Lord Hardinge's appointment in 1814 to the retirement of the Marquis of Dalhousie in 1858.

The second volume commences with the arrival of Lord Canning in India in 1856, and closes with his lordship's death in 1862. This being the most eventful period in the annals of the East India Company, including the Mutiny, great pains have been taken in its narration.

"Captain Trotter has done good service in providing the public with a sequel to a standard work. . . . And in every way his performance is worthy to take rank with that of his predecessor. . . . The thoroughly satisfactory manner in which the task has been performed is greatly to the author's credit. . . . We take our leave of the work, congratulating its author upon having produced an addition to the 'History of India' at once permanent in purpose and popular in execution; acceptable in every way to the wants of the public, and especially adapted for the enlightenment of young members of the local service, to whom the modern annals of the country which they help to administer are of far more importance than the history of remote periods having little or no relation to the present day."—Standard.

"Both the plan and execution of the work are deserving of high praise. Full of interest and animation, and narrates with clearness and brevity all that took place during the period of which it treats. . . . The second volume of Mr. Trotter's history possesses the same merits by which the first was distinguished. It is written with great animation, and often with considerable graphic power. It tells its story with perspicuity and without needless or tiresome digressions. It avoids as far as possible that controversial vein into which Indian politicians and historians are alike prone to fall, and it is as impartial as any work is likely to be which deals with times so near our own. . . . The narrative of the spirit-stirring events of the mutiny will of course have the greatest attraction for most readers, and it is in truth the best, as it is the principal part of the present volume. . . . It appears to us that Mr. Trotter has been eminently successful in his treatment of a very exciting and interesting period of recent history."—London Review.

"The volume is full of interesting matter, comprising every event of importance during the exciting period of the rebellion, told in a concise, straightforward, and impartial manner, unincumbered by those copious extracts from documentary evidence which often serve no other purpose than increasing the bulk without adding to the usefulness of a work of this description."—Observer.

"Captain Trotter's reflections are few. . . . He has his own views, though he does not force them upon us in detail. . . . All this proves him to be far above the narrowness of the average Anglo-Indian. He speaks out boldly, too, in defence of Lord Gough. . . . A word as to our author's descriptive powers; they are such as his lighter writings would lead us to expect. . . . Whatever he has to tell Captain Trotter tells it in an animated and picturesque style. The night on the field at Ferozeshuhur . . . is admirably painted; so is the grand success of Goojrat. The disarming of the veterans of the Khalsa . . . is a striking scene. Captain Trotter's book opens up many other interesting questions; it is full of notices of social changes; it points out the specially unfortunate way in which the annexation of Oudh was managed."—Fortnightly Review.

"Here we have before us the first volume of an eminently readable history. . . . The arrangement of the matter, the style, and, above all, the spirit which pervades his pages, are worthy of great commendation. Mr. Trotter is singularly free from the faults of a partisan writer. . . . The volume concludes with a masterly criticism on Lord Dalhousie's character and services."—Calcutta Englishman.

"We cannot say that he has dealt unjustly by Lord Canning's memory. . . . A well-considered volume, in which the heartiest acknowledgments are paid to Lord Canning for his temperate wisdom at a time when there was no man more abused than he. . . . He writes thoughtfully, yet with a soldier's sense of the stir of a brisk military narrative. His history of this great struggle is full and impartial. . . . We need not follow him through his vigorous rehearsal of the well-known incidents. It forms a very lucid history, the several parts being well planned and well grouped, and no important point being omitted or misrepresented."—Examiner.

The work will contain about 450 Photographs on mounts, in eight volumes, super-royal 4to., and it will be issued at £2. 5s. per volume. The First and Second Volumes are still on hand.

From the TIMES.

"We gather from the Preface that this work grew to its present handsome dimensions from a very modest commencement. It originated in the wish of Lord and Lady Canning to take home a private collection of photographs which might serve to recall the scenes and incidents of their Indian life, but as it advanced its importance began to be perceived, and Government, with a most judicious expenditure of public money, took it in hand. Very few of the photographs are unaccompanied by descriptions, often copious and graphic, of the subjects they illustrate, and the result is a singularly varied panorama of human life and character exhibited under almost every conceivable aspect. Although these four volumes deal with only a portion of the empire, there is scarcely a type of character, from the loftiest to the most debased, that is not to be found in them, and nowhere else, perhaps, in the world are peculiarities of character so strongly marked and sharply defined as in India. We might exhaust far more space than we can afford without giving the reader at all an adequate idea of the strange varieties of character to which these volumes introduce him."

Summary and Review.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail, are—from Bombay, June 7; Agra and Madras, June 5; Calcutta, June 4.

THE leading topic of the week appears to be the tremendous heat, which at Allahabad reached 115 deg. in the shade. At Hyderabad in the Dakhan it was even hotter on a certain afternoon, when one officer, four men, and twelve children were struck down in the 16th Lancers alone. In Calcutta also the heat has tended to make business "dull." About Poonah the wells were dried up, cattle dying of thirst, and human beings glad to go several miles for a jar of water. In Bombay people were looking out anxiously for the monsoon, which was slowly creeping up the coast. Rain had already fallen at Vingorla and Cannanore, and was imminent at Cochín.

THE dengue fever was still the predominant nuisance throughout India. One person attacked with it found immense relief from the attendant pains by having his joints well rubbed with pure rum. Some fresh cases of cholera had occurred at Mhow among the women and children of the 49th Foot. The same disease had also made its appearance at Sealkote. Among the tea-gardens of the Darjeeling Terai on the other hand the cholera had nearly spent itself, and the coolies were going back to their work. Fever still raged in Bardwán.

IN Bengal the Indigo prospects are generally encouraging, except in some parts of Bhagalpore and Rajmahal. The Ganjam district of Madras was still suffering from famine as well as sickness, and many of the labouring classes were emigrating elsewhere in search of work.

EVERY one who could get away from the plains had started off for the various hill-stations where parboiled and baked up Britons lay in fresh stores of vital strength. Lord Northbrook and his Departments were all safe at Simla, where Mr. Hobhouse arrived and took the oaths as Law Member of Council on the 27th May. On the 29th the Viceroy held a levee at Peterhoff, which was well attended. Stories of his activity, mental and bodily, already begin to crop up. In the Treasury Account Department there is fear and quaking, because the Viceroy is said to have fixed his eye, like Coleridge's Ancient Mariner, upon the drones. Another rumour credits him with a design to overhaul the finances and do Sir R. Temple's work himself. His bodily energy is said to have shown itself in the pace at which he rode down hill on his journey to Simla. His staff were not only astonished, but scattered, by such a specimen of furious horsemanship as would have satisfied Lord Mayo himself.

SIR PHILIP WODEHOUSE, the new Governor of Bombay, had at first resolved, it seems, to work on through the hot weather at Bombay, but the increasing heat cooled down his virtuous zeal, and he also was preparing to take himself off on the 8th June to the usual summer retreat at Ganesh Kind.

LORD HOBART was still at Madras, gaining his first experiences of life and work in India. His departure however for Ootacamund was fixed for the 15th June. His first public appearance was at a meeting of the Madrassa-i-Azam, the only school in the Presidency maintained by Government for the education of Mohammedans only. In speaking on this occasion, his Lordship told his hearers that he had lived long among Mussulmans and found cause to admire their character. He expressed his pleasure at finding the Mohammedans of Madras growing more alive to the need of education, and remarked that one of their number, a former pupil of the Madrassa, had at length taken the B.A. degree.

THE Court of Enquiry into the disasters caused by the late cyclone has held three sittings already. Among the witnesses hitherto examined is Mr. Pogson, the Government Astronomer, who, up to 10 P.M. on the night of the 30th April, had "observed nothing to indicate an approaching cyclone." Had he then been asked for his opinion, he could "have said that dangerous weather was probable," but not a cyclone. At noon on the 1st May he began to suspect the truth, and by midnight the cyclone was "fully developed," reaching its height at eight the next morning.

THE removal of nuisances seems to be more easily managed at Madras than among ourselves. One of the ships stranded in the late cyclone was full of rice, which fermented under the action of the seawater and gave out a fearful and even murderous stench. One of the coolies employed in clearing out the hold died from the noxious gases, others fainted, and the rest ran away. At last Mr. Clarke, the Police Magistrate, having duly warned the owner of his intention if the ship was not cleared out by a certain time, proceeded to fulfil his threat, and in spite of lawyers letters, and magisterial orders the ship was blown to pieces and the nuisance abolished. We hope that Mr. Clarke will not suffer for his boldness.

COLONEL F. GRAHAM and Mr. D. Macnabb have been appointed Commissioners in the Punjab. Mr. E. C. Bayley's promotion to the Supreme Council gives the post of Home Secretary, we are told, to Mr. Monteath, whom Mr. F. Hogg succeeds as Postmaster-General.

THE latest news from Persia, as received in Bombay, tells of falling prices and improved prospects for the next harvest along the shores of the Persian Gulf. From places further inland however the reports are still very saddening, especially from the neighbourhood of Teheran and Ispahan, where famine and sickness were raging almost as fiercely as ever.

ACCORDING to the Pioneer a camp of exercise will most likely be held at Campbellpore in the Punjab during the next cold season. The project has not yet been finally sanctioned, but as the estimated cost is said to be very small, it is hardly probable that the expected sanction will be withheld.

A CALCUTTA telegram of June 29 announces very stormy weather in that neighbourhood, especially off Saugor Island.

THE writer of a letter in the Aligurh Institute Gazette gives some interesting details concerning the Kuka sect. It appears that they are called Kukas on account of their shouting Koh, Koh! during their devotions. They are chiefly recruited from the working classes, such as carpenters, bricklayers, blacksmiths, and the like, and are popularly supposed to number two or three hundred thousand. They have no sympathy with other sects, not even with the Sikhs. Among themselves they are sociable, hospitable, and affectionate. Their rites and ceremonies are of the simplest kind. At childbirth, marriage, and death they dispense equally with the interference of the family priest. In the presence of a few brethren the hand of the bride is given into that of the bridegroom, and the ceremony is clinched with such presents of clothes and brazen pots as the bride's father may afford. The Kukas have no particular way of disposing of their dead, but everyone according to his fancy burns or buries the body, or, like the Parsees, exposes it in the open air. The recent outbreak is ascribed to a few ruffians among their number; the great bulk of them having never heard beforehand of the plot, nor since shown any feeling but one of hatred for its authors.

If railway carriages even in England are apt to get disagreeably heated in the course of a long summer day, we may imagine the scorching condition of such carriages in India after a few hours exposure to the sun and hot winds. It would appear from the Lucknow paper that the Oudh and Rohilkund Company dispense with carriage-sheds altogether, thus giving their passengers the full enjoyment of hot-weather travelling. "The carriages are during the hot season so impregnated with caloric, that not only are the inmates roasted, baked, and boiled, all three by turns, but it is only by a long spell of cold weather that they become tolerably endurable."

THE transfer of Mr. Gore Ouseley, Commissioner of Lucknow, to Umballa, in the room of Mr. Forsyth, seems to have awakened a wide feeling of regret among the natives of Oudh, who had learned to appreciate his services as an impartial and painstaking judge. At a meeting of the British Indian Association of Oudh, the Vice-President, Rajah Amir Hasan Khan, went so far in his praise as to declare that "suits always returned from his court happy and contented." The suits of Oudh must be more than mortal, if that is anything but Eastern hyperbole. We suppose he meant to say that one-half of them went home happy and contented, while the other half were more or less soothed with an instinctive sense of his desire to act justly. The same speaker, with more of literal truth, touched upon Mr. Ouseley's modesty, kindliness, and simple manners, declaring that "race prejudice or pride of office had no influence whatever over him in his dealings with the subject race."

We have received a short pamphlet from Madras touching the appointment of Mr. H. J. Tarrant to act as Clerk of the Crown in that city during the absence of Mr. Mayne. From the documents here offered us, without any editorial comment, we gather that something very like a job has been carried through by the Chief Justice of Madras at the expense and greatly to the amazement of the Madras Bar. Mr. H. J. Tarrant, who had for some time been practising at the Bar of the North-Western Provinces, and who still holds the post of Reporter to the High Court in those provinces, was admitted as a barrister into the High Court of Madras on the 3rd April last, and three weeks afterwards hoisted over the heads of all his brethren into the place above-named. He appears to have been utterly unknown to the public of Madras, whither he had come on leave to stay with his friend the Chief Justice. As early as the 11th April the Madras barristers held a meeting to protest against the slur which Sir Walter Morgan was already about to cast on their body by his preference of a mere outsider, whom he knew, to a number of gentlemen in his own Court who must have been at least as competent for the post in question. In the memorial they forwarded to Mr. Arbuthnot, they remind him that two members of their Bar have already discharged with credit the duties of Clerk and Prosecutor to the Crown, while others have held offices of equal importance and responsibility. Either therefore, as they point out, an unmerited slur has been cast upon their body, or else Sir W. Morgan is guilty of a gross job. For our part we should say that both consequences are involved in the same act. The memorial was signed by every practising member of the Bar except one, who was then away at Raichor. In spite of this plain protest, the appointment was made by the Chief Justice and confirmed by Mr. Arbuthnot, then Acting Governor of Madras. We may add that on this question the whole of the English press in Madras agrees in condemning the conduct of Sir W. Morgan, whose friend from the North-West has not even the advantage of special experience in the duties of his new post.

ACCORDING to the Report of Mr. Parkes, Consulting Engineer to the India Office, on the Harbour Works of Kurrachee, the natural scour at the harbour mouth is working favourably though slowly, each year since 1866 showing an increase in the water space, and a gain of a foot in the general depth. The process of dredging has led the tidal currents in the right direction, and so paved the way for further improvements. The new channel is now available for ships of one or two feet greater draught than the old one could show at the best of times. The line of deepest water is becoming more defined. The scour tends more and more to concentrate itself on the line of the future channel which, with the help of dredging, it may in due time be trusted to keep clear. Mr. Parkes however would forestall this slower process by employing "the whole dredging power available to excavate such a channel in the shortest possible time." For that end an outlay of £14,000 spread over eleven months or two fair seasons would, he thinks, suffice. That experiments on a smaller scale have hitherto been partial failures seems to him no good reason for not trying the experiment on a larger scale. Its prompt execution would moreover settle the question involved in the progress of the works at the East Pier and the removal of Deep Water Point. As for the rocks and boulders in the dredged channel, Mr. Parkes regards the cost of their removal as a comparative trifle. With regard to Deep Water Point the steam dredger first employed last year has already with the help of the natural scour removed a great deal of the abrupt projection at that point; but the ledge of rock thus laid bare in one place will need removing, if that can be done at no great cost. For the present however Mr. Parkes would leave this question on one side pending the acquisition of sounder data than he now possesses.

THE diversion of the Chinna Creek waters makes good progress. Lighters now ply at almost any time of the tide between the ships and the landing and shipping place at the native jetty. Although some of the sand washed out from this channel has accumulated in the upper part of the Keamaree anchorage, any loss on that side will be more than compensated by gain elsewhere, if care be taken to prevent the scour from wasting itself over the mud flats that lie uncovered at low water. With regard to the Manora breakwater Mr. Parkes is thoroughly satisfied with the way it has stood the force of a very heavy and continuous sea for three or four months of the last monsoon. Some of the blocks displaced by the action of the sea on the sandy bottom have been reset, but beyond a slight subsidence of the whole structure little damage has been done. In short the breakwater "is likely to prove a success as a mere work of construction," and if a sufficient number of hands are kept at work in the manner suggested by Mr. Parkes, "there is no reason why 300 feet of breakwater should not be built in each month of the working season." According to his latest calculations the breakwater will not cost more than £93,442, or about £25,000 below the estimates accepted by the Bombay Government in 1864; and the work might be doubled in length for a further outlay of not more than £60,000.

THE question put by Sir C. Wingfield on Monday last touching the claims of Indian Engineer and Artillery Officers to bonus compensation, was answered by Mr. Cardwell in a way which virtually acknowledged while it seemed to deny the justice of these claims. Of course he tried to show that purchase in the scientific corps was something quite different from the system which lately prevailed in the new Line Regiments, and that no provision was made for the former in last year's Army Act, because they were free to avail themselves of the benefit held out by Lord Cranborne's Despatch—the very limbo from which Sir C. Wingfield has rescued the officers of the new Line Regiments. But he could not help admitting that "a question of some difficulty," about which his own department was still corresponding with the India Office, had been raised by the opinion of the Crown lawyers touching the illegality of the purchase system in any part of the Army under the new Act. What are the particular points now under discussion, we are not in a position to say; but remembering how Clause IV. of Mr. Cardwell's Act was altered last year for the special behoof of the new Line Regiments, who were thus placed on an equal footing with the purchase regiments in the matter of compensation, we venture to foresee a like concession ere long to the demands of the Indian Artillery and Engineers. In that case a new weapon of attack will have been forged for their old brother officers in the Company's service, who have so long been asking compensation for the bonuses lost to them by the compulsory transfer of their services to the Crown. If another set of Indian Officers is brought under the working of Clause IV., how much longer will the remainder be put off with the cold comforts of Lord Cranborne's Despatch, which two of the Indian Governments have absolutely condemned as unfair and illusory?

WE understand that the Army Furlough Rules of 1868 are once more undergoing revision, after all the care bestowed on the framing of them. None of the proposed amendments has yet, we believe, been finally accepted, unless it be true that the future retention of staff appointments after more than two years' absence has already found its place in the new rules.

THE noble and military persons who begrudge the officers of Engineers and Artillery their share of the promotion hitherto reserved for officers of the purchase army have had their answer from the Government. Her Majesty declines to interfere, and Mr. Cardwell means to carry out his scheme for placing the Scientific Corps on an equal footing in respect of promotion with the Regiments of the Line. Sir Percy Herbert fought hard for a committee of enquiry into a subject which has been thoroughly sat upon time after time; but his arguments were easily demolished by Mr. Osborne, who laughed at the notion of Second-Captains aged forty being accused of supersession, and could not understand how any officer of the Line could be jealous of brother-officers who were only regaining some of the ground they had lost forty years ago. As for Lord Sandhurst's absurd disparagement of the Captain of a field-battery because he did not select the position for his guns, Mr. Osborne asked whether a colonel of infantry selected the position for his regiment. On this point the writer of a letter in the Broad Arrow tells a good story of a general officer bidding the commander of a battery during the Mutiny to fire case shot at eight hundred yards!

WE observe that a ballot of shareholders in the East India Company is to take place on the 24th July, at 11, Pancras-lane, for the purpose of choosing a new director in the room of the late Colonel Sykes. Among the candidates for that office we are glad to notice the name of Sir George Pollock, who has evidently no idea of striking work in the evening of his life so long as health and strength remain to him.

SUBORDINATE EXECUTIVE SERVICE.—It is notified that those officers who, after passing the preliminary examinations for admission into the subordinate executive service held in February, 1872, have received appointments in that service, are exempted from the departmental examination in the vernacular by the lower standard. They will, however, be required to pass in law by that standard. Such officers need not present themselves for examination at the next half-yearly examination (to be held in June); but it will be obligatory upon them to attend the subsequent examinations.

SHOULD INDIA SEND MEMBERS TO THE HOUSE OF COMMONS?

THE last number of the East India Association's "Journal" contains the two suggestive papers lately read before the society by Mr. Prichard and Dr. Hyde Clarke. The former, to which alone we will now refer, embodies some able arguments in favour of admitting a certain number of Members for India to seats in the House of Commons. Mr. Prichard claims for India the right of being represented in the English Parliament, because the Commons already in fact grant supplies for the government of that dependency, because Indian legislation is controlled by a minister responsible to Parliament, and because every part of the Empire whose government is administered by Parliament has a right to be represented therein. Another argument put forward by a subsequent speaker turned upon the fact that French India is actually represented at this moment in the Parliament of Versailles, and that Goa sends representatives to the Portuguese Assembly. To our minds the only one of these arguments that has any practical bearing on Mr. Prichard's thesis is the last, and that is put out of court by the vast difference in size between Goa or Pondicherry and British India. A sufficient number of members to represent two hundred millions of people would altogether swamp the House of Commons, while the presence of only half-a-dozen or a dozen representatives of India would be an utter sham. How could six or twelve such members affect the policy of a House composed of six hundred and sixty? That India is not fairly represented in the British Parliament, we readily allow, but Mr. Prichard's plan seems to us ill adapted to mend the present state of things. Our House of Commons practically deals with the affairs of the Three Kingdoms, which are close to each other, are peopled by the same or kindred races, and contribute in pretty equal proportions to the common revenues. It has plenty of home business moreover on its hands, and small time or interest to spare for the discussion even of the few Indian questions that come before it. In such an assembly a few members for India would be as the voice of one crying in the wilderness, and many members the people of England would never tolerate in a House composed as theirs now is. There is no sort of analogy that we can see between India and the British Islands in respect of their relations to the Home Parliament, and any attempt to prove such analogy is only to our thinking waste of time. Whatever India may pay directly or indirectly for England's benefit, she certainly pays under very different conditions from those of Ireland or Scotland. Even as it is, there are a certain number of old Indians and mouthpieces of Indian interests, who do indirectly represent India in the House of Commons, and we should be glad to see there more men of the stamp of Mr. Eastwick, Sir C. Wingfield, and the late Colonel Sykes, and more too of the "interloping" element in Anglo-Indian life. It may also be worth considering whether a proportion of the Indian Council might not be allowed to sit in the Commons, and there serve along with a few independent members as a standing-committee on Indian affairs. Meanwhile however the friends of India would be doing better service by fixing their attention to the work of Indian representation in India, by some such methods as the local and provincial councils of which we have lately heard so much. If our House of Lords could suddenly be transformed into a kind of American Senate, a great Federal Council for the whole British Empire, a certain number of representatives for India would at once take their places of right in such a body, on something like equal terms with the other components of the Empire. But that, we fear, must still be the dream of a rather distant future.

[COMMUNICATED.]

THE financial statement made by Sir Richard Temple in the Council at Calcutta on the 11th April demands more than passing notice, and must have been—as, probably, Sir Richard intended it to be—incomprehensible to those who listened to it. It is only by careful examination of it, in the quiet of one's study, that one can extract, a little by little, the actual state of the Indian finances; and we are not surprised that Mr. Grant Duff declines to commit himself as to the time when he will reproduce it in the House of Commons. It will require all his ingenuity to make it intelligible to the few who, fortunately for India, consider that she has more than ordinary claim to watchful care of her interests.

But where shall we begin? There is not a subject of which it treats, scarcely a figure it contains, that does not invite comment, and our space, alas! will not permit us to deal with more than one or two points of pressing importance. The extraordinary cash balances; the continued huge military expenditure; the lavish waste of money on education—lavish because the results are unsatisfactory—the augmentation of the municipal and other local taxes; the continuance of the income-tax; the heavy Home charges; the uncontrolled power of the Secretary of State to borrow money, all these and more may well occupy our attention, and the attention of all those who, regardless of the future, would protect India from the fate that the reckless policy of her present guardians is preparing for her.

If we look to the expenditure, we are amazed at its magnitude and rapid increase. Since 1857 the income has increased by sixteen millions sterling, but has been insufficient to meet the expenditure. Trade may prosper, old taxes may be raised and new ones imposed, rich harvests may pour rents into the Treasury; what matter, if expenditure follows and outstrips the income in a manner no one outside the financial office can understand? Estimates for work are always exceeded by the actual outlay, stores always cost more than they should, recruiting charges increase with every year, and the only thing that can be depended upon is that the expenditure will always exceed the income.

It is time that serious attention be given to the country that is forcing itself into notice. The India of to-day is not the India of a past generation, and the events of to-day are the seed which will yield fruit in the future for good or evil.

The friends of India will do well to watch somewhat more closely than they have done the phases through which she is passing. And, first, let them pause a moment to examine the taxation imposed upon her, which is increasing year after year at a rate that might stagger the most indifferent. How do they like the following figures? Between 1856 and 1868 the income increased by fifteen millions, and of this sum £7,301,620 were "due to sources on which there had been increased or new taxation." We state this on the authority of the present Secretary of State for India. This sum of seven millions odd comes under the heading of Imperial taxes, and is quite exclusive of the local taxes, which have reached a figure so high that we almost wonder at the facility with which it is collected.

It will become evident, from the figures given, that the imperial taxes have increased at the rate of seven hundred thousand pounds sterling per annum; and we add that the local taxes have increased with even more speed. In 1862-63 the municipal funds could only contribute towards the maintenance of the police in towns, £48,664; but in 1868-69 those funds were so raised from increased local taxation that they were enabled to contribute £241,252, or more than 400 per cent. within the short period of six years. At the present moment they contribute a little over £300,000. As there seems to be no limit to the Imperial demand, there can, of course, be no limit to the taxation. Sir Richard Temple, when making his last financial statement, informed us that "in addition to the previously existing local funds, fresh provincial taxation had been imposed in the various provinces of India probably amounting in the aggregate to £750,000. Don't forget the sum, and don't forget that it is exclusive of the Income and other Imperial taxes. If Imperial taxes are augmented by £700,000, and local taxes by £750,000 per annum, what will be the total in ten years? This is a very plain question, and may be easily answered. When it has been, we ask our readers to pause and mark the total, then add it to the present annual income of fifty-four or fifty-five millions Imperial and local, and see what is in store for the Indian tax-payer, if the most systematic and determined opposition be not commenced upon now, to the dangerous policy that is being pursued. But it is our duty to do more than oppose further taxation, we must oppose the extravagance that makes it a necessity. The Duke of Argyll once told the House of Lords that he confessed his inability to account for a million sterling charged to the military expenditure. When such things occur, can any one be surprised at the unsatisfactory state of the Indian finances?

On one occasion Lord Halifax told the House of Lords that Lord Dalhousie once raised a loan of two millions, professedly for public works, but, somehow or other, the money was entirely spent in the ordinary expenditure of India—

Pop goes the Weasel.

What is to be expected from such a state of things? If a million every now and again disappears, nobody knows how; if moneys borrowed for one purpose may be squandered on another; if expenditure is always permitted to exceed income; if without loans expenditure cannot be met; if taxation be increased year after year; and if no limit be put to the power of those who may involve the country beyond redemption, it needs no prophetic vision to foretell the result; and it is with the view to avoid that result that we point to the dangers that threaten India and her people.

If we turn to the Home Government, we see nothing there to excite our admiration. Mr. E. Denison not very long ago, while commenting on the Indian financial statement by the Under-Secretary of State, told the members present that "the expenditure through the Home Government had increased from three millions to sixteen millions, or including the railway contributions to twenty millions." The Office also insisted on keeping at the end of each year a balance of three millions in hand. At the very time Sir Richard Temple was making his financial statement in Calcutta, and was urging special reasons for the imposition of the income-tax, there was this balance here to the credit of the Indian Government." Not one of these statements was contradicted then or subsequently. Mr. Denison said more. He declared that "the India Office systematically refused to give reasons" for the expenditure of the immense sum which it annually dealt with.

India is in no better condition now. None of the evils complained of two years back has been removed. The same reckless expenditure is pursued. During the past year the Secretary of State borrowed more than three millions for public works, of which the people of India knew nothing until long after the liability had been contracted. Can we be sure that the money will be used for the purpose stated, after what Lord Halifax has told us of how a similar loan was appropriated?

We quote from an authentic source the following facts, which may be used with effect when the Indian Financial statement shall be made in Parliament:—

During the past twelve years the salt tax has been raised 100 per cent. in Madras, 81 per cent. in Bombay, and 50 per cent. in other parts of India; the duty on sugar has been enhanced 100 per cent., the excise on spirits 100 per cent., the stamp tax 400 per cent.; Customs' duties have been increased several times, heavy Court fees and a succession tax of 2 per cent. have been recently imposed; a local land cess of 6½ per cent., village service cess at the same high rate, rural towns cess, taxes on trades and callings, house tax, tolls, and a considerable variety of municipal and local rates and taxes, amounting in the aggregate to an extremely large and oppressive sum, have been levied in different parts of the country.

Of the stamp-tax it may not be amiss to note that, in 1859, it realised £622,165, and in 1870 £2,441,508; and of the salt-tax, that it amounts on an average to one thousand per cent. on the cost of production. Facts are stubborn things, and it is on facts such as we have recorded, and which glare in their enormity, that we rely to bring about a thorough change in the administration of India. The change cannot come too soon. The British Parliament would do well to bear in mind that of the funded debt of India all but about 9 per cent. is due to Englishmen, and that the native stake in the Guaranteed Railway Stock, amounting to about ninety millions, does not exceed a million. Even Manchester might learn something from these facts.

THE BONUS QUESTION.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—In consequence of the lamented death of Col. Sykes, M.P., who has so long and ably upheld our Bonus claims, and on the recommendation of our kind supporters in the House of Commons, the introduction of our case has necessarily been postponed till the commencement of next session. I am in a position to state that our cause is steadily gaining ground in the House, but the hands of M.P.s must be strengthened by the hearty co-operation of the officers whose interests they have undertaken, and I would therefore impress upon all sufferers who have not already petitioned the necessity of doing so without delay. Forms of the petition issued by the Bonus Committee may be obtained on application from Messrs. Grindlay and Co., 55, Parliament-street, London, or from their respective agencies in the three Indian Presidencies, on the payment of a small subscription.

Allow me to take this opportunity of informing all the officers, both in India and England, who have intrusted petitions to the care of the Bonus Committee (made out agreeably to the form supplied by them) that they have been duly presented. The Bonus Committee will continue to meet as usual at 1 P.M. on Tuesdays, at 55, Parliament-street, where any further information may be obtained.—I am, Sir, yours obediently,

J. G. PHILLIPS, Lieut.-Colonel, President

55, Parliament-street.

Bonus Committee.

RUSSIAN ENTERPRISE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—In my last I sought to impress upon your readers the inestimable value of railways in India. Not only do they prevent famines; not only do they facilitate emigration from overpopulated districts, and immigration into underpopulated districts; not only have they effectually checked the commission of the crime of seizing the carriage of the country at the time when it is most wanted for commercial and agricultural purposes; but they enable England, in spite of all her shortcomings, to protect 200 millions of souls consigned to her charge by the Almighty.

In arguing on the duty of the English Government to construct a railway from Mooltan to Attock, it is necessary to calculate what is likely to be the power of Russia in Asia, as soon as she has succeeded in leading back into its old channel the fertilising waters of the Oxus.

It would be an interesting subject of discussion to examine how the course of the Oxus has in past ages influenced the fate of the world; how, as long as its waters have flowed into the Caspian, the irruption of northern hordes into South-Western Asia has been facilitated; the study of this is equally interesting to the student of history, and to the philosopher who investigates the wonders of physical geography.

What Russia is seeking is water-communication from the heart of European Russia to Afghanistan. The Oxus will become a Russian river as soon as it shall have received on its waters a fleet from Nijni Novgorod. Khiva, Bokhara and Balkh must then become dependent on the Czar, and the Chiefs of Afghanistan will not dare to dispute his mandates; he will be able to choose his own route to the Indus.

Ought not every Englishman to feel interested in hurrying forward the construction of a railroad from Kurrachee to Attock? When opened we shall be able to concentrate all our strength for the battle which may decide whether the Slavonic and Mongol races under a Suwarow or a Tamerlane are to overrun the civilised world.

Possessed of India the conquest of China would soon follow; and with the treasures drawn from these two rich countries, and with millions of recruits from Turkistan and Mongolia, Persia would be speedily annexed, and the Turkish Empire crushed more easily than it formerly was by Tamerlane. From his new capital near Balkh the conquering Emperor could, after cajoling the Magyars and Croats, and rewarding the Greeks, offer protection to the Carbonari of Italy, the Radicals of Spain, the Communists of France, and the infidels of the Low Countries; and on the banks of the Danube might dictate to a disunited Germany the terms of peace. The United States of America might be tempted to make a treaty with the conqueror, by which the recognition of the Monroe doctrine could be secured.—Your obedient servant,

THE ARMY FURLOUGH RULES.

The Englishman comments on a serious injustice in connection with the Indian army furlough rules, which contrasts strangely with the growing liberality evinced in the late changes in the system. Under the rules of 1796, officers were entitled to three years' furlough on private affairs after ten years' service. This period was not allowed to count as service for pension; but an officer might from time to time take sick leave in India, Australia, or Cape Colony, on Indian pay and allowances, which should count as service. In 1854 the Staff Corps rules were issued, under which officers could take two years' furlough on private affairs after ten years' service, and a further period of two years after other ten years' service, both periods counting as pension. Under these rules, which were compulsory for officers entering the Staff Corps, sick leave was no longer to count as service. In 1868 an entirely new set of rules were issued under which officers might take two years' furlough after their first eight years' service, on 50 per cent. of Indian pay and allowances, or, if without appointment, on a minimum allowance of £250, and a year's furlough after every succeeding six years of service, to count as service in the same proportion as under the Staff Corps rules, with the limitation that only eight years' furlough should be taken during the entire period of service. There are officers in India who, after taking furlough under the old rules of 1796, were brought compulsorily under the Staff Corps rules, and who are now debarred, on the one hand, from counting their furlough as pension, and, on the other, from the six years' privilege. We could imagine nothing more opposed to the spirit of the late changes than these disabilities. When the authorities determined to allow furlough to count as service for pension, it is scarcely conceivable that the grounds on which they acted were applicable only to men taking furlough after the promulgation of the rules of 1868. If it is a just and proper thing that furlough should count as service, it is surely as just and proper for officers who happened to have taken their furlough under the old rules as to any others, and they should have the benefit of the discovery. So we think the object of allowing more frequently recurring periods of furlough, viz., that of enabling officers to take advantage of our improved communications, and, by visiting Europe at shorter intervals, keep themselves au courant with the knowledge of the day, is one that is aplicable to all officers alike. It is true that under the new rules an officer cannot take his fourth year of furlough till after twenty years of service, and that consequently, if he has taken three years' furlough at the end of ten of service under the old rules, he suffers nothing as regards the maturation of his claim to a fourth year's furlough by having to wait ten years before he takes it. But, on the other hand, there is a hardship in having to wait ten years at all, while others can get leave at intervals of six, and as the total amount of furlough allowed is limited, it is evident that no disadvantage could arise to the State from allowing another year of the amount in such a case to be taken after the expiration of six years from the last furlough. At all events, the privilege would be an insignificant one compared with the disadvantage under which an officer, situated as we have described, lies in being unable to count his former furlough as service.

MR. CAMPBELL AND HIS NATIVE SUBORDINATES.

The Englishman holds that the low physical type of the Bengali is in part the result of the unfavourable conditions under which he lives. So long as the vital energies of a people are kept at the lowest ebb by chronic epidemics, and so long as the entire population is subject at recurring intervals to the exhausting drain of famine, it is a hopeless task to attempt to rear a healthy generation of men. But of late years much has been done to remove these ancient scourges of Bengal. We have not yet learned how to stamp out fever in Bardhaman, but this can at least be said, that the moment the epidemic makes its appearance in any district, every engine that science can command is set at work to mitigate it. The twisting about of the rivers, with the alterations in the lines of drainage that such fluvial changes involve, from time to time subject the people to the most disastrous epidemics; but anything like the desolation of Gour, which proceeded from the same cause, is unknown. The districts around Calcutta suffer severely, but they no longer relapse into jungle as Malda and the region round about the Hindu capital have done. In the same way with famines. The calamity of 1866 has taught us that Bengal is still subject to the risk of depopulation. But it has also taught us that famine, however severe in individual localities, bears less cruelly on the people of large than of old; and vast irrigation works are now in progress to do for the individual localities, what our railways, roads, and other improved means of transit have done for the province in general. We may reasonably hope, therefore, that the public health and the physical tone of the people will improve. But this improvement will concern rather the middle and lower orders than the upper classes. For unhappily the latter have long been accustomed to dissociate robustness of body from high rank and intellectual vigour. The Bengali Babu is essentially a sedentary man. He regards active exercise as unsuited alike to his social dignity and to his mental attainments. Strength of arm and powers of locomotion are all very well in a coolie, but would be degrading to him. Now this is precisely the idea which Mr. Campbell seems resolved to eradicate. In throwing open a new field of honourable employment to the educated natives, he plainly tells them that they must get rid of their old prejudice against physical activity, and of their old habits of ease. He says in the most practical possible manner, that they must make up their minds that bodily strength is not inconsistent with the characteristics of a gentleman; and that without a good physical tone their mental attainments will go for nothing. To parse Milton or recite the "Deserted Village" is very well, but to be able to ride or walk rapidly twelve miles, is the sine qua non. It is a curious and most suggestive experiment, and may be destined to prove one of the greatest boons which English statesmanship has conferred on Bengal.

A SERIOUS CHARGE.—Mr. H. S. Thomas, Collector and Magistrate of South Canara, is making himself famous in the town of Mangalore by following a course of conduct not at all becoming his position as the highest official in the district. We learn from Mangalore that Mr. Thomas, on Saturday before last, in open cutchery, struck a poor Nair, named Fakere Bari, with a cane, the ferrule of which hurt the man, who bled profusely. The Nair had a petition to present to the Collector, and while he attempted to present it to Mr. Thomas he was assaulted. The subordinates about the cutchery took the man away, and having attended to him, promised to speak to Mr. Thomas. The result of the promise was that the Nair received as compensation the sum of one rupee—but whether this amount was paid down by Mr. Thomas, or by any of the cutchery servants, our correspondent has failed to say. Native feeling in the town now seems opposed to the Collector, who, since his return from Europe, is found to be a man of quite a different stamp to what he was three years ago. Mr. Thomas's administration is not favourably looked upon, and Mr. Webster's return is anxiously expected, in case the former is posted to another district. Before the Collector of South Canara left Mangalore for Europe, about two years ago, the native community, in token of their appreciation of Mr. Thomas's rule, founded a scholarship in the Provincial school, and invested the amount of their subscriptions in Government paper. The interest he evinced in the establishment of a literary society and reading room gained for the Collector much popularity; but just now that popularity appears to be on the decline, and Mr. Thomas has to thank himself for it.—Madras Standard.

GENERAL SAUNDERS ABBOTT.

General Abbott has taken such a prominent position in Punjab society, that on the occasion of his leaving it, and in fact closing his career in India, a short notice of his whole career may not be unacceptable to the many interested in him.

General Abbott just saw service with his regiment, the late 51st Native Infantry, with the army of Shekkawuttee in 1835. At the time of the first Sikh war, he was made a political officer, and aide-de-camp to Lord Harding, and distinguished himself specially by his activity in supplying the troops and reserves with supplies when the Commissariat had signally failed. The Deputy Commissary General on being required to inform the Governor-General in how short a time he could arrange the supplies, replied it would require six weeks. The work was done by Captain Abbott by the fourth day, during which time, besides the arranging of the supplies, he had ridden a hundred miles. Nor was his activity less in actual battle. When despatched for reinforcements to Subathoo, he marched two regiments and a heavy battery of artillery by forced marches of twenty-five and thirty miles a day down the Sutlej to the main army, which they reached in time to take part in the desperate battles that followed, Moodkee and Ferozeshah, at the latter of which Captain Abbott was dangerously wounded.

During the second war he served as political officer of Amballa, and continued in this service till 1856. At the time of the mutiny he was Deputy Commissioner of Hooshiarpore. His activity in raising levies and supplies for the army at Delhi obtained for him in 1858 the thanks of Government, and he was in that year appointed to the Commissionership of Lucknow. In this service he continued till 1863, and he is in the administration reports repeatedly mentioned in terms of marked praise for his "ability and hearty energy." In 1863 General Abbott took furlough to Europe, and afterwards retired as Major-General. In 1868, at a time of much trouble and perplexity to the Punjab and Delhi Railway Company, he was offered the Agency of the line. He declined it, but on the offer being repeated he accepted, and came out again to India in 1868. He has served the Company faithfully till compelled from sheer self-respect to resign a position which had become anomalous.

It is from no desire to intrude upon the life or leisure of the General that we have ventured to offer to his friends a resume of his career. But we know they would not willingly let him slip away from them unnoticed. His whole Indian life has been, with the exception of a few years, closely connected with the Punjab, whether as the dashing aide-de-camp, hurrying sorely-needed troops to battle, the much-harassed interpreter, the plodding surveyor, the popular district magistrate, making roads and building Christian churches in quiet out-stations, or the typical half military civilian entrenching his kutcherry and mounting guns to menace the approaching mutineers. It was to be expected that his appointment and work as agent to the railway would be much criticised; nor have we given him credit for being such an agent as an engineer trained to this as his life's work would have been. But when we consider the terrible Augean stable he came to clean it is surprising that often and often he did not break down or throw it up in disgust. He served his company with a degree of integrity and upright perseverance that will render it difficult for them to supply his place.

In Lahore, where he was always a leader in every public or benevolent work, he leaves a circle of friends which is almost identical with the community, and their best wishes go with him and his in his retirement.—Indian Public Opinion.

Miscellaneous.

LORD NORTHBROOK'S HORSEMANSHIP.—In one of the respects in which the late Lord Mayo was personally most conspicuous, says the Pioneer, Lord Northbrook is not one whit his inferior. The pace at which the Viceroy lately rattled down the Kussowlee hill, which, we need hardly tell our readers, is a bugbear to timid horsemen, rather astonished, as it certainly scattered, his staff—hardish riders though they all are.

NEW INVENTIONS.—The undermentioned specifications of inventions have been filed in the office of the Secretary to the Government of the North-Western Provinces:—"For the manufacture of wines, spirits, brandies, and liqueurs from the fruit of the bel-tree (ægle cralaya marne los) and from the roselle or red sorrel (hibiscus sabdariffa);" by Michel John Joseph Varnier Miritello, of Bankipore, Patna, Clerk in holy Orders. "For an improved method of manufacturing harmoniums, organs, &c., without the use of bellows, and for a new method of working the stops;" by William Fraser Smith, of 6, Government-place, Calcutta. "Improvements in furnaces and apparatus used in heating airs or gases for the supply of blast-furnaces, and for other purposes;" by Thomas Whitwell, of the Thornaby Iron-works, Stockton-on-Tees, in the county of Durham, England.

THE HEAT AT ALLAHABAD.—Salamanders would find Allahabad a suitable place of residence. On Saturday the thermometer in the shade registered 110·5 deg., and at sunrise yesterday morning 91·5 deg.—Pioneer, June 3.

THE MAYO MEMORIAL.—Before leaving India, says the Pioneer, the Envoy, who brought a complimentary letter from the Ameer of Bokhara to Lord Mayo, requested his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab to be allowed to offer a contribution of Rs. 300 to the Mayo Memorial, in token of his gratitude for the kindly attention which he had received at the hands of the late Viceroy. His Honour accepted the offer with thanks for the kindly sentiment by which it was dictated.

HERR MACK, JUNIOR.—I have to record the sudden demise of the younger brother of Herr Mack, who has for several months been a resident of Simla. It appears he went to bed in robust health on Sunday. He had in the early part of the day been to the doctor for some liniment in order to apply it to some part of his body which had been subject to pains. The bottle of liniment (aconite with opium) had been put on the mantle-piece with another bottle of medicine to be taken inwardly. It is supposed that the young man must have got up to take the draught, and the wrong bottle was emptied and the contents swallowed in ignorance. The next morning he was found a corpse.—Correspondent of the Delhi Gazette.

PRATT MEMORIAL FUND.—The Working Committee of the Pratt Memorial Fund held a meeting on Wednesday, 22nd May, at the Bishop's Palace. It appeared from the Treasurer's Report that the money paid up amounted to upwards of Rs. 24,000, and that there was a prospect of realising within a few weeks sufficient to raise the receipts to upwards of Rs. 30,000. This result was considered sufficiently encouraging to justify the Committee in hoping that in the course of next year the school might be set on foot; and in the meantime it was resolved that the appeal for subscriptions be continued in all available quarters. The Working Committee consists of the Lord Bishop of Calcutta, Chairman; the Honourable Mr. Bullen Smith, J. Cowie, Esq., and J. F. Ogilvy, Esq.; Colonel B. E. Bacon and Rev. B. T. Atley, Joint Secretaries; Rev. W. C. Bronehead, Secretary and Treasurer.—Englishman, May 27.

MR. COWAN.—The Punjab Times is informed that Mr. Cowan is preparing for publication a complete account of the late Kooka outbreaks at Unritsur, Raikote, Maloudh and Malair Kotla. This book will contain the official reports submitted to the Punjab Government by its Chief Civil and Police-officers, for many years previous to the disturbances. The correspondence with the native chieftains and others on the causes of the risings and aims of the Kooka sect, and precautions taken by Government for many months after the outbreak, all of which matters have been excluded from the "Kooka despatch." The evidence adduced will clearly show the necessity for the severest measures of repression. On completion Mr. Cowan, we hear, will proceed to England, and lay his case before Parliament. Several members of the Lower House have already offered him assistance.

LORD NORTHBROOK'S VALET.—An amusing incident is told of Lord Northbrook's arrival at Umballa. It happened that when the train stopped there for him to come out, he was asleep, and those who waited drawn up on the platform to receive him thought it etiquette to wait till he was roused. Accordingly a circle of considerate Britishers was formed at a little distance from the carriage, waiting till the great man should make his appearance like a giant refreshed. After a short time, the door opened and the expectants beheld a neatly-dressed affable gentleman step on to the platform. The multitude drew itself up and looked pleasant, the general put on his most winning smile of welcome, and advanced to give him the right hand of fellowship. The affable gentleman, with a shade of distance in his manner, politely informed him that my Lord would be ready presently. It was the valet! The general winced.—Punjab Times, May 28.

MR. SAUNDERS'S PATENT FOR COOLING RAILWAY CARRIAGES.—On Tuesday morning we had an opportunity of inspecting the two first-class carriages which have been sent across from Bombay for the purpose of conveying his Excellency the Viceroy and Staff from Calcutta to Umballa. These carriages are cooled by Mr. Saunders's patent method of applying khushkus tatties, which is, as far as we are able to judge, the most successful that has as yet been tried. Under the floor of the carriage there is an air chamber, with ventilators at each end for collecting the air in the direction in which the train proceeds. Above these air chambers are four layers of khushkus mats, with spaces for air left between them, through which a current passes into the interior of the carriage. The tatties are watered by means of a peculiarly constructed bucket, which is replenished by a small pipe from a tank which, whence once filled, will not be exhausted before six hours. The bucket is so adjusted as to tilt over at intervals of a quarter of an hour, and to discharge its contents into two pipes that run through the centre of the carriage floor. These pipes have long slits cut in them, through which the water is dispersed over shallow perforated tin trays placed over the khushkus mats, upon which the water falls in the form of rain. Perfect ventilation, which has hitherto always been the stumbling block in similar enterprises, is effected in this case by the windows, which open outward and are secured at a lateral angle of about 30.

The outer heated air coming in contact with the window, strikes off from it, and, without raising an actual draft, creates a current which draws out the cool air inside the carriage by the windows. These windows, we may explain, are so constructed that every alternate window opens in one direction, so that, while one set of windows is opened when a train proceeds in one direction, the other set may be used when the train proceeds the other way. In addition to the above arrangements, there is a self-acting ventilator in the roof, which is nothing more than a shutter working on a central pivot, which is kept open in the direction in which the train moves. These windows and ventilators entirely exclude the external air, and no air is admitted into the interior of the carriage which does not first pass through the cool-air spaces in the flooring, which being necessarily entirely free from dust, ensures comfort and cleanliness in the interior of the carriage. Altogether, we consider the apparatus which we have endeavoured to describe such an important contribution to the health and comfort of travellers that we have thought it quite worthy of a long and full notice. And we are glad to learn that it can be applied to all first-class carriages employed in long journeys at a positively insignificant charge.—Indian Daily News, May 23.

EXPORTS.—CALCUTTA, June 4.—Jute: A good business has been done, and prices have risen, especially for the finer sorts. Saltpetre has fallen generally throughout the week, owing to bad advices from London. Rice has been in better demand, and prices have risen about an anna all round. Linseed: Prices have been fully maintained, whilst a rise has taken place in what is known as Liverpool seed. Raw Silk: The sales during the week have been—J. W. Cossimbazar, at Rs. 20; G. M. J., at Rs. 19; and native Jungypur, at from 15-8 to 18-4. Corahs: About 5,000 pieces have changed hands at from 175 to 177-8 for the best qualities.

MONEY MARKET.—CALCUTTA, June 4.—Exchange: The Bank of Bengal has reduced its rates for Loans and Discounts 1 per cent. all round, and at the same time increased the margins on loans on Government paper 1 per cent. Government paper has been very dull, and the transactions on a very limited scale.

Madras.

NARAKEL.—During the coming S. W. monsoon, Narakel will be busier than ever. One vessel has already arrived at the port, and it is expected that a great number of vessels will load there for London in the ensuing wet season.—Bangalore Spectator, May 27.

DEATH IN A RAILWAY TRAIN.—A correspondent informs us that a Mr. Burcher, one of the railway inspectors on the North-West line, whilst returning from Madras to his post, was found dead in the train on the morning of the 28th. He must have been dead many hours.—Bangalore Herald, June 1.

THE VOLUNTEERS.—Captain W. F. Wright, on retiring from the Adjutancy of the Madras Volunteer Guards, has been presented by the members of the corps with a valuable gold watch, on the reverse inner side of which was inscribed "Presented to Captain W. F. Wright, by the Madras Volunteer Guards, in appreciation of his services as their adjutant from 1865 to 1872." Captain Wright is succeeded by Captain Allardice.

HYDERABAD RAILWAY.—Every exertion is being made to complete the foundations for the piers of the bridges on the Hyderabad State Railway before the commencement of the rains. Fears are, however, entertained that they will not be finished in time, in which case most of the work will probably have to be done over again. Work was commenced on this line two years ago, but we cannot expect to see it finished before the end of 1876.—Pioneer, May 27.

CIVIL.—We learn that Mr. Robert Edward Master, of the Civil Service, is likely to retire from the service early next year. Mr. Master was appointed Director of Revenue Settlement in March 1868, and is now in Europe on furlough. He has been about twenty-five years in the service, and will probably be succeeded in his post by Mr. Banbury, whose appointment appears in the last Gazette. Mr. Master stands twenty-ninth on the Civil Service list, immediately above Mr. Huddleston.—Madras Standard.

TRUE RELIGION.—The Delhi Gazette the other day made the mistake of calling the Madras Presidency "outwardly religious," because all its public offices were closed on Ascension Day. "Outwardly!" replies the Madras Times indignantly; "why, everybody knows that this place has long been the religious capital of India. If we do not excel in anything else, we excel in religion." Then the religion of Madras must be Christianity with the modesty and humility left out.—Indian Daily News, May 28.

THE LATE CYCLONE.—The committee appointed to inquire into the circumstances connected with the wrecks during the cyclone held their first meeting on Saturday in a room at the Sea Customs Office, when, we understand, the evidence of Mr. Pogson and Mr. Dalrymple was taken. Why should the committee sit with closed doors? The public will be certain to doubt whether the inquiry has been half as searching as it ought to be, if the proceedings are not published in full, without official censorship.—Madras Mail, May 28.

THE DENGUE FEVER.—It has been hitherto believed that dengue fever is not fatal in its results, but in the neighbourhood of Cochin many who had been attacked have succumbed to it. The mortality is confined to the children, whose system is perhaps too weak to sustain the attack. Those who have died had only been suffering from the fever for two or three days. At Ernacollum, or on the other side of the backwater, the fever is raging to a great extent; at Ernacollum, we say, as in Calcutta, there is not a house in which the dengue fever has not appeared. From Quilon we hear that about two hundred sepoys of the regiment stationed there have been attacked with the fever and are now in hospital.—Bangalore Spectator.

THE LATE CAPTAIN HOBSON.—It was stated at the meeting of the Shipwrecked Sailors Relief Fund, yesterday evening, that the life of the late Captain Hobson, of the Ardbeg, had been insured for some twenty years, and that three days before the cyclone which resulted in his death he received tidings of the failure of the office whose policy he held. He has left a widow and twelve children, of whom only two are provided for. The committee have voted £100 to Mrs. Hobson, and will apparently make a further grant as soon as they are in a position to calculate the probable amount of other claims on the Fund. With such a peculiarly distressing case to deal with, there seems to be no probability of a surplus remaining for eventual appropriation to some other purpose than that intended by subscribers.—Madras Mail, May 24.

COCHIN RAILWAY.—The Cochin correspondent of the Bangalore Spectator states that it is definitely decided that the railway should be extended to Cochin, and that the work of extension will commence soon. That the Dewan of Cochin has been earnest about the extension, and the favourable terms which the Cochin Sircar have proposed have tended to bring about an early and desirable settlement of the questions. Cochin is the natural and suitable terminus of the south-west railway, considering its commercial importance, its situation, and the fine harbour, the finest in India, which it possesses. As Mr. Robertson says, Cochin backwater is practically a wet dock of greater area than all the docks in Great Britain put together, and it can be converted into the largest close harbour in the world, by dredging the shallow places.

STATION TALK.

MHOW, May 24.—I am able to report regarding the progress of Holkar's State Railway. From the first of next month, 20,000 Norway pine creosoted sleepers will be delivered every month in Bombay by the contractors in England, Messrs. Budd, upwards of twenty vessels being due in your port shortly with material. In the railway workshops at Byculla, engines are nearly ready to forward on to Khundwah. The wire fencing for the whole line has been purchased from the G.I.P. Railway Company, and will soon be set up; and the delivery of permanent way materials to the contractors is being pushed on with vigour at Khundwah. Besides the sleepers mentioned above, the Forest Department in the Central Provinces have to supply a large quantity; but I may here remark that sleepers of a similar character have not been found to answer on the Nagpore line of the Great Indian Peninsula nor on the East Indian Railway. I have mentioned in former letters the doubtful policy of denuding the forests on the Saulpooras and in Chutteesghur and Nundla for the sake of making sleepers for the railways, where already the dearth of timber is beginning to be felt. The work on the bridge over the Nerbudda will soon be commenced. Mr. Ramsay and some of his assistants were deputed the other day to Bhosawul to witness the completion of the viaduct over the Taptee on the G.I.P. line, and gain some wrinkles from Mr. Clarke, the agent for the contractors of the work. Within the past week the 49th Regiment has been threatened by an outbreak of cholera. Its appearance in the quarters of the married people has been and is the cause of considerable anxiety; the married people have moved into camp, some ten cases having occurred in the patcheries, most of these ending fatally. It is to be hoped that the necessity for moving the gallant regiment from barracks into camp at this most trying season will be avoided. The station in other parts continues healthy.

KOLAPOOR, May 25.—By rather a strange coincidence the head master of the Dhoolia High School is now here, while our head master has gone to Dhoolia to spend the summer vacation. The former gentleman, Mr. Vittal Narayan Palhak, M.A., delivered an interesting lecture in Marathi the other day, in the quadrangle of the Rajaram High School building, to a large audience. The subject of the lecture was:—"The comparison between the manners and customs of the Hindoos and those of other nations, and the effect of the difference on the social and mental progress of the Hindoos." The lecturer commenced by giving a brief account of Hindoostan and its geographical position, as compared with other countries. He next dwelt upon the disadvantages under which India has laboured, and must be expected to struggle, unless a radical change is effected in both the manners and customs of its people. The existence of caste, aversion to foreign travel, infant marriage, want of inclination to follow other than hereditary professions and occupations, apathy and indifference to the advantages of education, and above all, the utter neglect of physical training were, the lecturer said, the bane of native society. He compared the manners and customs obtaining amongst European nations with those of the people of this country (India), and demonstrated the great advantages and lasting benefits which the differences pointed out by him have secured to the Western nations. Mr. Vittalrao is, I hear, a native of Kolapoor, and, while according him the need of praise due to his exertions for the enlightenment and reformation of his countrymen, I would suggest to him the necessity for limiting his future addresses to an hour or an hour-and-a-half at the outside. A lecture occupying nearly four hours in delivery, as his did, and that in the month of May, is enough to try the patience of the most forbearing audience. I doubt whether any ordinary person could keep his mind concentrated under such circumstances, even on the astonishing eloquence of Sheridan or Burke himself, where he here.

CARWAR, May 23.—The steamer Surrey, 1,070 tons, Captain Reed, arrived here this morning; she will, I believe, take about 7,000 pressed bales of cotton via Suez Canal to Liverpool. Our exports of cotton are increasing fast. We have now exported from this port during the last five years nearly 100,000 pressed bales direct to Europe; and about 50,000 to Bombay. Pattimars are leaving daily with docras of cotton. Carwar will be a large and important port yet. The prospect of the early construction of the railway to Hoobli has already done much good. Sites are being sought after, and buildings are rapidly springing up, and the land about Carwar is increasing in value. We expect to have a large number of ships here next year with railway iron, and stores of all kinds required for the construction of the railway. Our sanitarium on Goodnully Hill is keeping up its good name; the climate has been delightful, and those who have been residing there during the hot weather say it is quite equal to Matheran; the thermometer is never higher than 80 deg., but at Carwar we have it 87 and 88 degs.—Times of India Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

SHOLAPORE.—A friend writes from Sholapore that there is great scarcity of water there, and that dengue fever, small-pox, and cholera are prevailing to a great extent. The heat is terrific, almost unbearable, with all the alleviations they try to keep constantly in operation. From other parts of the surrounding country like complaints have reached us. Scarcity of food and water prevail everywhere throughout the Poona zillah.—Deccan Herald, June 5.

SIND FRONTIER.—Syad Thoweyni, the Wazeer of H.H. Syad Turki, Sultan of Muscat, took possession of Gwadar without opposition. The Wazeer was accompanied by three hundred Arab soldiers, and the change of rule was favourably received by the inhabitants. The Wazeer proposes remaining at Gwadar until the next Gulf steamer passes, about the 29th inst. Fever and small-pox have disappeared from the town. On the Shahgassi Wali Muhammad reaching Kozdar, Narudin Mingal endeavoured to open negotiation. The Shahgassi caused him to be informed that if he surrendered, giving up all the property plundered from Kafilas, guns, &c., obtained by him, at Beyla, his life should be guaranteed, but not the chieftainship of the tribe. These terms were offered by the Shahgassi to save the necessity of marching a force into Wad against Narudin, which would injure and distress the poorer classes, who had been compelled by circumstances, more than inclination, to share in late disturbances. Narudin has accepted the terms, and surrendered to the Shahgassi on the 10th inst. at Kozlar, stating he was prepared to undergo any punishment H.H. the Khan chose to inflict upon him. The Sarawan Sirdars are with the Shahgassi on their way to pay their respects to H.H. the Khan at Khelat.—W. L. MEREWETHER, Colonel, Commissioner in Sind. Kurrachee, May 22.

SURGEON MAJOR RIMINGTON.—In our obituary this week will be observed the announcement of the death on the 30th ultimo, from fever, of Surgeon Major J. S. Rimington, Presidency Surgeon at Baroda. Dr. Rimington, whose health had undoubtedly become impaired by a constant residence at the station for upwards of twelve years, regardless of self, heeded not the urgent warnings which climate and friends had given him, and thus has fallen another victim to the necessities of the service and an unrelenting sense of duty. Kind in disposition, gentle in word and deed, and genial as a companion, the memory of Dr. Rimington will long be cherished by many to whom the unexpected announcement of his demise was indeed a stroke of bitter sorrow. In his professional capacity the services of Dr. Rimington were as readily rendered to the humble and lowly of Baroda as to the favoured few to whom he was supposed to be especially attached by official duty. Dr. Rimington came to India in 1848. He served with the Bombay Column Army of the Punjab in 1848-49. He was also present at the siege and surrender of Mooltan, the battle of Guzerat, and the pursuit and surrender of the Sikh army. His services were marked by a medal and two clasps. Dr. Rimington was a brother of Mr. G. F. Rimington, solicitor, whose state of health necessitated his return to England for a time by last mail.—Times of India, June 7.

SIR COWASJEE JEHANGIR READYMONEY, C.S.I.—Mr. Cowasjee Jehangir Ready money, C.S.I., may be congratulated on having at last attained what is believed to have been the wish of his heart—the honour of knighthood. A telegram received in Bombay yesterday announces that her Majesty has been pleased to confer a knighthood upon Mr. Cowasjee. His claims to such an honour scarcely needed to be commended specially to her Majesty's Government, and might have been recognised long ere this. His princely donations given for works of public utility and his contributions for the relief of the suffering and the distressed in all parts of India and Europe had established his claim to the character of a philanthropist, and it was perhaps no very violent straining of a metaphor to call him the "Peabody of the East." His charity has been almost always discriminating, and, if it had occasionally a tendency to arrest attention, yet it was always dispensed without a distinction of colour or creed. His donations to various charities and public institutions in England and on the Continent have made his name familiar to many in the West; while in India his benefactions have long entitled him to the respect and gratitude of all classes of people. For nearly a quarter of a century his charity has continued to flow in all directions; and he is said to have given in this way nearly fifteen lacs of rupees. It had long been felt in Bombay that a public recognition of such benefactions was due to Mr. Cowasjee; and it was believed to be the opinion of many influential citizens, European and native, that it would be most appropriately effected by placing a statue of Mr. Cowasjee in some public institution founded or endowed by him in this city. Accordingly in October last year a meeting was held at Mazagon Castle for the purpose of marking the sense of the people of Bombay of the character of this public-spirited gentleman, by placing a statue of him in the Elphinstone College Buildings (now known as Cowasjee Jehangir's Buildings) or in some other public institution in the city. An influential committee was formed for raising subscriptions, which now make a handsome sum.—Bombay Gazette, June 7.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

THE COMMISSARIAT IRREGULARITIES.

[Vide Allen's Indian Mail, May 13.]

No. 365.—In G.O. of April 8 last, No. 275, the existence of certain grave irregularities in the commissariat department was noticed. The fact that for some years past certificates regarding cash balances had been signed containing statements clearly contrary to fact, and that, in defiance of distinct orders on the subject, large cash balances had been retained, was mentioned.

2. Although it was distinctly stated in that order that no fraudulent motive was attributed to the officers concerned, the order expressed the intention of Government to take such serious notice of the irregularities and neglect of duty that had occurred as should prevent for the future a recurrence of them.

3. Before passing a final decision as to the extent of the culpability of the different officers, it was noticed that the Commissary general had been directed to report his deliberate opinion of the degree of blame attaching to each officer concerned in "grave irregularities as regards certain other matters." And the decision of Government in the case then immediately under notice was withheld, until it was ascertained whether any of the officers who had been led to sign certificates which were contrary to fact would be affected by that report. The report has now been submitted.

4. H.E. in Council is glad to perceive that neither Col. Lucas nor Major Willoughby has been in any way concerned in the grave irregularities alluded to in the concluding para. of the G.O. of April 8.

5. That the conduct of both these officers in connection with the separate cash account amounts to a grave error is not denied by the officers themselves, and is admitted by the Commissary general. But serious as has been their omission of duty in the matter, H.E. in Council cannot admit the validity of the excuse urged by Colonel Lucas and by Major Willoughby that in signing, as they did, monthly a certificate that there was no cash balance in hand when sums of considerable amount were in their possession, they believed that that certificate had reference to the regular, and not to the separate cash account.

6. The intention of the order forbidding the retention by officers of the commissariat department of cash balances at the close of each month, and the meaning of the certificate required from them that this order was complied with, could not be misunderstood. But the effect of both was obviously frustrated by a practice which enabled the executive commissariat officer at the presidency to retain large sums in his hands, while at the same time the fact was concealed from the account department by a certificate which was contrary to fact.

7. It is urged that the separate cash-book was first instituted by, and was continued with the knowledge of the late Commissary general. This statement H.E. in Council believes to be true; but, though this circumstance may to a certain extent extenuate the conduct of the subordinate officers who have continued the irregular and improper practice, yet it cannot justify the signing of a formal statement by an officer, month after month, that he had no balance in his hands, when sums of considerable amount were actually in his possession. No example and no precedent can relieve a public servant from the responsibility of signing a declaration contrary to fact. It is from this point of view that the practice has been described in the G.O. of April 8 as "the habitual rendering of false accounts," and, while H.E. in Council willingly exonerates the officers who permitted themselves to be led into such an error of any fraudulent or dishonourable motive, he does not perceive how a misstatement repeated month after month could be otherwise designated.

8. If it were requisite to demonstrate the mischievous consequences which were likely to follow the adoption of the practices which have been denounced, it would be found in the statement of the Commissary general that in no one instance has an officer obtained from his predecessor a detailed statement showing the items of which the reserved cash balance consisted. This fact indicates pretty plainly the tendency of so pernicious a system.

9. H.E. in Council bears in mind the long and valuable service which Col. Lucas has rendered in the department; and the Commissary general testifies to the unremitting exertions of Major Willoughby, his assiduous attention to his duties, and his great desire to improve the character of his establishment and to place it on a satisfactory footing. H.E. in Council must express his deep regret that both these otherwise meritorious officers should have placed themselves in a position in which, notwithstanding their past good service, it is impossible to avoid pronouncing condemnation of their proceedings in the particular matter under discussion.

10. Regarding Captain Phelps, H.E. in Council accepts the Commissary general's opinion that that officer, during the time he held charge of the presidency executive office, was neither more nor less to blame in connection with the separate cash account and the balances shown therein, than his predecessors in office had been, and that he is unconnected with the other irregularities of a grave character which have been previously mentioned.

11. Captain Phelps was executive commissariat officer at the presidency for so short a time that he may not have fully realised the impropriety of the practice which, like his predecessors, he adopted. H.E. in Council, therefore, is satisfied with recording his disapprobation of Captain Phelps' conduct in connection with the keeping of a separate cash-book, and signing of certificates, by which it appeared contrary to the fact that he had no balances in hand.

12. Major Davies' position in relation to the separate cash balances, and also in the matter of signing incorrect certificates, appears to H.E. in Council to be the same as that of Colonel Lucas or Major Willoughby. His case differs materially, however, from the cases of the other officers mentioned, inasmuch as he is mixed up in those other serious irregularities upon which the special report of the Commissary general was required. The Commissary general brings to notice that in the explanation submitted by Major Davies, that officer pleads the exceptional circumstances in which he was placed as an excuse for the errors he committed, and suggests that, as he (Major Davies) throws himself on the mercy of Government, a lenient view may be taken of his conduct in the granting of certificates without any real knowledge of the facts to which he certified, a course of procedure which resulted in an over-payment of large amount.

13. With reference to the refunding of the boat contractor's deposit, the Commissary general is of opinion that the plea of overwork is no excuse for an act which exhibits a want of care and due caution in a matter in which the greatest caution and care were essentially necessary. H.E. in Council concurs in the condemnation pronounced by the Commissary general on Major Davies' conduct, both in the matter of the over-payment to the boat contractor, and the unauthorised return of the deposit money. These transactions clearly show the unfitness of Major Davies for further employment in the commissariat department, and H.E. in Council feels reluctantly compelled to direct his removal therefrom.

14. Major C. F. Keays and Major G. S. Mignon are at present both absent on furlough in England. Until these officers have had an opportunity of explaining their conduct in connection with the matters under notice the final decision of Government as to the part taken by them in these transactions must be postponed.

15. Major G. S. Mignon has been compelled to take an extension of six months' leave, and in doing so he forfeits his appointment. But, though no longer connected with the commissariat department, he will be called upon for a full explanation of his conduct while in charge of the executive office at the presidency.

16. Before closing this order, H.E. in Council feels it incumbent upon him to again remind the Commissary general that the existence of the practices which have called forth the disapprobation of Government is a circumstance which reflects discredit on the head of the department. H.E. would be pleased to see that the activity displayed by the Commissary general in extenuating or attempting to excuse the errors of his subordinates, should be exerted in searching out and remedying the defects in the administration of the large and important department committed to his care.

17. In his report Colonel Holland states that he was ignorant of the existence of the separate cash-book until it was lately brought to his notice, and he adds, "I did not look for errors where I had no reason to suspect them."

18. A statement of this description coming from the Commissary general of the army is not satisfactory; and, if allowed to pass unnoticed, is likely to lead to mischievous results. If a vigilant superintendence had been exercised by the Commissary general over the practical working of the different offices subordinate to him, it would not have devolved upon the officers of another department to bring to light practices which ought not to have escaped the observation of the Commissary general, and correction at his hands.

19. As administrative head of the department, the Commissary general's acquaintance with the working of it should be of the most accurate and intimate character. Without a thorough knowledge on his part of the manner in which the details of duty are carried on in all branches, and a determination to put an end to irregularities and improper usages wherever they are found to have sprung up, it is impossible that the administration of this most important service can be carried on efficiently or satisfactorily, or without detriment to the interest of the State.

THE LOSHAI EXPEDITION.

From Brig. gen. G. Bouchier, c.b., Commanding Cachar Column, Loshai Expeditionary Force, to the Quartermaster general, Army Headquarters, Calcutta. No. 696L, dated Cachar, March 19.

In submitting for the information of H.E. the C. in C. the accompanying copy of a field force order, published on the breaking up of the Cachar Column of the Loshai Expeditionary Force, I hope it may not be considered out of place to forward a slight sketch of our operations.

2. Consequent on each year's raids, a line of posts was established along the southern frontier of Sylhet and Cachar, but as I considered these posts were not sufficiently south to cover my right flank, nor to bring any pressure upon Sookpilall and Khalkom, should they throw in their lots either with the Howlongs or the more eastern tribes, I established others at Bongkong, on the N. or Vaie range, Kooloo Rub, on the Rongtipahan, and near Chuttachoor peak, in the latitude of Julnacherra, cutting roads from them respectively to the Sonai Chem and Dalleus river, thus bringing the posts nearly into communication with Cachar by water carriage.

2A. In a similar manner General Nuthall was, in October last, requested to move the Rajah of Munnipore to put detachments on the southern frontier. Flanked again by a force of about five hundred men near the Moirang Lake, their posts were never established, or intimation given that any difficulty in doing so existed, until the receipt of a communication from him dated Dec. 15, 1871.

3. The Cachar Column consisted of half a battery of artillery, a company of Sappers and Miners, and 500 men each of the 22nd Punjab N.I., 42nd Assam L.I., and 44th N.I., with 1,200 commissariat coolies, and 178 elephants, and a coolie corps of 800 men, under Major Moore. This was the actual number sent for the expedition. The coolie corps at starting was reduced by cholera to 387 men, and of the elephants, fourteen, either from galls, sickness, or general unfitness, never carried a load for the column.

4. The special equipments of the corps, waterproof sheets, boots, tools, Norton's pumps, &c., had been sent on by water to Cachar, where each corps, on arrival, received its proportions. The kits and coolie loads were reduced to the prescribed weights, and every detachment was thus inspected in field marching orders.

5. On Nov. 21 we broke grounds from Cachar; the 41th N.I. marched for Luckeepore, fourteen miles, whence the road onwards had to be made. The road selected was via Mynadur on the Barak, where two and a-half months' provisions had been stored for the force, and thence to Tipai Mookh, the junction of the Tipai and Barak rivers, our advanced base of operations.

6. Much difference of opinion existed as to whether this was the proper point of departure, but as our work was definitely to punish the eastern tribes, I now, after the campaign, feel strongly the selection was a right one.

7. Not only had we to make a road, but to find a track of mountains over which we could carry it. This fell to Capt. Harvey and the sappers. The track once found, parties of troops were at intervals laid along it; those in rear completing the work of their predecessors.

8. On Dec. 12 the first detachment reached Tipai Mookh, where Mr. Edgar joined me the following day, and on the 15th I had there collected the head-quarters and wing of the 22nd Punjab infantry, a wing of the 44th N.I., and the company of sappers and miners.

9. The position was admirable; a wide shingly beach with extensive plateaus rising above, on which barracks, hospitals, storehouses, and officers' quarters rose as if by magic.

10. It was considered advisable that we should make a rapid advance on New Kholel, the location of the descendants of Vonpilall, as the Loshais did not yet believe in our intention of advancing into the limit of their country.

11. On Dec. 16 I made a fresh start with the sappers and Lieut. col. Nuttall's wing of the 44th N.I., leaving the 22nd Punjab infantry to garrison Tipai Mookh. As other troops arrived this wing was pushed on, and a continuous chain of road-making detachments extending along the whole line was formed, my object being to bring a wing of each corps in succession to the front.

12. On the 18th we came upon a small piquet of Loshais, who fled at our approach; two of the party, however returned, and accompanied us. They informed us that the Loshais were assembled in large numbers at Toweebhoom, but for what reason they could not tell.

13. We found the road-making here slow work, but on Dec. 22, with a wing of the 44th N.I. and fifty of the 22nd Punjab infantry, made a rapid descent by a Loshai path to the Toweebhoom, where we suddenly came upon a party of about fifty Loshais with Mora Muntree from Impanee. They yelled at us, and warned us not to cross the stream, which we did by a large weir, and secured the piquet house on the opposite bank. Not a shot was fired, they were too frightened to stand long to parley, and disappeared in the forest.

14. On Dec. 23 following the track of the party who left us the previous day, we mounted to the jhooms (farm lands) of the Vonpilall tribes. As we emerged from the forest the advance was met by a heavy fire, which, as the Loshais fell back before us, was continued throughout the day. A young policeman and havildar of the 22nd Punjab infantry were the first to fall; we destroyed an immense quantity of corn in granaries and three large villages; we occupied a fourth.

15. Dec. 24 and 25 were occupied in punishing those tribes who had commenced hostilities. Parties were sent out to destroy their villages and crops, but as I was some miles off my direct line of communications, I determined, on the 26th, to return to my position on the Toweebhoom, and carry the sick and wounded to a place of security, returning, if necessary, to inflict further punishment.

16. The retirement was accomplished without a casualty, the 22nd Punjab infantry forming the advanced guard, the 44th N.I., under Capt. Lightfoot, the convoy for the sick, wounded, and coolies, while Lieut. col. Nuttall, collecting the picquets in rear of his column, covered the retirement, passing through his reserves under Capt. Robertson, from hill to hill, as if on parade.

17. The 27th and 28th were employed in camp in clearing the jungle in the neighbourhood, while the sappers and 42nd N.I. were completing the road to No. 6 station.

18. The sharpshooters released from watching us at Kholel commenced to attack our working parties. The only remedy for this was more punishment at Kholel. On the morning of the 29th I took 200 of the 42nd towards the villages we had burnt. As we started the column was fired into, and one man wounded. About three miles on we met Dharpong, Poiboy's emissary, who came to sue for mercy, and begged me not to proceed. One of my objects in coming the second time was to escort the survey, and laying it down as a principal to do what I intended and then negotiate, I proceeded to the point I started for, and there listened to Dharpong.

19. He begged us to stop devastating these valleys, and that not only should all firing cease, but our communications would be kept open for us. To this we agreed, Dharpong mounted on a dead tree, sounded the cry of peace far and near; from that moment the effect was marvellous, not a shot was fired near us,—in the evening we returned to camp.

20. Our losses from Dec. 24 to 29 were—22nd Punjab N.I., 4 wounded, 1 dangerously, 3 severely; 42nd N.I., 1 wounded slightly; 44th N.I., 5 killed, 2 wounded; sappers and miners, 1 wounded; police, 1 wounded; coolies, 1 killed, 2 wounded; total, 6 killed, 11 wounded—17.

21. Muntries from Kholel and others, said to be emissaries from Poiboy, came into camp, bringing elephants' tusks, goats, &c.

22. In my rapid march on Toweebhoom I had somewhat overrun my provisions, and left the roads in my rear unfinished, which until made were almost impracticable even for laden men; this necessitated a halt for some days, during which time I continued clearing the position and sending working parties onwards.

23. Water was somewhat scarce, but on the 4th January the road was sufficiently completed to warrant my pushing on 44th N.I. and sappers, the former to the Towectoo River, a distance of eight miles, the latter to spot near it where water was procurable. The same process as before of extending detachments along the road was carried out.

24. The head-quarters left Toweebhoom on the 6th, and arrived at Pachooee on the 9th; this was a most important position, as it not only commanded the road down to the Tipai, and the southern portion of the valley and villages of new Kholel which existed in dozens along the Voombong range, but also the country to the westward, where stood the site of old Kholel, and the village of Dhallong, one of Khalkoom's; in addition to these advantages, it effectually covered our communication with the Toweebhoom. I eventually placed Colonel Rattray, c.s.i., in command of Pachooee and the neighbouring posts, and Colonel Hicks in a like capacity at Toweebhoom.

25. Our position to the rear of Pachooee was thus perfectly secured—two forces could operate on the Kholel villages from two points within easy communication. Such being the case, Poiboy and his tribes were the next to be looked after.

26. We had again run ahead of roads and provisions, and were obliged to halt until the 17th January, 1872, but our time was well occupied in making the road onwards, and completing it in rear.

27. Poiboy was never believed to have committed any overt act of aggression on British territory, and provided he would come in, and tender submission personally, we had so far no ground for quarrelling with him, and information to this effect was sent to him.

28. On Jan. 17 I marched with a wing of the 22nd Punjab N.I., 44th N.I., and two guns, for the Tipai, en route to Chipooee. When half-way down to the river we saw collected on the opposite side about 500 Loshais, 200, perhaps, armed. I drew up the force in the bed of the river, and commenced the ascent. Dharpong, Poiboy's emissary, and his brother, an arch savage, arrived on the scene, and by threats and entreaties begged us to halt until night, and then parley in the darkness. This was not according to my principles. I pushed on up a steep ascent, and drew up the 44th N.I. in line, facing a similar line of Loshais, while Mr. Edgar and I, with the advance guard and staff, occupied the ground between.

29. A Loshai, said to be Poiboy, was brought forward, but on Hel-loong, an attache of Mr. Edgar's, and formerly a slave of Poiboy's, declaring that he was not the veritable chief, our meeting broke up; still they did all they could to delay our advance, but Chipooee was the point I started for, and there I was determined to go; the force arrived at the village by the evening, without encountering any opposition. We occupied a portion of it, and the Loshais soon flocked among us with poultry, eggs, &c., for sale.

30. From Chipooee we were fairly puzzled as to our route; the Loshais tried to persuade us from what appeared the direct road, but after some trouble we succeeded in hitting off the right line, and as the elephants for commissariat purposes were not to work beyond this point, I determined to trust to the country roads, repairing them here and there, where not passable for the artillery.

31. We halted at Chipooee until Jan. 22 to collect supplies, and then marched nearly eastward, continuing to move on the 23rd and 24th, on the afternoon of which date I reconnoitred to the top of the Moorthlang range with Lieut. col. Roberts, v.c., and Mr. Edgar. There are two roads to the top; fortunately we took the wrong one, or would have been brought up by a very strong force of Loshais who were collected at Koongnoong. We heard their gongs and shouts and returned to camp.

32. Early on the morning of Jan. 25, Dharpong, whom we had met on the previous day, came into camp and said, Poiboy's and Lalboorah's troops had joined to stop our progress, and would attack us on the march.

33. I made my dispositions as follows:—An advanced guard of fifty men of the 44th N.I., under Capt. Robertson, followed by seventy men of the same regiment in support—the 22nd Punjab N.I. furnishing the gun (advance guard?) and the 44th N.I. the rear guard.

34. Our route lay above and parallel to the bed of a nullah about a mile and a half from camp. The advance guard was fired into, and presently from front and flanks a formidable fire was opened. The advanced guard was at the time climbing an almost perpendicular wall of rock. As they reached the top they extended right and left, clearing their front and flanks; while the rest of the corps, as it arrived, dived into the bed of the rocky stream, where they met the enemy in force trying to get to the rear, to attack the long line of coolies. The 44th N.I. drove them back splendidly; at one spot thirteen corpses alone were found. Some few of the enemy slipped past the column, and attacked the rear, but were repulsed by the 22nd Punjab N.I. We have since learnt that the enemy acknowledged to about fifty killed, and a larger number wounded.

35. After getting our forces in hand, we pursued the enemy up a precipitous mountain side for two and a-half miles, through two stockades, the latter of which was defended, but turned by the 44th N.I. We ascended 2,500 feet in this distance, and by evening all baggage, &c., was brought within the stockade surrounding Koongnoong, which we occupied.

36. The English ammunition found on the slain was proof of their having been the raiders last year on Monierkhal and Nundigram.

37. Our loss was as follows:—General staff—Brig. gen. Bourchier, c.b., wounded in hand and arm, 1. Royal Artillery—Wounded, 2. 44th N.I.—Killed, 3; wounded, 1. Police—Wounded, 1. Coolies—Killed, 1; wounded, 3. Total—Killed, 4; wounded, 7—11.

CARNATIC RAILWAY.—The annual meeting of this Company was held on June 25, at the offices, Moorgate-street; Sir R. Macdonald Stephenson, the chairman presided. The report, an abstract of which has appeared, was adopted.

THE LONDON, BOMBAY, AND MEDITERRANEAN BANK.—At the Chambers of Vice-Chancellor Wickens, on June 26, before Mr. Church, the Chief Clerk, the affairs of the London, Bombay, and Mediterranean Bank were under discussion in reference to the payment of a further dividend. Mr. James Cooper (Johnstone, Cooper, Wintle, and Evans) and Mr. A. Stewart, the official liquidators, attended. The debts were £154,000, and the capital of £10 a share had been "called." Already the creditors had been paid two dividends of 2s. 6d. and 1s., and it was now proposed to pay another dividend of 1s., and a further dividend would be forthcoming, as remittances were coming from India. The Chief Clerk sanctioned the payment of 1s. in the pound.

THE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN FINANCE.

In addition to the brief report we gave last week, the subjoined further statements were made :—

Major-general Strachey said his main principle was a Council to inquire into proposed works, consult upon their propriety and necessity, and settle the financial arrangements for them.

Towards the conclusion of the day's examination General Strachey repeated his former assertion that it was not the Public Works Department alone that had created such heavy and, as supposed, extravagant demands upon the treasury. An enormous increase in civil charges required to be paid out of receipts or revenue had had to be met by the Indian Exchequer of late years, and public requirements growing with every year since the mutiny in 1857 up to the present time, of course money had to be found to meet them. This money had been obtained from two sources; viz., from revenue and from open loans. The loan system for public works had latterly ceased. To a certain extent, depreciation of the value of specie latterly had placed the Government of India in the greater jeopardy with reference to its more adventurous enterprises. Increases of prices, moreover, had arisen from various causes operating upon the financial system of the State; for instance, the high price of labour for building purposes had made the cost of public buildings, like that of railways and canals, appear excessive, whereas the finance principles of the Government had simply obeyed the fair conditions of supply and demand on the labour market. It was thus that a large house built for the Governor of Bombay at the cost of about £170,000, and which expenditure had been found fault with, had appeared to involve an extravagant outlay. But at Bombay you could not obtain the labour of bricklayers, carpenters, &c., at the prices ruling in London.

Mr. Fawcett asked whether it might not be a preferable policy to pay off something of the public debt of India gradually out of revenue rather than to be so lavish of expenditure on public works so indiscriminately? The witness replied that the railways, irrigation works, and military buildings were on their trial; the money invested in them would in course of time be returned with good interest. Of course, however (said General Strachey), these opinions, drawn from him by Mr. Fawcett's quick and searching, though often too theoretical inquiries, must be treated as distinct from the official point of view he might take of national affairs as a public servant. In answer to further questions, the witness denied that there was any similitude between the alleged extravagant expenditure on public works and the supposed extravagance of Indian financing generally. The financial expenditure of India had risen from forty-four millions, at which it stood in 1860-61, to forty-nine millions, which was the budget estimate of 1871-72. The witness quoted some figures to show that expenditure on public works had latterly been considerably reduced. Mr. Fawcett said he could not trust to the last made assertion, because he had never been exactly satisfied with the way in which the accounts of the Indian Government had been made up. The system of keeping accounts appeared to him to be to set off receipts and expenditure against each other in such a manner as to hide the actual state of things.

The witness rather indignantly repudiated the insinuation, and also one advanced by the chairman that public servants in India endeavoured to force on the Government to go on spending money on extraordinary works, for the sake of individual gain, profit, and reward. The witness reasserted that he had advised the Governor-General of India in Council to introduce a Bill regulating public works, so as to bring them within the limits of a separate fund to be kept up for the purpose. The measure might be extended so that the Imperial Parliament, should, by enactment, control financial expenditure in India. Adjourned.

On June 25 Sir J. W. Kaye, Secretary to the Political and Secret Department of the India-office, was recalled and examined on the allowances and subsidies granted to native princes. With regard to the general question (which comes under the head expenditure on political agencies), not much could be arrived at in detail regarding these allowances. After an inquiry into the pensions of the Mysore family and the Delhi family, the affairs of the Nawab Nazim of Bengal were taken under consideration. With regard to the latter, it was decided by the Committee to strike out a good deal of indirect evidence given, considering the same to be irregular, according to the rules which guided the Committee. A further series of pensions, viz., to the Carnatic family, the King of Oude, and the Nizamut of Bengal engaged the attention of the Committee. The questions put and explanations given were in reference to the point whether the sums would be diminished, or ultimately die out altogether. The result was that some would do the one, and some the other; but it was not ascertained how much would be a permanent burden on the revenues of India. Considerable time was occupied in the course of the morning in discussing a point of order raised by or through Mr. Fawcett's mode of examination of witnesses.

General Strachey was recalled, and for the rest of the afternoon examined by Mr. Fawcett, chiefly on the income-tax and Indian taxation generally. The answers given made it appear that Lord Mayo was desirous of abandoning the income-tax. His lordship had been all along opposed to the imposition of any sort of new tax, such being highly objectionable to the native mind and feelings. The people of India dreaded being brought under the harassing forms of European taxation; and especially had they suffered from the income-tax. Lord Mayo had feared we might be pursuing even a dangerous course by persisting in harassing the people with new taxes and imposts. Adjourned at a quarter to three o'clock.

On Friday Mr. Laing, Finance Minister in the Council of the Governor-General of India (Lord Canning), was examined on the taxation generally of India, and the cost of its collection. Nothing particularly transpired beyond what has already been made known regarding the taxation of the country; but it was ascertained that Mr. Laing personally holds opinions inimical to the income-tax, and against any addition whatever to local taxes. On the other hand, the witness, as we understood, was ready to make some concessions in the form of modified taxation to get rid of the income-tax. For instance, he would consent to a 15 per cent. import duty, which the large and rapidly increasing commerce with India might bear. He preferred a tobacco-tax to an income-tax; the former might be imposed to fall as lightly on the people as the present salt-tax did. A higher import duty was the less objectionable, as it would be protective as well as helping revenue. The financial policy of the Indian Government in recent years he (Mr. Laing) thought as unsound as it had been illiberal.

Miscellaneous.

MADRAS RAILWAY.—The annual general meeting of this company was held on June 21 at the London Tavern, Colonel J. T. Smith, the chairman presiding. Mr. J. Byrne, the Secretary, having read the notice convening the meeting, the report, an abstract of which has appeared, was adopted.

103RD (ROYAL BOMBAY FUSILIERS).—The regiment, strength 32 officers and 570 men, under the command of Lieutenant Colonel F. S. Kempt, arrived at Aldershot from Parkhurst on Tuesday afternoon, and is encamped on Rushmoor Green, south, and attached to the 2nd Brigade. Major-General Smith, C.B., commanding the brigade, made an inspection of the regiment on Wednesday morning, and expressed his satisfaction with the general appearance and clean turn-out the men presented.

EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.—The report of the directors of this company states that the length of line opened for traffic remained the same as in June last. The gross receipts for the year 1871 were £2,303,887, against £2,631,470, showing a decrease of £327,583. The net earnings for the half-year were £609,468, against £666,136 in the corresponding half-year. The net earnings for the year 1871 were £1,341,802, against £1,532,010 in the year 1870. The capital account showed that £30,757,245 had been received and £29,334,557 expended, leaving a balance of £1,422,688.

OFFICERS' REMITTANCES.—We are informed that great inconvenience has been caused to the families resident in this country of officers serving with the Queen's regiments in India, owing to the new arrangements for paying remittances through the India-office. It was the practice formerly of the various army agents to make advances where necessity arose in anticipation of the receipt of the advices of family remittances, which were paid through their hands. The agents now having no certainty that the amounts are coming forward, are rather chary in granting accommodation as heretofore. It is to be hoped the attention of the Duke of Argyll and Mr. Cardwell will be directed to this subject.—Broad Arrow.

SUEZ CANAL.—The report has been published of the Committee of Merchants trading with the East appointed to consider and amend the conditions of bills of lading by steamships passing through the Suez Canal. It is signed by the chairman, Mr. Macandrew, of the firm of Matheson and Co., and details the various agreements thus far brought about. With regard to the incidental question as to the fire risk on goods temporarily landed on quays, which has lately been a subject of keen commercial controversy, the report states :—"The attention of your committee has been directed to a discussion originated in the Times newspaper as to the risk of fire on the dock-quays, when cargo is landed there by the ship before its final delivery to the consignee. It seems very doubtful whether a claim for loss so caused would attach under the marine policy, the obligations of which are discharged when the goods are safely landed." It has even been doubted whether a policy 'including risk of boats' would cover the lighterage to a wharf, after the vessel had been docked, and the goods placed in the first instance on the quay. The only sufficient remedy is to introduce a special clause into policies on goods destined for London, whether issued at home or abroad, to the effect that the goods are covered if landed in transit for delivery to the consignee, or while being conveyed by boats or craft to his warehouse. This, of course, would have to be a matter of special agreement in each case."

MILITARY.—The entrance examinations for commissions without purchase in the army are ordered in future to be held three times a-year, viz., in the months of January, May, and December. These examinations will be conducted by the Civil Service Commissioners, and candidates, with the exception of graduates and students from either of the Universities and non-commissioned officers, will have to satisfy the Commissioners in certain subjects at a preliminary examination. The subjects in the competitive examination will be mathematics, English composition, Latin, Greek, French, German, experimental sciences (chemistry and heat, or electricity and magnetism), geography, geology, and drawing. No candidate will be allowed more than three trials. All (with the exception of non-commissioned officers) must pass a medical examination and be under a prescribed age, as follows:—Queen's cadets, Indian cadets, and Pages of Honour, from 17 to 20 years; students of the Universities who may have passed the interim examination, from 17 to 21 years; graduates of the Universities who may have passed the examination for the degree of B.A. or M.A., from 17 to 22 years; and lieutenants from the militia, from 19 to 22 years of age.

THE BONUS QUESTION.—A considerable length of time has elapsed since we called attention to the grievances of certain officers of the old Indian army; but we regret to say that these grievances still remain unredressed. Lieut.-Colonel Phillips, who has taken a leading part in the agitation for justice to those officers, writes apropos of the death of Colonel Sykes:—"The last wish Colonel Sykes expressed to me, when I little thought the end was so near, was, that he might be spared to see justice done to the old Indian army, and though it was not destined that he should again lead us to victory, should the hour of our triumph come hereafter, we must feel that the way to our success was paved by one who has proved himself 'faithful until death.' The delay consequent on this sad circumstance has prevented our case being brought before the House until next Session, when, although the truthful voice of our venerable leader can no longer be raised in our defence, the prestige of his honoured name will surely surround, and help to crown, his unfinished work." We know that Colonel Sykes felt strongly on this question, and no one who knew his character could suppose that he would embrace a cause of this kind unless fully satisfied that it was just. Our own opinion remains the same as when we drew attention to the circumstances on a former occasion, and we sincerely trust that whenever the subject comes before Parliament, the power that controls the Administration will determine that right shall prevail.—Civil Service Gazette.

INDIAN APPEALS.—The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council on June 25 had the appeal of Zemindar of Vizianagram v. Zemindar of Bobbili before them, when their lordships delivered judgment. The appeal was from the High Court at Madras, which reversed a decree of the Court in the first instance. The parties were proprietors of large landed estates, and the respondent had sued the appellant and had omitted to give him in the plaint his proper titles. He was "the hon." as a member of the Legislative Council and a Maharajah. Sir J. Colville (after conferring with the other members) gave judgment. Dwelling on the facts and the importance of giving in India the titles of the parties, he said their lordships would advise her Majesty that the appeal be allowed, with costs, thereby reversing the decree of the High Court, and affirming the judgment of the Billah Court.—The appeal of Salig Ram and Others v. the Secretary of State for India came before their lordships on June 26. The suit arose out of the Indian Mutiny. The appellants were bankers, and had advanced large sums to the ex-King of Delhi, and the present amount with interest was about £10,000, on mortgages of certain rent-free land, now in possession of the Crown, having been seized for the rebellion of the King of Delhi. The appellants had been concerned in the rebellion and been fined 20,000 rupees. The lower Courts found in favour of the Government, and hence the present appeal. The learned counsel proceeded to argue a point as to the right to the property on the part of the Crown until the rising of the Court. On Thursday the arguments were brought to a conclusion, and it was announced by Lord Justice James that their lordships would reserve judgment.

Imperial Parliament.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, MONDAY, June 24.—THE ROYAL (LATE INDIAN) ENGINEERS.—In reply to Sir C. WINGFIELD, Mr. CARDWELL said:—The difference between these six corps and the twelve non-purchase regiments consists in this—that the succession of contributors in these six corps was arrested in 1861, and the former contributors were entitled to the benefit of Lord Cranborne's despatch. No provision was thought necessary for them under the Act of last year. The Law Officers have since advised in effect that the continuance of the arrangement among the still remaining officers is illegal, and hence a question of some difficulty has arisen, upon which I am now in correspondence with the India-Office.

THE SUEZ CANAL.—In reply to Mr. B. COCHRANE, Lord ENFIELD said the attention of her Majesty's Government had been called to the proposal on the part of the Suez Canal Company to charge dues from the first of July according to the gross capacity of the vessels, and not, as at present, according to the net tonnage. From information received yesterday (Sunday) from Constantinople, it appeared that the Porte had demanded explanations from the Viceroy of Egypt on the subject. Government were not aware that the French Government claimed jurisdiction in all questions which might arise between those who used the Canal and the Suez Canal Company, but after what his hon. friend had stated it would be his duty to make inquiries on the subject.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, THURSDAY, June 27.—MURDERS OF ENGLISHMEN IN THE CAUCASUS.—Lord ENFIELD said, in reply to Mr. EASTWICK, that in the case of an English gentleman travelling from India to England, and not heard of since September last, an inquiry was at once instituted, and the Grand Duke himself ordered a search to be made. In addition to that, the Foreign-Office had, through Lord Loftus, sent a request that further inquiries should be made with regard to the case of the civil engineer who was robbed and murdered in the Caucasus in September. Telegraphic instructions were sent at once by the Foreign-Office to her Majesty's Charge d'Affaires at St. Petersburg to press the Russian authorities for a judicial inquiry. Proceedings were immediately instituted, and the servant of the murdered man was arrested; but, as there were no substantial proofs against him, he was discharged, and up to the present, although the Russian police had made diligent inquiries, they had been unable to find any clue to the real murderer.

HOUSE OF LORDS, THURSDAY, June 27.—THE SCIENTIFIC CORPS AND THE LINE.—The Earl of BESSBOROUGH brought down the following reply to the address voted by the House last week:—"I have received your address praying that a commission may be issued to inquire into the alleged injustice towards the captains of the late purchase corps occasioned by their supposed supersession by the first captains of the scientific corps, and further to inquire whether the intended advancement of the first captains of the Royal Artillery and Engineers to the rank of field officers would have the effect of removing the slowness of promotion in those corps, and as to the best means of remedying the same, and that in the meantime, until the report of the commission, the publication of the Royal Warrant may be delayed. I have been advised that the establishment in the Royal Artillery and Royal Engineers of the rank of Major, already existing in the other branches of the service, having been decided upon after full consideration, and provision having been made for carrying the arrangements into effect, the revocation or delay of that arrangement would be inexpedient." The Earl of LONGFORD censured the Government severely for the course which they had thought fit to pursue.—The Marquis of LANDSDOWNE, in the course of his justification of the Government, called attention to the fact that of the majority of forty-two who had voted the address, nineteen had been officers in the Guards or the Line, seven had brothers in the Guards, five had brothers in the Line, two others had relatives in the Guards or the Line, so that out of the whole only nine were unconnected with the Guards or the Line.—The Duke of RICHMOND repudiated the idea that noble lords were influenced in their vote either by the fact of their being or having relatives in the Guards or the Line, and he maintained that the fact that noble lords either had themselves been in the army or had relations there, did not in the slightest degree disenable them to express an opinion on a question of this kind. He maintained that this was only another proof of the justice which the army was likely to meet at the hands of the Government.—Earl GRANVILLE pointed out that the observation as to the composition of the majority was in answer to a remark of Lord SANDHURST's upon the strength of the influence possessed by the Scientific Corps at the War-office. The noble marquis did not impute unworthy motives; but human nature was human nature, and esprit de corps was strong in the army. And when questions arose as to the claims of one branch of the service as against another, it was almost impossible to be without bias towards one's own branch.—Lord SANDHURST contended that it was only just that a full and complete inquiry into the alleged grievances of the purchase officers should take place.—Lord ABINGER thought that the decision at which the Government had arrived was a most unfortunate one, and one which would create great discontent in the army. As all the captains in the line who would be superseded had served eighteen years in the army, the War-office was at all events bound by their own declarations and promises to give them their majorities. After a few words from Lord ELLENBOROUGH, the Earl of LONGFORD withdrew the motion.

THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS AND THE ARMY.—Lord REDESDALE moved that an humble address should be presented to her Majesty for a copy of the correspondence between Lord Redesdale, as President of Cheltenham College, and the Secretary of State for the War Department, in relation to the times appointed for the examinations for admission to the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich.—Lord LANDSDOWNE assented to the motion, at the same time remarking that when the papers were produced it would be seen that provision was made for affording to the pupils at public schools facilities to compete for commissions at the examinations referred to. The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, FRIDAY, June 28.—FIRST CAPTAINS OF ARTILLERY AND ENGINEERS.—SIR PERCY HERBERT rose to move for a select committee to inquire whether the increased promotion to the rank of regimental major of first captains of artillery and engineers at an annual cost to the country of over £20,000, and at a further addition to the Indian military expenditure not yet stated to Parliament, was justified by any commensurate advantage to the public service.—MR. B. OSBORNE said it was notorious that for years past there had been an almost total stagnation of promotion in the scientific corps, and that in the case of the artillery the private grievances of the officers had become almost a public danger. (Hear, hear.) He rejoiced at the course Government had taken in doing justice, though tardily, to that valuable body of men, and he hoped the House would support the most efficient measure that had been adopted for that purpose. (Hear, hear.)—MR. HOLMS thought that the House should not merely consider the great importance of the command of a battery, but look also to the position of the line, and give to the captains of the line a larger command than they had at present.—After a few words from MR. STACKPOOLE, MR. CARDWELL said the right hon. gentleman had taken upon himself to say that the alterations had been smuggled into the estimates, but he (MR. Cardwell) found from "Hansard" that he had stated to the House the exact sum which was on the estimates for the Artillery and Engineers. The chief ground upon which he defended the present arrangement was that of organisation. The motion was then withdrawn.

STAFF OFFICERS.—SIR H. VERNEY moved, "That it is desirable that there should be appointed a permanent Chief of the Staff of the Army, and a department formed for the special training of Staff officers, to collect all information necessary for the efficient performance of staff duties, and for certifying the competence of officers employed on the staff." The motion was withdrawn.

THE DUKE'S DESPATCH.—A "final" meeting of the Uncovenanted Civil Service Association, North-Western Provinces, was held in Allahabad on the 25th, and a petition was adopted against the recent despatch of the Duke of Argyll on the Uncovenanted Service. The belief seems to be general that the term "Natives of India" does not include Europeans settled in the country, and hence that European parents who cannot afford to send their children to England to be educated for the Civil Service will have no outlet whatever for them to Government employment. One of the speakers, Mr. Howard, barrister, said that even with a view to the future progress of the country it was an ill-advised step to deprive Europeans born in India of the simple right to make the most of their talents in the fair open field of competition.

THE RAJPOOTANA STATE RAILWAY.—A correspondent writing to the Pioneer says:—"Sir,—Perhaps a few notes upon the progress of the Rajpootana State Railway may interest your readers. The central wells for the piers of the Jumna bridge, at Agra, have been sunk with great rapidity during the last few months, and there seems to be every probability of their being securely founded before the commencement of the rains. The foundations of each pier are to consist of three wells sunk to a depth of from forty-five to sixty feet below low water. Of these the centre well in each pier has alone been constructed during the present season; and the sinking of the end wells will be carried on simultaneously, as soon as the state of the river permits of the works being resumed after the close of the rains. The delivery of the permanent way materials, on the narrow gauge pattern, has also been pushed on with vigour; and the rails, which are "foot rails," weighing about 28 lbs. to the yard, seem likely to answer expectations. The same remark will unfortunately not apply to the sleepers, which may be described as about the worst that were ever supplied by the Forest Department to any Indian railway. Sir Richard Temple, in his late budget, spoke of the Forest Department as being extensively engaged in supplying sleepers for the State railways. To judge by the samples that are now on view at the Agra terminus of the East Indian Railway, the sooner the Forest Department can be induced to abandon this line of business, the better for the tax-payer. The material of which the sleepers consist is said to be deodar, a species of timber that is well suited to works in the hills, but which is apparently of no use in the plains. True it is that some great experts declare that the sleepers in question are not deodar, or rather that in nine cases out of ten they are simply cheer—than which a more worthless timber for railway sleepers does not exist in India. Be that as it may, one fact is beyond question, viz, that the sleepers are splitting up in all directions, and that but few of them seem likely to last long enough to be of service in the road. I may here remark that sleepers of a very similar character were tried on the East India Railway about ten years ago, and that the result proved them all but worthless. I am also informed that the contractors for the Punjab and Delhi Railway found them to be equally useless. The policy of denuding the hills of timber, for the sake of enabling locomotive engines to run on the plains, seems a doubtful one. Already the dearth of timber is beginning to be felt at some of our hill stations, and another twenty years will probably see that dearth intensified. It will then be found that the deodar forests, which have been idly sacrificed in the production of railway sleepers, should have been preserved for very different purposes—viz., for the housing of our European troops in the hills."

SUPPORTING AND RECOMMENDING THIS SYSTEM.

March, 1871.

I have much pleasure in bearing my unqualified testimony to the admirable system of military exercises as given in Sergeant-major B. Browne's book. I can speak confidently of it, having had personal experience of its value. I am in the habit of recommending it to all those under my care, who require this additional mode of treatment for developing their frame.

C. M. MILLER, M.D.,
Assistant-surgeon, London Rifle Brigade.

Mr. Browne.—Nothing can be more true, in my opinion, than all you say in favour of training all our boys to military exercises. Its usefulness cannot be overrated, either to the boys themselves or to the nation, which would thus find, in a short time, and without any inconvenience or effort, the best part of its educated population prepared to take part in the defence of the country, almost without training, and should their services in this way happily never be required, the country would still have the satisfaction of seeing its young male population immensely benefited in health, strength, appearance, and general manliness. If carried out at all schools, it would become the favourite pastime of the boys.

H. EYRE, Lieutenant-general.

Birkbeck Schools, Kingsland, N., March 7, 1871.

For some years past all the boys and girls of these schools have been put through a course of systematic drill, such as that laid down in Sergeant-major Browne's book. The results have been in the highest degree satisfactory. Not only is the physical condition of the children greatly improved, but the discipline of the drill-ground produces habits of obedience and attention, which, carried into the school-room, conduce greatly to the mental progress of the children, as well as materially aid in maintaining order. Until the time shall come when the Government shall wisely insist upon every child being efficiently drilled, schoolmasters who have not yet tried the experiment will do well to do so without delay.

Of course it is of the utmost importance that the drill-instructor should not be a mere martinet. He must be able to convey his instructions clearly and pleasantly;
have an unlimited supply of patience, and show that he really takes an interest in his work.

It has been our good fortune for some years to have secured the services of Sergeant-major Browne, the author of this little book ("Setting-up Drill," &c.), who is not only assiduous in performing his duties, but who is fond of his work, and shows it, and, therefore, succeeds admirably.

JAMES RUNTZ, Head Master.

Kingsland Middle Class Schools, Sandringham-
road, March 7, 1871.

Physical exercise is undoubtedly one of the requisites
of youth, and if such exercise be conducted with a purpose, it is not only productive of health to the body, but also induces habits of order and energy. In our schools
the system of drill instruction has been adopted with the best results, and I am quite convinced that any school would be the better for its introduction. Of course a great deal depends upon the drill-instructor; but if such an one as ours (Sergeant-major Browne, who is thoroughly fond of the work, and at the same time a strict disciplinarian and a perfect gentleman), be obtained,
the result will be all that can be desired.

ROBERT LANE, Head Master.

Southgate-road Middle Class School, De Beauvoir-
town, N., March 6, 1871.

It is fortunate in the present day there is but little need for insisting upon this physical training of youth, as its importance is so generally recognised. To insure success, however, it is indispensable that it should be conducted by well-qualified instructors, such as are apt to teach, of gentlemanly manners and good dis-ciplinarians. From my observations of Sergeant-major Browne, I am able to testify to his possession of these qualifications, and have very great pleasure in recommending his system of drill to those who may be desirous of introducing physical exercises into their schools.

THOMAS WILSON, F.R.G.S., Head Master.

Finishing Establishment for Young Ladies,
Benyon-house, 32, Culford-road, De Beauvoir-town, N.,
March 6, 1871.

Mrs. Aldam has great pleasure in bearing testimony to the efficiency of Sergeant-major Browne's method of drilling, and as possessing not only great patience, but also consideration for the strength of the pupils, that no undue fatigue is occasioned, no too sudden a strain upon the muscles of growing children, eager, perhaps, to outdo their schoolfellows, a point too frequently over-

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS.

COUNSEL and HELP.—When diarrhoea, dysentery, or cholera prevail in any district, it behoves every one to be watchful, and to have at hand the means of checking those symptoms of general uneasiness, nausea, and vertigo, which foretell the threatening malady. This well-known Ointment, rubbed diligently and repeatedly upon the pit of the stomach and over the abdomen, exercises the most powerful and salutary effects in arresting these morbid indications of the coming evil, and, aided by appropriate doses of these Pills, will secure safety. During the summer and fruit seasons the state of the bowels demands assiduous attention; the slightest departure from the ordinary habit should be restrained and set right by Holloway's remedies.

MICROSCOPICAL investigation has proved that the decaying substances which accumulate between the teeth contain animal and vegetable parasites, and that the tooth powders, pastes, and washes in general use have no effect upon these.

Messrs. GABRIEL'S Coralite Tooth Paste, Royal Dentifrice and Odontalgique Elixir (obtainable of every respectable Chemist and Perfumer) completely destroy and remove these animalcules, and also preserve and beautify the Teeth.

WHITE'S MOC-MAIN LEVER

TRUSS, Perfected and Exhibited in the Great Exhibition of 1851, is allowed by upwards of 500 Medical Gentlemen to be the most effective invention in the curative treatment of Hernia. The use of a steel spring, so often hurtful in its effects, is here avoided; a soft bandage being worn round the body, while the requisite resisting power is supplied by the MOC-MAIN PAD and PATENT LEVER, fitting with so much ease and closeness that it cannot be detected, and may be worn during sleep. A descriptive circular may be had, and the Truss (which cannot fail to fit) forwarded by post on the circumference of the body two inches below the hips being sent to the Manufacturer,

IS THE ORIGINAL AND ONLY GENUINE.

CAUTION.—Vice-Chancellor Sir W. P. Wood stated that Dr. COLLIS BROWNE was undoubtedly the Inventor of CHLORODYNE: that the story of the Defendant, Freeman, being the Inventor was deliberately untrue, which he regretted had been sworn to. Eminent Hospital Physicians of London stated that Dr. J. Collis Browne was the discoverer of Chlorodyne; that they prescribe it largely, and mean no other than Dr. Browne's.—See Times, July 12, 1864.

The Public, therefore, are cautioned against using any other than

This INVALUABLE REMEDY produces quiet, refreshing sleep, relieves pain, calms the system, restores the deranged functions, and stimulates healthy action of the secretions of the body, without creating any of those unpleasant results attending the use of opium. Old and young may take it at all hours and times when requisite. Thousands of persons testify to its marvellous good effects and wonderful cures, while medical men extol its virtues most extensively, using it in great quantities in the following diseases:—

Diseases in which it is found eminently useful—Cholera, Dysentery, Diarrhoea, Colics, Coughs, Asthma, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Whooping Cough, Cramp, Hysteria, &c.

*Extracts from Medical Opinions.*The Right Hon. Earl Russell communicated to the College of Physicians and J. T. Davenport that he had received information to the effect that the only remedy of any service in Cholera was Chlorodyne.—See Lancet, Dec. 31, 1864.

From A. Montgomery, Esq., late Inspector of Hospitals, Bombay.—"Chlorodyne is a most valuable remedy in Neuralgia, Asthma, and Dysentery. To it I fairly owe my restoration to health, after eighteen months' severe suffering, and when other remedies had failed."

Dr. Lowe, Medical Missionary in India, reports (Dec. 1865) that in nearly every case of Cholera in which Dr. J. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne was administered the patient recovered.

Extract from Medical Times, Jan. 12, 1866.—"Chlorodyne is prescribed by scores of orthodox medical practitioners. Of course it would not thus be singularly popular did it not supply a want and fill a place."

Extract from the General Board of Health, London, as to its efficacy in Cholera.—"So strongly are we convinced of the immense value of this remedy, that we cannot too forcibly urge the necessity of adopting it in all cases."

Beware of spurious and dangerous compounds sold as CHLORODYNE, from which frequent fatal results have followed.

See leading article, Pharmaceutical Journal, Aug. 1, 1869, which states that Dr. J. Collis Browne was the Inventor of Chlorodyne; that it is always right to use his preparation when Chlorodyne is ordered.CAUTION.—None genuine without the words "Dr. J. Collis Browne" on the Government stamp. Overwhelming medical testimony accompanies each bottle.
